EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I am glad you heartily concur in my desire (expressed in telegram last week) to call for an offering of $5,000 in behalf of Ministerial Relief. In what more beautiful and suitable manner can we crown our jubilee than by a loving testimonial of gratitude and remembrance towards those by whose self-denying service we have been redeemed from obscurity and feebleness. Let us greet these worthy, worn-out servants of Christ with a substantial testimony of brotherly love. It may be too late to reach many churches, but it is hoped that thousands who read these lines, and who are going to the Jubilee Convention, will find pleasure in bearing with them an offering to this holy cause. They will find an opportunity for presenting their gifts. Let this offering be a golden memento of our appreciation of the dauntless faith and splendid heroism of those through whose labors we of this generation have come to a day of glory and power. If we draw back from such a service we will be judged unworthy of our inheritance, unworthy of God's grace. "Bring an offering and come into his courts with praise." Send gifts to my address. A. M. ATKINSON.

A Quarter of a Million in 1900.

This is the goal set before the Board of Church Extension to be reached next year. To make this practicable the plan is to raise the sum-total to $210,000 this year. Of this amount $207,000 is already in hand, leaving $3,000 to be made up yet and to go into a supplemental report. It is earnestly requested that churches and individuals having hitherto neglected to make their offering to this work do so at once, in order that this additional $3,000 may be raised before the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, on the 13th-20th inst. The growth of this splendid fund during the past year has been most gratifying, and there is no part of our Home Mission work that appeals quite so strongly to the business sense of business men. Let us give it a final boost before the jubilee.

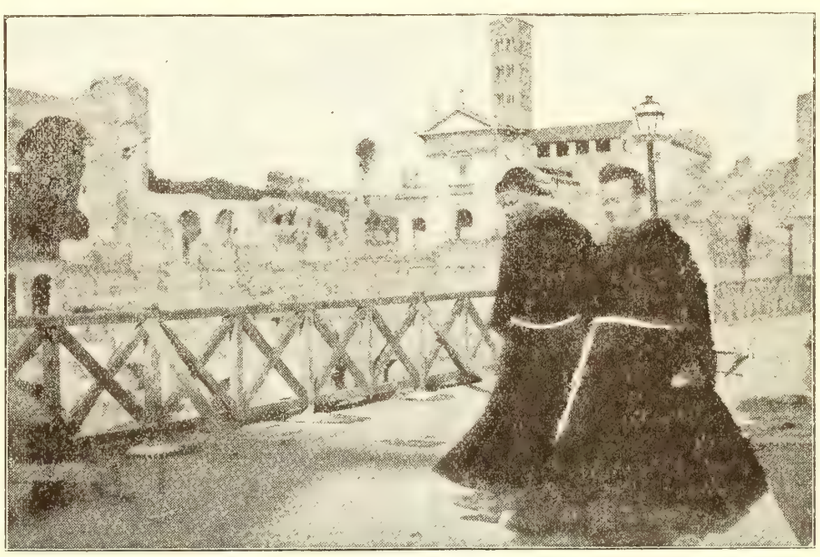
Wheeling Through Europe—IX.

FROM NAPLES TO ROME.

If one has not already learned it, Naples is pre-eminently the place to learn the gentle art of "dickering." Nothing has a fixed price except postage stamps. When you go into a restuarant it is considered entirely good form to ask the price of a beefsteak, demand to see it before it is cooked and then offer half the sum that was first demanded for it. By so doing you will save probably a third of the price. In dealing with the venders of small wares on the street, one has to harden his heart or be robbed. When a quantity of peaches is quoted to you at eight cents, with the assurance that a lower price means bankruptcy, you give a shrug of indifference and turn to the figs and presently offer three cents for the peaches. Brace yourself for a storm of protestation. "What! Three solde? Absurd. It is madness and folly. But the signor is not in earnest. Surely he would not wish to involve a poor fruitseller in utter ruin." But the protest always ends in a suggestion of compromise. "Six solde" You reiterate your offer of three, and so the battle wages. A small crowd of loiterers collects. They are all connoiseurs in the art of dickering, who love it for its own sake, and having nothing of their own to sell and nothing wherewith to buy, gratify their passion by participating in other people's transactions. Generally they side against the stranger and swell the chorus of protest against his penuriousness. After this process has gone on long enough, you offer perhaps four solde and it is accepted with a gesture of despair. The procedure is very much the same if you go into a large and hand some store to buy a pair of shoes. I have even had newsboys try to dicker with me on the price of a morning paper. It is my conviction that the Italians pursue this method, not in the hope of increasing their gains, but because they enjoy the dramatic element of it. The simplest transaction gives occasion for the representation of the widest range of feigned emotions, and an Italian likes that. It takes time, of course, but there is always plenty of time in Italy.



The ride from Naples to Rome leads through the heart of Southern Italy. The roads which we traveled were in part the old Roman roads, and some of them seemed to have received no repairs since they were furrowed by the wheels of Cæsar's heavy artillery. But, in general, they were surprisingly good. The best thing about them is that they lead through a series of towns where one sees the original Italian, unpolished and unspoiled by contact with foreigners. On the lower slopes of the Apennines, the most striking circumstance is the intensely Syrian appearance of everything. The sky deep blue, but indefinably hazy, the orchards of olives and figs, the square, flat-roofed stone houses, the flowing garments of women and men, the earthen water jars, carried on the heads of the women—all these fit into one's conception of Syria rather than of Italy. Again, there are towns which, with their mediæval architecture and fortifications, still represent the days of feudalism. The typical town of Southern Italy is built on a hilltop. I do not mean that it is on gently rising ground, but that it is perched on the summit of a sharp-pointed, conical hill, which may be four hundred feet above the surrounding valleys. The Apennines furnish a large supply of such natural strongholds, and most of them were occupied and fortified in the days when men could not fight uphill to advantage. There the town stands with its walls and gates, not a house outside of the walls and not a vacant foot of building ground inside. The main street, which never has a sidewalk, will average fifteen feet in width, and if there are side streets they will be mere crooked passages, twisting their way among and under the stone houses. There will always be a small open square, in or around which are the church, the market and the village pump, and this is the center from which radiates the life of the community. On market days the square presents a picturesque spectacle. The village and country people are all there and in costume, and all the wares and products of the region are for purchase, sale or exchange. Nobody ever seems to be doing anything except visiting, but I suppose the business somehow gets itself done in their garrulous Italian way. A purchaser who shows ready money and plenty of it—say five or six cents—creates a sensation and can buy anything in sight. There was one town so delightfully unsophisticated in the matter of prices that we bought plums at the rate of six dozen for a cent, ripe figs for two cents a dozen, melons for one cent a piece and other things at similar rates. The name of this exquisitely unspoiled village I shall not divulge, for fear the sudden influx of visitors would sweep away its charm and raise the price of fruit.

MARKET DAY IN SOUTHERN ITALY.

The peculiarity of the Apennines is that while there are many sharp, isolated hills, usually capped by towns as aforesaid, there are few continuous ridges or valleys of any extent. The road, of course, passes through the towns. Consequently, a large part of the ride from Naples to Rome and from Rome to Florence is a succession of back-breaking climbs and nerve-shattering coasts. It is not easy, but it is beautiful. The roads to and from Rome are not only hard to ride, but they are also hard to find. Italy knows nothing of signposts, and as we had no detailed map of the district, I suppose we were more or less lost about a third of the time. It is truer than most proverbs that "all roads lead to Rome," for the ones we took led us to roam over a large part of Central Italy before we found the Eternal City. As we left the hills and entered the barren, rolling plain of the Campagna, a significant speck appeared upon the horizon. It was the dome of St. Peter's, fifteen miles away. Coming closer, other domes appeared, for Rome is a city of domes, but the near view of the city is soon shut off by the high stone walls which bound the road. A sudden turn brings us before a vast wall and a huge gate, and passing these we are in Rome.

Think what it is to be for the first time in Rome—the Rome of classic myth and ancient history; the Rome which conquered the world under the republic, waxed fat under the empire and fell before the barbarians; the Rome where Paul preached and Christian martyrs suffered; where popes, good and bad, strong and weak, have made and marred the fortunes of the church; where Horace sang of the blessings of good wine and fair friends and the praises of his generous Mycaenas; where Michaelangelo painted and carved, and where Luther's soul was shocked into a vision of the truth. My first impulse was to go out at once and see where it all happened. My second was to sit quietly in my room for awhile and try to realize a part of it. Perhaps the second impulse was the wiser, for the busy streets of Rome do not help one to realize that he is in the greatest city of antiquity. After Milan, Rome is altogether the most modern city in Italy. One could live there for six months without seeing a sign of a ruin unless his business happened to call him into the neighborhood of the Capitoline or Palatine Hill. And yet the ruins are there, vast and impressive. I was almost afraid to approach the Forum for fear it would appear dilapidated and disgraced, but the scattered remains of its temples and basilicas, with only a column or an arch standing here and there, exhibit more native dignity than a modern seventeen-story office building ever had. Like the Venus de Milo, perfect in spite of its mutilation, in which the lack of arms seems merely a characteristic and not a defect, the Roman Forum is more impressive in its ruin than it could be in any possible restoration. I care not to imagine how the arms of the Venus were originally or how the Forum looked when it was new. Both are right as they are.

The sights of Rome may be divided into three classes: archæologcal, artistic and religious. The classes overlap somewhat, for one must visit the churches to see some of the best pictures and statues, and the Vatican is not only the residence of the Pope, but one of the richest art galleries in the world. But this fact is quite in keeping with the larger part that art and religion always have overlapped in Italy, religion furnishing the subject-matter for art and art furnishing the parapnernalia of religion. And there never was a place where religion seemed to be more completely swallowed up in paraphernalia than in Rome. I attended high mass one Sunday morning at St. Peter's. The ceremonies were more than ornate and sumptuous; they were positively guady, and the whole effect was decidely barbaric. The Cathedral of St. Peter is itself open to the same criticism. It is a vast and beautiful church, of course, gorgeous with inlaid and variegated marbles, but it is marred by the lack of one essential quality of a church: it is not modest. It is proud, self-assertive and presumptuous. Cologne Cathedral, with all its grandeur, is as unassuming as a country meeting house, but it was not given to the architects of St. Peter's, not even to the master mind of Michaelangelo, to make the greatest cathedral in the world humble and religious as well as vast and magnificent.

The representatives of the church in Rome to-day delight to be heard and seen of men; but the Catacombs are evidence that it was not ever thus. There are, roughly, one hundred and fifty miles of these subterranean passages in the vicinity of Rome, but the sightseer who goes catacombing generally chooses the Catacomb of St. Calixtus and sees about a quarter of a mile of it. The Trappist monk, who acts as guide, hands each member of the party a lighted taper and warns them all to keep close together because people who get lost in the maze of passages are seldom seen again! Then he hurries them through a short section, points out a few tombs and chapels and brings them to the surface again. Since our farthest distance from the entrance shaft could not have been more than a hundred yards, I suspect that the peril was somewhat overestimated. As it was, I brought away the impression that the Catacombs would be immensely interesting if the monk would either do the work of a guide faithfully or keep out of the way. The conversation between a very reverential young priest, who looked upon every bone as a possible relic of a saint, and a faithful but frivolous friend of his (both Americans) who wanted to steal some bones as souvenirs, furnished some diversion in an otherwise somber situation.

The threefold classsification of the sights of Rome must be increased by a fourth. The Roman cabman is a class by himself, and he is a sound as well as a sight. Every one who wears knickerbockers in Italy is at once taken for an Englishman. It is the cabman's place to know this, and he salutes the wheelman accordingly: "You want a cab?" That is all the English he knows, but he has said that so often that he says it fluently and well. If you refuse him, he ignores the refusal and repeats his solicitation. If you ignore him, he drives across your path at a crossing and stops in your way. If you meet this maneuver by stepping into his cab and out on the other side, as we did once by way of experiment, he gets mad and tries to run over you. His motto is, Your money or your life! Fortunately, it does not take much money to satisfy him, for eighty centimes (sixteen cents) is the fixed fare for two persons for any single drive within the city. Of course he always tries to get more, but only the very feeble allow themselves to be victimized, and he bears no permanent grudge against one who resists his extortion. We had been driven to a church one day, and the cabman put in a claim for extra fare for crossing the river or climbing a hill or something. We simply gave him the legal fare and went on into the church, leaving him wrathful and the whole piazza ringing with his denunciation of us. When we emerged, half an hour later, he was still there and called out, with a cheerful crack of his whip, "You want cab? Eighty centimes!"

New York Letter.

The thirty-eighth annual convention of the New York Christian Missionary Society and Ministerial Association was held with the church at Tully, N. Y., Sept. 19-22, and though not as large as some in previous years, was, nevertheless, in report of work done, missionary enthusiasm and planning for the future, a great convention for our state. Bro. E. Richard Edwards, of Syracuse, prepared the Ministerial Association program and presided over its deliberations, and E. J. Butler, of Throopsville, acted as scribe. S. T. Willis, of New York, led a general discussion on "The Pastor's Relation to Municipal Reform," and Joseph Tisdall, of Tully, gave a practical talk on "The Best Means of Making Music Effective in Church Service" Dr. W. A. Belding and A. B. Chamberlain led in the discussion of "Inducements for Young Men of To-day to Enter the Ministery," "Organizing the Church for Work," and "Effective Ways of Evangelizing New York State" were the general topics of the afternoon, and in the evening Bro. R. R. Bulgin, of Scranton, Pa., preached.

The reports of the missionary forces of the state were perhaps the best ever presented to one of our conventions, all things considered. The society did excellent work in helping sustain E. S. Muckley at Watertown, C. C. Crawford, Elmira (First Church); C. L. Morrison, Elmira (West Side); M. Gunn, at Gloversville, and S. J. Corey, at Rochester (Second Church). The state evangelist, Bro. J. M. Morris, also presented an inspiring report of work done during the year. The most depressing features of the reports presented were the inadequate sum of the offerings made to the state work, and the apparent lack of interest upon the part of our Bible-schools. The financial showing of the state work and the indifference of many Sunday-school workers are a shame and a disgrace to an enlightened and aggressive people. Our president, F. W. Norton, in a strong statistical address, showed how New York State, while liberal to our general missionary enterprises, is sinfully negligent in evangelizing our own commonwealth. He presented a comparative tabular statement which puts New York far behind many other states in local work. Such, however, was the enthusiastic determination of the delegates that they then and there pledged themselves to bend all their energies in an effort to raise $2,500 for state missions next year, as against $1,370 last year.

And upon the strength of these resolutions the convention planned to enlarge the work of the coming year by giving assistance to the Lansingburg mission and the Second Church, Brooklyn (Greenpoint), in addition to the points now being assisted. In all, six places will be helped in the coming year, with a total of $2,000, besides keeping a state evangelist in the field. Now, the brethren of the Empire State should, and we believe they will, come up to the full measure of their privilege in this glorious work. Two new churches were organized since the last convention—Kensington (Brooklyn), and Lansingburg (at Troy). The convention voted to ask the American Christian Missionary Society to take up the enterprise of establishing a new mission point in the city of Albany, under the direction of the state board. It is the earnest desire of all the men in our state that the capital city should have in it a church of the Disciples of Christ.

I was sorry that the pressure of duties at home called me away from Tully before the convention closed, causing me to miss several of its most delightful features, among which was the C. W. B. M., and Christian Endeavor sessions. I cannot, therefore, report them. Two addresses anxiously awaited, one by Bro. G. L. Wharton, and the other a farewell, by L. C. McPherson, were no doubt heart-stirring and helpful.

Many changes are taking place in the ministry of the state. Bro. McPherson will soon go to Cuba and a Bro. Lichtenberger, of Illinois, will soon take his place at Jefferson Street, Buffalo; Bro. B. Q. Denham comes to West 56th Street, New York, and Bro. C. M. Kriedler, of Troy, follows him at North Tonawanda. No one as yet has been selected for the Troy field. A. M. Hootman is the new man in the pulpit at Tonawanda, and C. L. Morrison has been with the West Side Church (Elmira) but a few months. Bro. A. B. Chamberlain, many years ago state evangelist, has returned and preaches at South Butler, and Charles Bloom is comparatively new at Cato. John Keevil came to the Second Church, Brooklyn, in June last, and E. M. Harlan has just accepted a call to the Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn. Perhaps there are other new men in the ministry of the state whom I do not now recall. But among the veterans Dr. W. A. Belding holds the supremacy. Just having completed his 84th year of life, he is as young in spirit, sweet in temper and buoyant in hope as a boy. He is a living example of the graces and power of the Christian religion. I have just read his delightful biography written by his grandson and published by himself (price seventy-five cents), and though I loved and honored the Doctor before, I can appreciate the greatness of his work and worth of character much more now. The young people, young preachers especially, should read this delightful and inspiring life story; it will do them good.

The changes in the location of preachers in the state necessitated some changes in the state executive board. Bro. Hootman was elected to fill the place of Bro. Denham and Bro. Kriedler will fill the place made vacant by Bro. McPherson. It is confidently believed that we are entering upon the best year of our missionary work in this state. We earnestly pray that it may be so. Bro. Tisdall and the Tully Church entertained us royally. We shall be glad to be their guests again.

S. T. WILLIS.

AT LAST!

Some of my readers must have read Charles Kingsley's beautiful book, "At Last!" in which he gives his impressions of the wonderful scenes which passed under his view in the West Indian Islands. All his life he had hungered to visit those islands, and he was able to gratify his longing "at last!" All through the years of my life I have looked forward to a Westward pilgrimage. As I embarked at Southampton for New York my emotions were summed up in two words, "At last!" And when I landed at New York it was again that I felt inclined to say, "At last!" For many a year it has been my habit to journey Eastward, traversing various European lands and learning to know many continental nations. And now I find myself resting at Brooklyn after crossing the Atlantic, before taking a flight to the spot where thousands of my companions in faith will assemble for the Jubilee Convention.

CROSSING THE ATLANTIC.

Many who read these lines have crossed the Atlantic. Many others may have had no such experience. Some may have passed over "the herring pond" so often that to them even an allusion to such a voyage may seem surperfluous. But I am one of those people to whom everywhere everything in God's universe seems wonderful, and on whom the sense of the wonderful grows more intense with familiarity. The Atlantic seemed to me to be more marvellous every day in succession. Some people I know, whom the Almighty can never astonish. Whether Geyenna would squeeze any amazement out of their souls I do not know, but I do not believe that heaven would raise a note of exclamation on their tongues. Jesus Christ is to such souls the incarnation of the commonplace, and a whole Niagara of miracles poured out before their eyes would be but a series of little juggling tricks. Concerning my voyage on the St. Paul there is not much in the way of incident to record. Tom Hood registered his impressions of a voyage by saying, "Sometimes we see a ship, and sometimes we ship a sea." On this occasion we did not see many ships, and we never shipped a single sea. We saw the usual sporting of the porpoises, and we even managed to spy whales spouting. Of course, these episodes created great excitement. They interfered with the serene monotony of the course. What an ocean! How sublime the majestic solitude of that symbol of eternity and infinity! But fear played its part in the excitement as we neared the American side. Off Sable Island and along the Newfoundland Banks the St. Paul was for many hours wrapped in a thick sea mist. Then began the sounding of the great syren fog horn. After a time it was answered by some other great steamer very near at hand, but quite invisible in the dense fog. Soon great alarm arose among the passengers. It became evident that the captains of the two vessels were manœuvring to locate each other, and that they were in difficulty in the attempt. Our great steamer was stopped more than once. She steamed forward very slowly. Then she was rapidly backed. The region we were in was the very quarter where the "Bourgogne" was last year sunk in collision with an unknown ship. This added to the fear of many of the passengers. But soon all was well. The ships cleared each other. After a time the fog lifted. But some of the lessons of the incident will never be forgotten. The fear of the unseen is one of the most powerful agents that can affect the human mind. An invisible enemy is difficult to understand, to avoid, to fight or to escape. Men understand all this in regard to the material perils which environ them, and they are willing to take excessive precautions in relation to these. But why are men then so recklessly careless with reference to the deadly invisible spiritual foes which environ them in the perpetual fog of uncertain and unrevealed destiny? The majoritw want to traverse the sea of fate without any chart, or compass, or captain, or pilot. Managing their own little craft, they mismanage their destiny and perish in the darkness of the deep on which they drift!

FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF NEW YORK.

I am constantly being reminded, during these first few days in New York and Brooklyn, that the American people are a profoundly sympathetic race. For this reason they reach my heart by a quick, short cut. I have traveled amongst some races where nobody seems to care a straw what the English or any other people thought of them and their country. To the average German, Italian or Frenchman it never seems to matter in the slightest degree what foreigners in any land think of them or their country. The French to me always seem to have made up their minds that the inhabitants of other lands are too far back near barbarism to be expected to appreciate "La Belle France." The German of to-day is a nobler character, but he is taken up with the notion that now Germany is one, and that she will easily outstrip all possible competitors. He therefore takes little interest in anything that is not German, though he is ready to go to any on earth outside of Fatherland to cut out the foreigner. The Russian is the great European exception. When traveling about in the dominions of the Tsar I was struck with the intense sensitiveness of the educated classes to the opinions of foreigners, especially of the Anglo-Saxon races. A Russian lady or gentleman will with delight spend hour after hour in trying to instruct and please those who visit their land, even though they may be strangers without any introduction. This is the more to their credit, because every genuine Russian is fully possessed with the dangerous conviction that God specially favors "Holy Russia," and will give his nation paramount ascendancy on earth. When once the Great Siberian Railway is completed, then other nations will find that they will have to reckon with Russia and her 130,000,000 of people more seriously than has yet been dreamed of. Well, my point is, I already find that genuine Americans show to an English visitor a generous sympathy, blended with a reciprocal sensitiveness as to sentiment, even in excess of that which abounds in Russia. There is something indescribably charming in this attitude of mind and its graceful manifestation. I am here as a sort of ignoramus, feeling that I am in a new and wonderful world, and that I have everything to learn from anybody who will teach me. And on all sides I find this desire responded to in the most generous manner. To me New York seems very well described in a sentence I read in an English newspaper just before taking this journey. It is "a smokeless Liverpool under a Neapolitan sky." This wonderfully fascinating city reminds me at one instant of Berlin, with its great public buildings placed in foliaged squares. At another moment I think of Vienna, with its peculiar mixture of bright vivacity and business gravity. Then at certain spots I think I am in Paris, amongst mansions occupied in flats. But I again fancy I have lost my way amongst the mighty shipping of the docks of London. I do not know any city which gathers into itself in such cosmopolitan amalgam the characteristics of all other important cities. And yet it is equally unlike them all. The equations are all differentiated. Contrary to the process of mathematical calculus, there is in this strange city "a constant quantity" which does not "disappear in the differentiation." In another letter it will give me pleasure to point out wherein American and British characteristics differ.

F. W. TROY.

As I am for the time being located with relatives in Brooklyn, I have had opportunity of calling on Bro. F. W. Troy, who for sometime ministered here. I had heard that he was ill, and I was beyond measure grieved to find him prostrated with a dangerous attack of typhoid. It is sad indeed to find a dear old comrade and colleague lying in peril of his life. F. W. Troy did very valuable work in England, as I can personally testify. He founded the Church of Christ at Gloucester, where so great a work is being carried on by his successor, E. H. Spring. A man who can start a new work in the style of Bro. Troy should always be devoted to such work as that. He should not be wasted in the work of the regular pastorate, which is the proper sphere for men of another type. Bro. Troy has been stricken with this cruel malady soon after commencing a new cause at Flatbush, outside Brooklyn. On a beautiful estate, Vanderveer Park, he is gathering about him a congregation. For preacher and people this interruption is a severe trial. But the Lord ever for his people brings good out of evil. After closing this letter I go to call in New York on Bro. Willis. In Brooklyn I am making acquaintance with some delightful Christian people, through the kindless of the Sterling Place Church of Christ, for whom I am preaching two Sundays. A good pastor is coming to this church after the convention, in the person of Bro. Harlan, of Topeka, Kan., whom I hope to get to know before returning to England.

After Marriage

They are going to be together just as much as before; going to ride the wheel, take little pleasure jaunts, etc., enjoying everything together. Isn't that what many a young couple promise each other? And yet, how very soon the wife begins to say "No, I don't think I care to go. You go alone, dear." Young women don't reckon on the great physical changes which follow marriage. How can they when they are allowed to grow up in entire ignorance of vital physiological facts? They feel languid, weak and nervous. Sometimes there is headache and backache. The pulse no more leaps in answer to the thought of a spin on the wheel. Women who have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, know how promptly the languor, headache, backache, nervousness and weakness are cured by this medicine. Many husbands write in gratitude to Dr. Pierce for the medicine which gives them back the wife's companionship, as it gives her back her health.

"All praise is due to you for your wonderful 'Favorite Prescription,'" writes Mr. John W. Coffman, of Ellisburg, Casey Co., Ky. "My wife suffered with female irregularity; was confined to bed every three weeks. After using two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription she was cured, and has not suffered any derangement since. Your 'Favorite Prescription' is a boon to delicate women."

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

"The Genuineness of the Book of Daniel."

Any evidence of the genuineness of the Book of Daniel that may have appeared in my former article was merely incidental, my main purpose having been to suggest the impropriety of burdening our Sunday school literature with immature critical theories that are liable to mislead immature minds. It is my purpose in this paper to examine with some care the arguments which Prof. Willett puts forth against the genuineness of the book in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Aug. 31.

Bro. Willett would have served the critical theory a good turn and added material strength to his position if he had mentioned a few well-authenticated archæological and historical facts which have been brought to light since the dates of the Schaff-Herzog Cyclopedia and the Pulpit Commentary that should reverse the opinion expressed in those works. Glittering generalities, however boldly put forth, scarcely meet the demands of the case. But attention must be given to the numbered items in Bro. Willett's article, which are alleged to "indicate a date subsequent to the Babylonian period."

1. This fact cuts no figure in the case, unless it be assumed that the Jews meant to throw doubt upon the genuineness of a book by placing it in the Hagiographa. Such a claim will scarcely be made, and this objection is without force

2. This criticism is characterized by two defects, either of which invalidates it: (a) No proof is given in support of the assertion that the book reveals limitations of the author's knowledge of things that, by hypothesis, he should have known if he wrote in Babylonia about 600 B. C. And even if Daniel wrote the book, and gives evidence that he did not have full knowledge of the geography and history of the country, it is no more than might be expected in a captive Hebrew from Palestine. If defective knowledge is sufficient ground for the impeachment of the genuineness of a document, there is perhaps not a history extant whose genuineness may not be impeached. (b) The objection fails to make it appear that it was necessary for Daniel to tell all he knew if he wrote the book. The document is very brief, and it is not in evidence that its purpose required any fuller historical information than it contains.

3. If I may be permitted, I would suggest that the present status of the matter hardly justifies the strong assertion that "the language of the book presents an unanswerable argument against the Babylonian hypothesis." The critics have by no means shown themselves to be infallible at this point. They formerly contended that the Aramaic of Ezra was more ancient than that of Daniel, but they have been utterly routed and driven from this position; and in view of this collapse they might well afford to be modest in urging their argument from the alleged recency of the language of Daniel. Especially should they be held in check at this point by the strong declaration of Dean Farrar, one of their own number, who says: "On this part of the subject there has been a great deal of rash, incompetent assertion." It is my firm belief that the argument from language is fully answered and utterly demolished in the introduction to the Book of Daniel in the Pulpit Commentary. It is very dangerous and fallacious to undertake to determine the date of an ancient document written in a dead language, only fragments of whose literature have come down to our day, from the presence of a few words that from known premises may seem to be recent. If there were no breaks in this ancient literature the seeming might be very different. It is well known that Spencer's "Faery Queen" and Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream" were written about the same time; and yet the language of the former is much more archaic than that of the latter; and if we had to judge from this fact alone, we would say that considerable time must have intervened between them.

4. How the apocalyptic elements in Daniel militate against its genuineness is not apparent. What was to hinder Daniel from writing in apocalyptic style?

5. The author's point of view could be the period of the Maccabean persecution and yet Daniel be the author, provided it be granted that he was inspired and had prophetic power. If he was possessed of these gifts he could write of the future as well as of the past. And here we encounter the original foundation of the opposition to the genuineness of the book. If Daniel wrote it, then he was an inspired prophet of God and could read the future. This consideration led Porphyry to make his attack upon the genuineness of the book.

But to construct a theory of interpretation as regards apocalyptic symbols, and make such theory the standard of determination as regards the date and authorship of an apocalyptic book, is a very bold not to say vicious method of procedure. Dogmatically interpreting rams and goats and "little horns," and then fixing dates of books to suit the interpretation, is liable to expose the interpreter to the danger of coming out at the little end of the horn! If the author of Daniel meant to designate Antiochus by the characteristics which he ascribes to Nebuchadnezzar, he was the prince of bunglers. The character attributed to the Babylonian king is altogether different from the character of Antiochus, and the deeds of the former are not the deeds of the latter.

I am aware that many critics have decided that Daniel did not write the book that bears his name; and I am also aware that in the main these same critics once decided that Moses could not have written the Pentateuch, on the alleged ground that the age of Moses was not a literature-making age. But the logic of events has shown that the critics were wrong about that, and if they were in error in that matter they may be in error as to the date and authorship of Daniel. Indeed, they have been shown to have been wrong in so many of their conclusions that one is justifiable in being a little chary about accepting their decisions at all times. It is to be presumed that they followed the same methods when they were led to positions that have been shown to be untenable that they followed when they reached the conclusion that Daniel is not genuine; and hence this conclusion may be taken with several grains of salt. It is well known that the critics go in gangs, generally following some ringleader on general propositions, though in details their language is a veritable Babel of confusion and contradiction.

Bro. Willett thinks that the position of those scholars who think that the book is an imposture and a fraud if Daniel did not write it is not well taken, and yet he says that a "large and increasing company of Christian scholars regard it as belonging to the class of works called 'pseudographs.'" Now, a "pseudograph" is defined to be a "false writing," and if a false writing is not a fraud, what is it? When Prof. Willett finds a writer using the "literary device" of putting his own language in the mouth of a well-known person who lived several centuries before him, and so doing it as to make the people of his own time and for centuries to come believe that the more ancient person actually used the language, he will have a case in point, and it will be a case of rank fraud! What reader of the Maccabean period or any other period prior to that of Porphyry ever considered Daniel a "pseudograph" with the origin of which the prophet had nothing to do?"

The reply to the argument based on the Savior's use of the book seems to me to indicate an inadequate conception of the case. Jesus was under no sort of necessity of contravening Jewish prejudice. By saying "the abomination of desolation spoken of in the Book of Daniel," he would have avoided both horns of the dilemma; he would have neither sanctioned the popular delusion that Daniel wrote the book, nor excited Jewish prejudice. His language is this: "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet," etc. Now Daniel the prophet spoke of the desolation referred to, or he did not. If so, then Daniel the prophet wrote the book. If not, then Christ said what is not true. And if the Master thought it unwise to disturb an error of long standing, it would probably be best for the critics to follow his example.

Think for Yourself; or, Sail Your Own Ship.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—The time was with me when I thought that if a man was a good man, an honest-hearted man, a Christian and a good scholar, or, I should say, well educated, that one could rely upon what he might say upon almost any subject; but when I became what I think I might call better informed, I found that that very class of men differed widely on subjects of vital importance, and by watching and posting up as best I could, for which I feel greatly indebted to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I also found that men of said class often changed their views. So, the question presented itself: If I adopt ready-made conclusions in making up my mind, which man's must I take? Seeing that I cannot take them all, and having personal acquaintance with but few of them upon whom I must depend upon for help, my thought ran still further: If I make up my mind from ready-made conclusions, what shall I do should the man change his views who molded them and go off to mold after another pattern?

So, after much perplexity, I came to see that there was no way of knowing that I knew anything without bringing my own mind to bear upon the subject, and that I could not shift the personal responsibility; so I felt more sensibly the weight of responsibility resting upon me individually. Since that time I have been reading closer and studying harder than formerly, by which I have also found that I have a personal or individual liberty as well as responsibility, and, as I cherish that liberty above price, I must allow others the same liberty—most of which I have learned from the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I confess, however, at one time I did feel a little panicky, lest the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST should topple over, as I imagined that I could see her running so close to Higher Criticism that her coach-wheels on that side were running with one-half the tire projecting over the precipice. But she passed over without any mishap, so far as I could see, and as I am a very small fellow I concluded that it must have all been in the imagination and have been drawing free and easy breaths ever since. So the apparition, if such I may term it, revealed to my mind at least two very important facts: First, we 'most always have to sail our mental ship with the wind dead ahead; second, he who wishes to make progress, reach the point or gain on each lay, must run with a close haul on his sheets, so close that the least variation of the wind will cause his sails to flap. Now there are a great many people in the world who do not know anything about sailing a ship. So, when they see one's ship flap a little, they think the man at the helm doesn't know how to man the ship and with deep solicitude attempt to hail the vessel: "Boat, ahoy! Say, you man at the helm; say you, fill your sails! fill your sails! Don't you see you are drifting? You will soon be over the falls of Higher Criticism!" But they don't mean any harm. Of course they don't. Still, one can't help that peculiar smile that will play around the corners of his mouth whom they hailed!

D. D. MCLEAN.

Bowling Green, Fla., Sept. 12.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The inspiration of the Jubilee Year was felt in the convention of Maryland, Deleware and the District of Columbia, held in Beaver Creek, Maryland, Oct. 12 to 14. There was great rejoicing over the fact that the churches of this co-operation have given for missions during the past year $44,058.66, an average of $12 per member. It is fair to state, however, that of this sum $19,000 was given by members of the Beaver Creek Church. This congregation worships in a building valued at $4,000, and contributes nineteen times as much for missions as for its own expenses. It can be imagined what delightful entertainment such a congregation would afford. It can safely be said that no Maryland convention ever before received such abundant hospitality. The 30 churches of this co-operation reported a membership of 3,661; additions, 435; contributed for Foreign Missions, $3,249; Home Missions, $16,727; state missions, $1,046; local missions, $2,155 and for all purposes. $69,235.51. The church property is valued at $209,750. Twenty-six Sunday-schools in the district reported 3,000 enrolled and a total offering of $2,537. During the year W. J. Wright had been sustained at the Third Church, Washington, and M. H. H. Lee at the Fulton Avenue Church, Baltimore. H. J. Dudley and D. M. Austin worked on the eastern shore of Maryland under the auspices of the board. W. F. Watkins had been employed four months as field evangelist. During the year six new houses of worship have been erected or secured. Seven young men had been educated by the assistance of a fund raised for this purpose. Three are now in college, and three are applying for assistance. The sum of $200 was raised at the convention for this fund. The addresses of A. McLean wrought all up to a high pitch of missionary zeal.

Preachers' Day proved especially interesting. The following program greatly pleased the large assembly: "Neglected Doctrines of the New Testament," P. A. Cave; "Review of Clark's 'Outlines of Christian Theology,'" E. B. Bagby; "Tolstoi: His Life and Teachings," Peter Ainslie; "The Pulpit Viewed from the Pew," H. D. Mentzel; "The Pew Viewed from the Pulpit," Robert Elmore; "Should the Church Recognize Christian Science?" W. J. Wright; "Weakness of the Disciples," H. J. Dudley; "Strength of the Disciples," D. M. Austin; "Geo. McDonald: Man and Christian Teacher," B. A. Abbott.

The C. W. B. M. sessions on Thursday were thought by many to be the best ever held. The improvement of our women, both in the participation in public services and in the success of their missionary work, shows a distinct advance from year to year.

The Sunday-school hour was much too short, and it was decided to give more time to this important department at our next convention. Ninth Street Sunday-school of Washington, D. C., secured the prize banner for maintaining the highest average during the year. The Christian Endeavor session on Friday evening brought this delightful convention to a fitting close.

A unique feature of this session was a contest by representatives of eight societies of Scripture recitations. The prize was won by Miss Lena Summy, of the H. St. Church, Washington. The state board was instructed to continue the work along the lines of last year, and to take under advisement the establishment of a college and the inauguration of a summer assembly on the ocean coast

EDWARD B. BAGBY.

The Descent of Christ from Abraham Through Joseph.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—With considerable interest I awaited the the answer of Bro. McGarvey to Bro. D. H. Bays, the latter asking in your issue of Aug. 10, the following: "Third. If you regard the two genealogies as in practical agreement, then how do you harmonize the doctrine of the literal descent of Christ from Abraham through the loins of Joseph as taught by both Matthew and Luke with the doctrine of the immaculate conception as taught by the same writers?" In your issue of Aug. 24, which reached me here in England on Sept. 7, Bro. McGarvey replies only to say that the Scripture does not say that Christ came through the loins of Joseph. The real point of Bro. Bays' question is missed by Bro. McGarvey. I venture, then, to enter the lists.

It has been a strange thing to many students that the Bible should give the genealogy from Joseph back to David, etc., when Joseph was not the father of Christ. Having traveled in Syria and Egypt, and being a keen observer of the customs of the people on which I have ventured to write and still venture to lecture, I was struck with the marriage arrangements. It is the rule to marry cousins—first cousins if possible. Owing to a man's right of preemption in this respect, the father of the girl will not give her to any but her cousin or cousins until they have refused her. Notwithstanding this close blood relationship I found the peoples both physically strong and intellectually fit. Having examined carefully the monuments of the East in the various European museums, on which customs of 4,000 years ago are engraved, and finding that almost the whole of these customs still exist in purely Eastern parts, I have no hesitation in concluding that marriage customs are as aged.

In Numbers 36 we find it clearly laid down that such were to be the marriages, namely, with cousins. In verses 10 and 11 we find the Lord commending the daugthers of Zelophehad from the fact that they had married the sons of their father's brother. Even earlier than this we find Abraham marrying his son Isaac to a cousin, and sending to Haran, hundreds of miles away, for this purpose. Esau grieved the heart of his father because he married not in the family, but to an outsider. Jacob was urged to marry a cousin, which he did. Now, with such a law, and with such precedents, we may rest assured, particularly as customs of the kind still survive in Syria, that Joseph and Mary were cousins. The genealogy of Joseph would be practically that of Mary. Mary would be the seed of David, and thus Christ was descended of the fleshly line of David.

It may be queried, "Why give the lineage of Joseph, when that of Mary is intended?" For the reason that the Bible, being an Eastern book on its human side, would speak as such, would give the male record, knowing that as Mary would be a cousin, it would be understood as hers also. Women in the East always hold a lowly place. The Bible would, therefore, naturally speak of the male side as it does in its doctrines. It says, "He that believeth," "Him that cometh," "Let him that is athirst," and a host of other similar things. We know the feminine is included. We should say, "Those who believe," "Those who come," "Let those who are athirst." The Bible, to speak to Easterns as it first did, must fall in with Eastern styles of literature. In fact, our Eastern would speak as Jesus did, and write as its writers have done, in style purely Eastern. Hence the genealogical tree of Jesus is given on Joseph's side rather than Mary's, for the sake of an etiquette which is Eastern, but its Eastern reader would know at once that righteous Joseph and Mary would marry, even as their righteous forefathers did—cousins. The Oriental reader would not in the least be troubled with a record which, after giving Joseph's pedigree, would wind up by saying he was not the actual father of Christ.

Los Angeles Letter.

On Lord's day, Sept. 10, 1899, I began the tenth year of my ministry for the First Church of this city. Many and important changes have been made in that time. Our city has much more than doubled in population. The church has greatly grown in every way. 813 persons have been added to its membership in those nine years. Of the present membership only about twelve per cent. were in the church when I began work with them. They were then occupying about the handsomest house of worship in the Angel City. Now they possess one of the very finest and best located church edifices in Los Angeles, and exert a strong religious influence on our city. This church leads all the churches of the Pacific Coast in missionary work, and are easily the strongest congregation of the Disciples of Christ west of Denver, if indeed not west of Kansas City. We are united and peaceful, and our work prospers. It is a blessed thing to be permitted to work in such delightful fellowship.

As I have entered upon my tenth year as pastor of this splendid church I can but remember that this is getting to be one of the long pastorates of our brotherhood. It is gratifying to note, however, that the number is yearly increasing, and to observe that long pastorates mean strong churches. There are evident advantages to a church in a long pastorate.

As I conceive, the New Testament churches, when once thoroughly established, were absolutely independent of outside help in preaching. Their eldership, which undoubtedly corresponds with our pastoral preachers, did the work of preaching and shepherding the flock. These relations were permanent, as I understand; for there is no hint in the New Testament that the apostolic churches called preachers yearly or even less frequently. A permanent or long-continued pastorate harmonizes with the New Testament idea of absolute church autonomy.

Then the long pastorate gives a church greater pormanence and stability in the minds of the public. It is a reflection on both the church and the preacher when pastoral relations must be severed every few months or every year. There is a dignity for both church and pastor in a long-extended pastorate.

Then the friction of constant changes and the heartaches attendant upon such changes is removed, and in such removal much danger is averted; for the spiritual life of many persons is always endangered by frequent changes of pastors. Then the much-dreaded vacancy in the pulpit is avoided. There is always a preacher with a message from God. Other advantages of the long pastorate are easily suggested.

There are also great advantages to the preacher, not the least of which is that it compels him to study. No man in this intelligent age and country can long preach acceptably to a church without continuous and persistent study. The deadline has been marked when the preacher ceases to study. There is nothing that coerces study like the approach of next Sunday and no grist in the mill. Study is absolutely essential to mental growth. The long pastorate necessitates constant study.

It also supplies the preacher and his family with something of permanency in home life. Preachers and their families are unfortunately like other people in that they like a permanent abiding-place and find gypsy life exceedingly unpleasant. Why should a man, simply because he loves to preach the gospel, be compelled to always be a journeying from one church to another? Growing out of this permanency of home life is found the strength of affection for churches and church people. It is little less than cruelty to animals for the self-appointed resignation committee and a disgruntled minority in a church to compel the preacher and his family to break all their heart-attachments and move on to the next town to experience similar treatment. The continual marvel to me is that men do not leave the ministry when they have endured such treatment as this about a dozen times.

The long pastorate cements attachment to church people and links pastor and people with sacred bands. To bury their dead, baptize their children, marry their sons and daughters and sympathize with their affections is soon to endear a preacher to his people, and their attachment ought to be continued during the prosperity of a church. Then the permanency of a pastor enables a man to plan for the extension of Christianity and to execute his own plans. This often requires years for its accomplishment. Especially is this true in large cities. Without the supervision and oversight of the episcopacy we must lengthen our pastorate in cities if we are ever to make any great success in city evangelization, and that is the crying need of our brotherhood to-day.

The long pastorate with a reasonable salary gives the preacher an opportunity to save up a few dollars for a rainy day. When the small balance that even the most frugal preacher can save is consumed by the yearly move there is no chance to make provision for one's family and old age. To provide for them seems to be the first dictate of nature's law. It is seldom wise for a preacher to invest his spare money in a residence, as this is usually a poor investment, but there are always other good investments open to a preacher. The preacher has just as great a duty in providing for his family's education and training as other men, and he should be allowed to accumulate property for this purpose.

Taken altogether I think the idea of a long pastorate ought to be impressed upon our churches and preachers, and that both ought to take a just pride in establishing such permanent relations. A. C. SMITHER.

Mission Work in St. Louis.

To understand the work we have undertaken in this city under the auspices of our city mission board it is necessary to understand our present strength and our surroundings. In this city of now nearly three-quarters of a million souls we have thirteen congregations, twelve houses of worship and a total membership of but little over three thousand souls. Of the houses of worship four are but chapels, nine have a debt and but six sustain preaching without outside assistance. The weaker churches are the Carondelet, Lindenwood, Ellendale, Tuxedo, Fifth and the Second. A co-operation has been maintained between all of our churches in this city through the agency of our city mission board for some years and much assistance in this way has been rendered to various churches, but it has been manifest for sometime that our resources were inadequate to the growing interest of the cause in the city. We had weak churches that needed strengthening, missions that needed developing, and new doors constantly opening that needed entrance, but for all of these things we were not equal. We sorely needed a general evangelist for the city, but could not employ one.

This was our condition when a proposition from the A. C. M. S. came to us, offering to assist in the maintenance of an evangelist. A contract was soon signed, and after due care on the part of our city mission board, A. J. Marshall, of Onowa, Ia., was employed.

The next thing was the plan upon which he should work. The city mission board had for sometime held to the view that it would be unwise to continue the doctrine of expansion, for a season at least. The thing most needed was to strengthen some of our well-located weaker churches and mission points. And even in this that it would be best to take these places seriatim. Consequently, after due deliberation it was decided that Bro. Marshall should begin in Carondelet.

Carondelet is the southern point of St. Louis, and has a population of twenty to twenty-five thousand inhabitants, a large per cent. of whom are Americans and Protestants. In this district we had a few members as the result of a few feeble efforts by various persons to establish a Christian Church. Here Bro. Marshall found about three dozen persons, the remnant of a much larger number, who were willing to go to work. These Bro. Marshall set in order and since May 1st good progress has been made toward the establishment of a church. There have been numerous additions, greatly enlarged audiences at each service and the usual church activities inaugurated, so that on the whole the city mission board feels that commendable progress has been made.

One of the great wants of this congregation has been a suitable house in which to meet. Bro. Marshall has taken the matter in hand and this week a payment will be made on a good building that can be easily converted into a neat and commodious place of worship.

Just how long Bro. Marshall shall continue at this point cannot yet be determined, but as soon as the wants of the congregation can be otherwise provided for he will begin the reinforcement of some of the other weaker churches. In the meantime he has been extending his acquaintance with each of the congregations in the city and occasionally assisting with a visit, a sermon or a meeting. He assisted O. A. Bartholomew in a two weeks' meeting in the West End Church, during the summer, with excellent results, and to the delight and edification of the church. He is just now beginning a meeting with W. F. Hamann in the Fifth Church, which is also in the southern part of the city, but several miles north of the Carondelet Church.

On the whole, the city mission board is pleased with Bro. Marshall's ability, methods of work and present results. All that he has done has been done during the summer. The best season for results is now just approaching and he is planning for greater things for the Master.

The city mission board is also pleased with the timely and prompt assistance of the A. C. M. S., without the aid of which it could not have undertaken this great work in this great city. With great hopes of large results from this co-operative work, we remain sincerely yours,

W. W. HOPKINS, Sec.

A PECULIAR REMEDY

Something About the New Discovery for Curing Dyspepsia.

(From Mich. Christian Advocate.)

The Rev. F. I. Bell, a highly esteemed minister residing in Weedsport, Cayuga Co., N. Y., in a recent letter writes as follows: "There has never been anything that I have taken that has relieved the Dyspepsia from which I have suffered for ten years except the new remedy called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Since taking them I have had no distress at all after eating and again after long years can sleep well. Rev. F. I. Bell, Weedsport, N. Y., formerly Idalia, Colo."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is a remarkable remedy, not only because it is a certain cure for all forms of indigestion, but because it seems to act as thoroughly in old chronic cases of Dyspepsia as well as in mild attacks of Indigestion or biliousness. A person has dysyepsia simply because the stomach is overworked, all it wants is a harmless vegetable remedy to digest the food and thus give it the much needed rest.

This is the secret of the success of this peculiar remedy. No matter how weak or how much disordered the digestion may be, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food whether the stomach works or not. New life and energy is given not only to the stomach but to every organ and nerve in the body.

A trial of this splendid medicine will convince the most skeptical that Dyspepsia and all stomach troubles can be cured. Send for little book on Stomach mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. So popular has the remedy become that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can now be obtained at any drug store at 50c. per package.

Jubilee Convention News

Chairman's Last Jubilee Call.

We are ready; let the 10,000 come! Make it 20,000 and you double our joy. The great chorus is a certain success; 500 have already enrolled, and if you want to be in the last hundred you had better send your name at once to J. H. Filmore, 119 N. 6th Street, and get song book and badge. Now we expect that a few Disciples will be prevented from coming, and so let those who come arrange to send and take back to them all of the convention possible. Arrange for a great convention rally for first Sunday after you return, order convention songs of Fillmore, and let reports be enthusiastic. See your editors before you leave and arrange to send back news by letter and by wire. Give out all the news now, and names of delegates when you start, and let the world know that this is a Christian convention.

One question of interest in the convention will be the place of the convention for 1900. Pittsburg will put in a strong plea. Kansas City and Washington, D. C., are in the minds of many. Have heard from Chicago and San Francisco on this question. Niagara Falls could entertain it well in October. What about Buffalo, St. Louis and Cleveland? Let no city have it that won't work for it and promise to care for it.

Minneapolis will come fifty strong, Attorney Geo. T. Halbert, chairman, to secure it for 1901. Shall it be settled two years ahead? What city bids against her?

A telephone message from Rains and McLean says: "The $150,000 for Foreign Missions reached; Home Society $96,000. We hope they'll raise it by Saturday night." Let the Lord be praised! We'll likely hold a thanksgiving service in Central and Richmond Street Sunday night. Why not everywhere?

The late comers to the Jubilee City are Pres. J. H. Hardin, Eureka, Ill.; Hiram VanKirk, Chicago; A. C. Smither and wife, California, and some one was here seeking quarters for 75 from Ironton, O.

At committee meeting Monday night it was decided that the headquarters of all our committees should keep with the convention, and so all will be moved to Music Hall on Monday morning.

W. A. Foster was added to the press committee. I'd like to whisper to you all that Bro. Foster is doing splended work and has made a host of friends here, and he has done it largely by preaching the old gospel.

Call for Jubilee Singers, No. 2.

The indications are that we will have a full grand chorus at the Jubilee Conventions. Already a large number of fine singers are registered. There is still room for at least 100 more, 600 in all. We want all those who sing at home to be in the chorus. It is necessary that names be sent now. Send names and part sung by each, and receive the music and badges. The singing will be glorious.

The Christian-Evangelist Special.

Arrangements have been completed for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special, and our train will leave St. Louis Thursday morning, Oct. 12, at 9 A. M., after the arrival of all morning trains from the West. It is the intention not to make any stops en route to Cincinnati, except to take on passengers who may wish to join our party for the convention. The train will arrive in Cincinnati at 6 P. M., thus making the run a few minutes quicker than the celebrated "Knickerbocker Special"—the best regular train out of St. Louis to the East. We will go via the Big Four route and thus avoid the tunnel, and at the same time take advantage of the best service and equipment out of the city. In order to go with our party it is only necessary to ask the ticket agent from whom you purchase your ticket to make it read via the Big Four Route, as their regular ticket will be honored on this train. If you cannot go with our party you may be able to secure the same rates over this line by addressing our excursion manager, stating when you will want to go.

The best rate we have been able to secure from all points West of St. Louis is one and one-third fare for the round trip, EXCEPT that parties living within a radius of 150 miles of St. Louis will be able to DO BETTER than this by communicating with our excursion manager. The fare from St. Louis for the round trip is $9.

The hotel accommodations and reservations are the same as those announced elsewhere in this paper and heretofore, as having been arranged by the general committee for the West, except that we are able to make the reservations direct upon request. We would advise, however, that those not having already made reservations trust this matter to the Cincinnati committee, who will meet our train and assign our passengers to such quarters as suits best their convenience and their purses. The committee has made elaborate arrangements and is prepared to take care of all. Assignments will be made immediately upon arrival in the city, and comfortable and satisfactory quarters are to be had at prices ranging from 75 cents to $2 per day.

From the large number of applications already in hand we feel safe in announcing that this will be the largest and most representative party going from this city to the convention, and we take this means of thanking the brethren for the assistance they have given us in making this enterprise a success. As a compliment to those going with us, and inasmuch as our train will run on limited time without stops, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will serve noonday lunch at a mere nominal cost to all its passengers.

Any others wishing to join our party or seeking any further information should correspond at once with our excursion manager, Bro. Oreon E. Scott, 817 Chestnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

Christian Business Men's Conference.

We trust that hundreds of Christian business men will attend the Jubilee Convention, and all will remember their conference to be held at the Grand Hotel at eight o'clock Saturday evening, October 14th. Ex-Gov. Drake, of Iowa, will preside over this conference, which will be addressed by a number of our representative business men. Governor Bushnell, of Ohio, has been invited to deliver an address of welcome, and it is quite probable that he will be with us.

Brethren, lay aside your worldly cares and spend a week in Cincinnati, beginning October 12th.

The Call for the Needy.

We desire to earnestly join the call of the Board of Ministerial Relief for help. We should not allow the wounded soldiers of our Lord to be left in distress and neglect in this our Jubilee Year. If all our boards reach the amount that they have asked for, and the Board of Ministerial Relief is at the same time compelled to write to those who are dependent upon the checks received from its treasury that they are unable fo meet the appropriations, it would be a shame to us, and our Jubilee Convention would not be up to the fullness of joy when we remembered the suffering of those holy men.

Let the last offering of the year be one of sweetest love for the faith and hardihood of those whose lives have made possible the Jubilee Convention.

Let all remittances for Ministerial Relief be sent to Howard C. Cale, 120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind. Don't wait for an offering to be taken in the church. Make it a personal offering to our aged and helpless soldiers.

Past $150,000 for Foreign Missions!

On the 28th we received a check for $5,000 from a good friend of the work, Bro. Lathrop Cooley, of Cleveland, Ohio.; so that we are enabled at this date to report $151,600 for Foreign Missions, and we have one more day's receipts, which will certainly bring us $400. We are now expecting to report $152,000. We are sure the friends of world-wide missions will rejoice in this good report. This has been a glorious year indeed. We thank every one that has helped us. We are indebted specially to the Sunday-school superintendents, and to those who have helped us with their generous personal offerings. The work can now be enlarged. The gospel can be preached in all its fullness and power to the lost. Souls can be saved and our mission as a Christian people more and more fulfilled.

The Jubilee Convention will be a great convention. The reports will be the best in the history of our people.

The state missionary convention, which should have met at West Point, Sept. 12-15, was postponed until November 1-5. An excellent program has been arranged. Let every church in the state send delegates. All will be cordially welcomed and entertained. Send names to G. A. Macon or J. A. Stevens, West Point. L. E. MCKAY, Sec.

District Convention.

The semi-annual meeting of the 10th district Nebraska Missionary Society will convene with the Carpenter Church 15 miles southwest of Alliance in Box, Butte County, on Wednesday and Thursday the 18th and 19th of October, it is hoped there will be a good number of the brothers and sisters in attendance. Free entertainment for all who may come. Those coming from a distance will be met by some one of the brethren if they will drop a card to Bro. Chint Salenberger, stating when they will be there.

A Temperance Resolution.

The civilized world is under the power of the gospel of Christ, more and more interested in questions of reform. The greatest of all questions of reform to-day is the suppression of the drink traffic.

All religious bodies are speaking out against the evil. It is meet that we do also. The resolutions passed by these religious bodies, in their conventions, conferences, etc., serve to show what the sentiment is, and also to create public sentiment.

Our Jubilee Convention ought to pass a resolution on this reform, and it ought to mean something. Nothing flabby or weak will do.

E. L. FRAZIER.

Oklahoma Territorial Convention.

The above-named convention met in Oklahoma City, Sept. 12, and continued three days. As I was there but one day I am perhaps not a very good judge of its proceedings. However, I will chronicle what I saw, or at least some things I saw; for I came, I saw, but did not conquer.

I suppose the attendance was good for Oklahoma, though of course not to be compared to attendance in the states. Of course, Bro. Dick T. Morgan was present and president. In fact, a convention in Oklahoma without Morgan would be like Hamlet with Hamlet left out.

The additions to the territorial force has changed wondrously in the last year. In fact, Bro. Morgan says it was almost a new convention. Among the new men of my acquaintance is Bro. A. B. Carpenter, from Missouri, now of Chandler, and Bro. H. W. Newby, from Denver, Col., now of Guthrie. The former made an address Wednesday evening, but I got in just in time to miss most of it, but from the applause I suppose the address was well received.

Bro. B. F. Clay made a talk after Bro. Carpenter that was simply grand. He was booked also for an address or sermon the last night, but I was compelled to leave at noon, and hence missed perhaps the best wine of the feast. However this may be, the address of Bro. H. W. Newby Wednesday night on "Our Jubilee Convention," was unique and, if n the best, was certainly one of the best of the convention.

Bro. J. M. Monroe, of El Reno, also made an address, but I failed to hear it. But as his theme was "Our Plea and the Times," and as Bro. Monroe is a workman, I am sure that the hearers did not overstate it when they (or some of them) said it was one of the best.

The sunrise prayer-meeting Thursday morning, though attended by few, especially by few preachers, was to me the most serious and spiritual meeting of the convention, so far as my observation went; and this brings up the somewhat antiquated question, "Are we a prayerless people?" If not, why were not more preachers in particular and others in general present at this meeting?

Nearly twenty years ago, while conducting a meeting in Boise county, Texas, the writer called down upon his own "defenseless head" this criticism: "He depends more on his logic than he does on his prayers." I am afraid the criticism was just, but enough of this for the present.

I have another short criticism, or word of caution rather, and I shall introduce it with a question: "Why is there so much levity, if not downright foolishness, in our conventions?" And to a full share of this I plead guilty.

Upon the whole, however, I believe that our Oklahoma convention will compare favorably with the many conventions I have attended in the states. Of course, we lack the McGarveys, and Garrisons, and Powers, and Tylers, et al., but we are a feeble folk and have learned not to "despise the day of small things."

H. W. ROBERTSON.

Nordin, O. T., Sept. 19, 1899.

P. S.—In looking over this I notice I have unintentionally omitted the name of Bro. J. B. Bowen, of Oklahoma City, late of Texas, and also the name of Bro. Dubber, of Wichita. Both were at the convention, nor could we have gotten along very well without them.

1899, receipts from 212 churches	$2,515.14
1898, " " 136 "	2,087.54
Gain	$ 427.60
Gain over same week last year	$ 2,478.40
Total receipts for September, 1899	$13,268.06
" " " " 1898	8,470.69
Gain over September, 1898	$ 4,757.37

Note the following encouraging facts:

1. Total new recipts for the year are over $47,000. This is a gain over last year of about $19,500.

2. There is now $207,000 in the Permanent Fund, in all departments. Churches and individuals will certainly send in $3,000 before we go to the Jubilee Convention.

3. We asked for $15,000 in the September offering and received $13,268, with only a few of the largest churches heard from.

4. We have gained 184 contributing churches during September and about 80 per cent. have reached their apportionment.

Will the preachers and elders please see to it that their church treasurers send in every dollar collected before the Jubilee Convention, if possible?

Let us praise God for this great increase. Send all remittances to LESSONS IN SOUL-WINNING, by E. H. Keilar, is a work containing many valuable suggestions in soul winning, and will be very helpful to those who wish to aid the pastor in personal work. 184 pages. Cloth, 75 cents. Christian Publishing Co.

From the Iowa Secretary.

The books are closed, the convention is passed, and we are standing at the threshold of the new year. The last year was one of joyous service.

At times perplexing problems and the weight of responsibility almost overwhelmed me but, with the blessing of God and the co-operation of the brethren, we were enabled to close a successful year's work.

While last year was two months shorter than the previous one, it compares favorably with any year in the past in general results, and the retiring board has the satisfaction of knowing that it served the brotherhood of Iowa faithfully and well.

With the exception of the corresponding secretary we begin the new year with a new board, all of whom are well known in the Iowa work. Bro. A. M. Haggard, who for five years served as corresponding secretary, was elected president. A. E. Corey, the wide-awake pastor of the church at Oskaloosa, and one of the most promising young men in Iowa, was elected vice-president. Prof. W. A. Crusinbury, who has made practical church and Sunday-school work a study for years, was elected recording secretary, and J. B. Burton, a successful business man, and for several years a member of the state board, was elected treasurer. With such men for our standard-bearers we are assured in advance of a prosperous year's work. B. S. Denny was re-elected corresponding secretary.

We will not venture to make an estimate of our membership until the returns are all in, or until the minutes are in press. Last year, before the statistics were all in, our corresponding secretary estimated our membership at 56,000, but when the statistics were published the figures showed only 49,339. The strange thing about it is that we counted the estimates instead of the facts.

Our statistics will not be complete this year, but we believe that they will be more nearly so than ever before. The new board is planning aggressive work for the year.

E. A. Hastings, of Brandon, has been selected by the district board for evangelist for the southeast district. Bro. Hastings has been very successful in evangelistic work and knows the southeast district as well as any man in Iowa, and is sure to succeed.

J. B. Lucas, our superintendent of Christian Endervor, was with the new board at its first meeting the 18th inst., and outlined his work for the year. He will co-operate with the board and will strive to enlist the Endeavorers in the state work. Bro. Moore, our Bible-school superintendent, has been out of the state and we have not heard from him, but we all know Bro. Moore as a worker and leader, and we have no doubt about his ability to swing his department in line.

We have our stakes set for $5,000 from the churches and 5,000 souls for Christ this year. We want every true soldier of Christ to take his place on the firing line, for there remaineth yet much to possess.

OUR JUBILEE DELEGATION.

As yet we have been unable to secure a better rate than one fare from the Central Passenger Association and one and one-third fare from the Western Association. We are working for a better rate, and we believe that we will get it. On account of this we have not selected an official route. As soon as we can secure a satisfactory rate we will send circulars out over the state, so that the brethren will have ample time to make all necessary arrangements. In the meantime, let every one who intends going send their names to me at Des Moines and we will send you a bulletin of information.

Family Circle.

The Unbeliever.

He said there wasn't a God on high, he laughed at the Christian's hope;
He looked at the stars in the dotted sky, at the rock on the mountain slope—
The ponderous rock that jutted out, high over the murmuring sea—
And he said that they were among the things which merely happened to be:
It was "only a matter of cooling off and condensing that had brought
The systems, with their suns and worlds, to perfection out of naught."

He spoke of the sun-kissed pagan's creed and the god unto which he bowed;
He spoke of the drooping flower's need of the mist from the passing cloud;
He spoke of the dumb brute's fear of death, of the wild hind's mother love,
And he smiled at the claim that man draws breath through the favor of One above;
He heard the bell as its echo spread on the peace of the Sabbath morn;
He listened to what the preacher said, and he turned away in scorn.

He stood by the bay as the tide came in; he watched the billows that broke;
He saw the volcano across the plain, with its summit wreathed in smoke:
"They were things that had come out of empty space;" he could tell you how and why.
But a pallor spread over his baby's face, and they said that the child would die!
Then the man who had scoffed fell down on his knees; he still had a prayer to make:
"O God," he pleaded, "spare him, please!
God, spare him for Christ's sake!"

The Parson's Story.

S. S. LAPPIN.

It was Saturday noon, and the preacher was tired. The week had been a busy one; two funerals and a wedding, besides numerous sick to visit. Friday morning had found him without sermons for the Lord's day, but by diligent effort they were prepared at last, and the preacher gave a great yawn of relief as he stretched his cramped limbs full length. What should he do for relaxation? Go fishing! Happy thought! Why, of course he would go fishing. In two minutes he was on the top of a step-ladder in the dark pantry feeling over the shelves for an empty baking-powder can. In the midst of his hopeful search the telephone bell gave an alarming ring; down he came and took his stand before the instrument, receiver to ear.

"Hello!"

"Yes, I'm the man you want."

"Well, let's see; I'm all tuckered out—been so busy"—and so on.

"Well, of course, if you can't get any one else I'll help you out the best I can."

"All right, count on me; good-bye."

"Got to address the Y. M. C. A. to-morrow," said the parson to his wife, resuming his search for a bait can. "But they'll have to put up with an off hand talk," he added, coming down, can in hand, "for I'm going a fishing now;" and he did.

Fifteen minutes with a spade in the back yard, resulting in a dozen delicious angle worms, five minutes more collecting tackle and tying it to bicycle, and the parson was rolling off up the river road to a rockbar two miles above, ransacking his fagged-out brain for a topic for the Y. M. C. A. talk. The matter bothered him no little, and when he pushed the hook through the wriggling worms, his mind was more on the talk than the sport in hand. Hooks all baited, line neatly coiled on the sand and the parson stepped back to make a throw, for he fished with a throw-line, fifty feet long; once, twice, thrice, the heavy slug of lead swung through the air and then went flying far out over the water.

"Ah, a fine throw, that!" thought this fisher of men at first, but his heart fell as he saw the whole tackle go whirling out after the weight, the nearest end stopping fifteen feet from the shore. There was nothing to say—nothing fitting for a preacher to say—and so he folded his arms and watched the new tackle float around downstream and dissappear with the current. Then he disconsolately mounted his wheel for the ride home; he had no fish, his bait was gone; worse than that, he had even lost his new tackle and missed a half day's sport, but he had a subject for the men's meeting next day. When the parson was introduced to the audience on the morrow he related the above experience to the evident amusement of all and went on to say:

"The trouble about the whole matter was that I was so busy with the future that I forgot to tie fast to anything on the shore. That little precaution would have saved me the disappointment, the fishing tackle and, may be, a nice string of fish. As I have studied it over since, in cooler moments, it has occurred to me that most of the mistakes I ever made were of about the same kind. Plans and schemes nearly always look plausible at first, but when unraveled by actual experiment they are often found to be loose at the inside end. Most of the failures men make result from just such small items of neglect. It isn't always foresight we lack; we often have too much of that, as in my case; it's in-thought we need, to figure out probable results from given beginnings. It is a seeming small matter to push the anchor overboard, but it is that, and that alone, that saves the vessel from being driven to destruction or drifting into unknown waters. We pride ourselves on independence, boys, but after all it's a good thing to be tied to something. There is a courage that is foolish and disastrous. This thing of casting forth life's most promising venture without first having made fast the moorings, is a mistake to be made once, and vainely repented of in bitterness and tears ever afterward.

"For instance, honesty is a good thing to tie to. It's a rare article these days, the genuine old standard variety. There are a good many imitations almost as good as the real article, but they are all shaky and uncertain. The unthinking may be easily duped into adopting an uncertain standard, but no man can be relied upon whose integrity may not be labeled 'Simon Pure.' The philosophy of the old saw, has become so popular that a good many people are satisfied as long as they keep out of the 'tater' pile. It is urged that success demands trickery. In the first place, that's an inconsistent lie, for whatever demands trickery is not true success. In the second place, if worldly success does require dishonesty, it is still an easy matter for a sensible man to choose, for the most successful man in the world is the one who runs the gauntlet of sin on this old earth and keeps his honor untarnished.

'It is a sin to steal a pin,
It is a greater to steal a tater,'

"The church and its services is another mighty good hitchingpost for a fractious young fellow. Of course, it's easy to argue that a man can be honest without joining church, and that religion doesn't consist in church-going, but after all there are few, very few, who stay away from church and stick to God and righteousness. We need the ballast we take on at regular Sunday services. There are places where we can find better entertainment, or keener amusement, but there is no place under heaven where we can find spiritual food and drink for the inner man. You can easily test the value of church attendance and membership by taking a look at society. Note how few of the criminal, the wicked and the worldly are, or ever have been, regular attendants at divine worship. Then note how few of the good and true and useful do not draw their inspiration and strength from their communion with God, kept up through the church. As at present constituted, the church has weaknesses; division in the ranks and a sprinkling of the unregenerate in the membership are not to be denied, but it would be hard to find any other institution among men that you could as safely tie to.

"The aforementioned things make excellent and trustworthy moorings, but there is another that is most essential, and that combines the strength of all. It is the old-fashioned idea of God. We used to be told of the 'good man' and the 'bad man' when our childish minds could not grasp the meaning of the more dignified terms, and simple as it was, I notice that somehow the further we get away from that plain theology the more liable we are to become crooked and uncertain in conduct. Some people of our day have outgrown the biblical idea that there is a good God and that man is responsible to him. Now I shall not argue the matter at all; every man must argue it for himself before the tribunal of his own reason. What I want to emphasize is that it's a dangerous thing to cut loose from God—dangerous even for the life that now is. Take a look at those who have discarded the doctrine. Are they good? Are they benevolent? Are they sympathetic? Did they not first of all get worldly or mean and then deny God to bolster up their inconsistent lives? Modern belief is a good example of evolution. The theory of a godless universe is usually evolved out of a godless life; the belief that there is no hell arises from a soul that shuts its eyes as it stands on the seething brink; the denial that there is a heaven finds root in a character that is hopelessly shut out if there should be a land of joy beyond. The old plan was to shape the life to suit God, but the new one shapes the idea of God to accommodate the life, and the old one is the best. Young man, tie to God. Sail out, then, fearlessly on the bounding waves, for you are anchored to the immovable; but try it alone at your peril. Without him you'll drift and drift till even your compass will get frisky and point all sorts of ways; every gale will strike you broadside and drive you helpless before it, till at last, provisions exhausted, decks storm-swept and cargo washed overboard, you will bring up at the wrong port, without a log-book to tell of your voyage.

"Young men, tie to these things. But you want to be free. All right, the only way to be free is to be tied to something solid; you're free then—free from danger and disaster of every kind. The veriest slave on earth is one who is so fearlessly free as to sever his connection with these eternal stays, and drift out before the deceptive breeze of worldly ambition, and down the merciless current of public opinion, helpless and alone!"

The boys were all well pleased with the parson's talk.

Friendship.

What makes this life worth living but the friend
Who sees as we see, knows our hearts, and speaks
In words the heart can understand? A friend
Is God's best gift to us on earth; a type
Of his own love for us. A landscape dark
On life's horizon is a background toned
To add a beauty to the face that smiles
In sypathy. The brightest gleams ahead
Of coveted success can never dim
The joy that shines from out a true friend's eyes.
What makes this life worth living but the friend
Who feels our wishes as his own, who dares
To fight for us and never tells how long
The struggle was, or hard, but is content
In our success. How friendship makes the heart
Of lonely sorrow warm, and lifts the sad,
Forgetting eyelids till glance meets with glance,
And love is born again! 'Tis night, and yet
My friend is not asleep. He thinks of me.
'Tis dawn, and love's new day begins untired.
The sultry noon oppresses not the heart,
And with the dusk love rests with us in peace.

"We should worship God only through the Word."

It would seem that the author of the above sentiment had never beheld the works of the great divine Artist in nature, or was capable of comprehending and worshiping him only in his humanity.

When Jesus went away he sent the Comforter, which is the divine Spirit or heavenly Essence pervading the universe.

"What but God
Pervades, adjusts and agitates the whole?"

If we are not spiritually deaf and blind and devoid of sensibility, we may see him, hear him, feel his presence and life everywhere. When we read the grand epics of Milton, the stirring dramas of Shakespeare, the songs of Israel's psalmist, we are drawn in spirit toward the makers of these monumental works. Deeper and higher are the emotions inspired by the works of the Master Hand! Is this "romantic sentiment," as it has been termed? Nay, it is the glad, solemn, reverent worship of the soul that recognizes its Master and goes forth to meet him. It is the union of the infinite and the finite.

As I look upon the scene before me, this ideal autumnal morning, I murmur softly John Milton's exquiste lines:

"My heart which, by a secret harmony,
Still moves with thine, joined in Connection sweet."

So does my heart move in silent, sweet accord with the great Spirit of Nature, that speaks in the whispering winds and murmuring streams; pulsates in every leaf and flower, and crowns the mountains and hills with majesty and glory.

So, too, may we see God in his greatest work—man. There is a spark of divinity in every human soul. In proportion as this is developed does man become like his Maker. It was said of Saint Ignatius that he carried God in his heart.

John, transfigured by the love of God, became the "beloved disciple." His writings, animated by the spirit of love, appeal to every reader and inspire one with something of the reverence given to Divinity.

Do not "our hearts burn within us" when we are in the presence of saintly people, as though we were in the immediate presence of God.

I have listened to sermons by ministers, whose hearts Deity was enthroned, that so elevating to the soul that I have involuntarily exclaimed, as "rapt to the highest heaven." I passed slowly from the church: "I have seen God?"

Thus I think it not sacrilege, neither is it polytheism nor pantheism nor any other heterodox "ism" to revere and worship the God in nature and in human life. He is the "God of the quiet hour in the upper room." He is the God of Gethsemane and Calvary, and the God of the "Word." This realization of the Universal Presence brings one into intimate communion with God and is the breath of heaven to the soul. It gives gladness to the heart, buoyance to the spirit, serenity amid trials, heroism amid dangers and is the very "rest of God."

Moreover, it is the vital virtue of real, practical religion, inciting to work as well as worship; doing as well as being, and helping us onward and upward to a higher Christian life.

Oh, I clasp my Bible reverently and look upward in thankfulness for the revelation therein of the infinite God who manifests himself in manifold ways for our happiness, our spiritual good and enlightenment, and these lines of the poet come to my mind and into my soul with the brightness of the rising day:

"Tune your ears
To all the wordless music of the stars
And to the voice of nature, and your hearts
Shall turn to truth and goodness as the plant
Turns to the sun. A thousand unseen hands
Reach down to help you to their peace-crowned heights,
And all the forces of the earth and sky
Shall fortify your strength."

That Missing Link.

JAMES SMALL.

I have read somewhere, I cannot now tell where, that Charles Darwin wrote to a friend who had asked him concerning an immortal life, saying that he had not time to study that question, he was too busy with this world to trouble himself about the evidences there are for another. But so far as he could see it had never been revealed, and it was still an open question as to whether man survived physical death or not. In this day and age many are like Darwin, looking down so constantly that they fail to look up, and forget what manner of men they are. Since my boyhood I have read about the great scientists looking for the missing link. For many years I did not know what the missing link was. At last I found that it was a supposed organism that linked us to the underworld, a link that linked us with the worm or the brute. Scientists may find this link. I do not say they will not, it is really their business to find it if they can. But in the meantime let us look at the link at the other end, that is not missing. I would rather lift my eyes to the top link than pain them looking for the bottom one.

THE MISSING LINK? Blessed be God, the link at the other end is not missing, the glorified Jesus, the blessed Christ, that golden link that links us to the upper universe, the spiritual, the celestial, the divine and the eternal.

This world is poor from shore to shore,
And like a baseless vision,
Its lofty towers and golden ore,
Its crowns and gems are vain and poor;
There's nothing rich but heaven.

Moral Progress.

W. J. BURNER.

The moral progress of humanity is the discovery of new sins. A forward step means that something which the average piety and morality of the age considers innocent shall be proven to be guilty. The average man hates the unusually good as much as he does the unusually evil, and the attitude of an ecclesiastical institution is usually, perhaps always, that of the average man.

Progress depends upon those heroic souls who do not allow the majority to think for them. These are few. The continuity of social institutions requires that they should be. A world of reformers or prophets would not prosper. The conversatism of society mercilessly discriminates between the true and the false prophet, and the pain caused to the former is more than compensated for by the destruction of the latter. The moral world in which we live is contented with itself. Most Christians believe that a large measure of material comfort is the chief object of existence and are opposed to any and all teaching that cannot be harmonized with their practical creed.

Theoretically we acknowledge that we are sinners; practically we resist attempts to show us our sins. We are no better than we are because we do not want to be any better.

The state of feeling, the mental outfit, the aggregate of sentiments, desires and fears, proper to the time when men were formed in small groups and fiercely battled with other groups for a chance to live, was not adapted to the later stage when kinship included and bound together a larger number of people. The law of the Hebrews commanded them to love their Hebrew neighbors as themselves. The learning of this lesson was but a preliminary to the larger duty of regarding all men as our neighbors. We assent to this duty, because Jesus said so. The feeling of brotherhood comes but slowly. We are theologically correct and mentally apathetic.

It is safe to denounce the sin of liquor-selling, because the average Christian does not run a saloon. It is unsafe to impress upon him the duty of saving the heathen, because his standard of material comfort is of more importance to him than the salvation of an African tribe. The ordinary Christian does not desire very greatly the salvation of anybody. He does not have a decided, positive feeling of the sinfulness of sin, though he has of the sinfulness of certain sins. He is not sanctified to the most pressing needs of the present age.

The world of to-morrow will require a Christian who not only believes, but feels with something like Pauline or Lutheran or Christlike intensity that whatever diminishes the sum of the vital powers in the individual without a compensating benefit to society is immoral; that one of the first duties of a man or a woman is to be a good animal; that the expenditure of mental ability in the luxury of culture and the expenditure of money in the luxury of taste are not Christlike; that he is brother to the lowest. Before mankind can become a universal brotherhood man must become a universal brother.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Have You Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

YOU MAY BE AFFLICTED, AND NOT KNOW IT.

To Prove for Yourself the Wonderful Curative Properties of Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney Remedy, Every Reader of "The Christian-Evangelist" May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

It is now conceded by eminent scientists that the most important organs of the body are the kidneys. They filter your blood and work away night and day, whether you are asleep or awake.

People are apt to believe that kidney disease is a rather rare disease, but statistics have proven that it is a most common trouble.

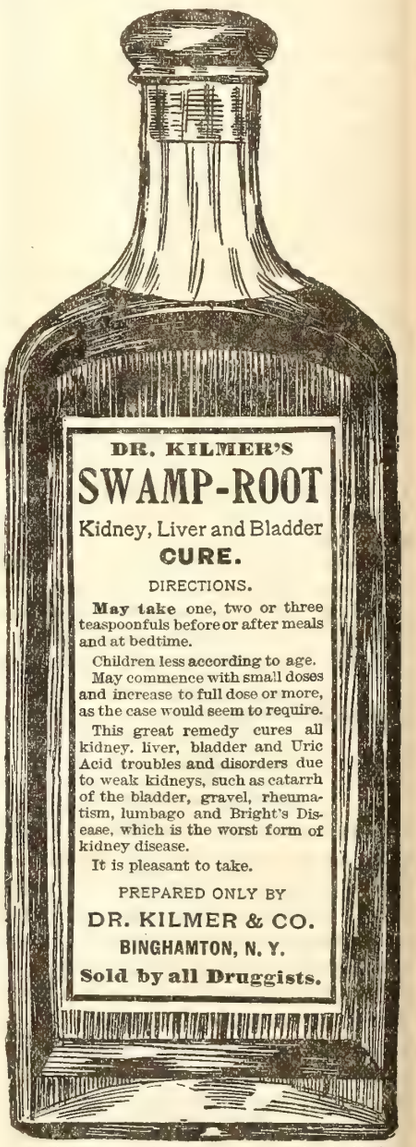
And the proof of this is that most diseases, perhaps 85 per cent., are caused in the beginning by disorders of the kidneys.

BECAUSE they fail to filter your blood.

Your other organs may need care—but your kidneys most, because they do most.

If you are sick, begin doctoring your kidneys, because as soon as they are well they will help all the other organs to health.

When your kidneys are not doing their work some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, rhumatic pains, sciatica, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night; uric acid, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, sallow, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes loss of energy and ambition.



If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed for twenty four hours forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is the great medical triumph of the 19th century, dicovered after years of untiring effeort and research, by the famous kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer. It will be found by both men ane women just what is needed in all cases of kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid troubles.

This famous new discovery, Swamp-Root, will set your whole system right.

The best proof of this is a trial, and nothing could be fairer than the offer to send a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book telling all about it, and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. Both the sample bottle and book will be sent absolutely free, by mail, to any address.

The great discovery, Swamp-Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending their addresses to Dr. Killmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

One-half the 50 ct. size—one-quarter the $1 00 size.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one dollar size bottles at drugstores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

To Dr. Johnson belongs "A good hater," and to MacIntosh, in 1801, the phrase, often attributed to John Randolph, "Wise and masterly inactivity."

"First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his fellowcitizens" (not his countrymen) appeared in the resolutions presented to the House of Representatives in December, 1899, by General Henry Lee.

The Red Box Clew—II.

One cold winter night in St. Louis, when the snow lay fair and pure upon the city, the doorbell of a certain house on Washington Avenue was rung again and again. It was about 11 o'clock, and the family, which consisted of a widower, his maiden sister and a housekeeper, who had long been in the family, had all retired to rest. As the bell rang more urgently, Mr. West was awakened. Hurriedly dressing he descended to the hall, lit the gas and opened the door. The street was very bright in its white cover, upon which the moonlight sparkled. Yet, as the old gentleman strained his eyes he could see no one in all the street. As he stared in wonder, a faint cry arose from the step. He started back with an exclamation. And that was the first time he ever saw Frank Douglas. And she was not Frank Douglas then, but just a baby, without a name, without a home and, as far he knew, without parents. She lay rolled up in some thin material, and when this was removed by the gentle hands of Miss West, the waif appeared in a long white gown, with no name nor mark upon it. She was about a year old with large blue eyes and golden hair that curled all over the little head. Such a pretty child—and so helpless and appealing, clinging to the old maiden sister as if she recognized in her a sister soul! And there was never a doubt expressed as to whether it would be best to keep the child which had fallen upon their doorstep, as pure and white and almost as cold as the other snowflakes. Miss West pressed the brown curles to her white hair—this was a few days later—and said, "Let us call her Frank Douglas." Now, many years ago, when war was being waged between the North and South, and when Miss West had brown curls of her own, and sweet, fair thoughts that go with brown curls, she was engaged to be married. And his name was Frank Douglas. And she saw him march away one bright morning while the band was playing and flags were flying—such pretty flags, and not at all like flags you see anywhere in these days. It was good to live in those times and hear "Dixie," and know that it meant something more than superfluous breath blown away through musical instruments. And it was good to die in the front rank, feeling that no man could give more for his country while the band still played Dixie and brought to the memory of the dying soldier a sweetheart's proud smile. Many fell with him and his regiment was routed. And at night trenches were dug and men who did not wear grey reverently buried the fallen souldiers who had ceased to be "the enemy." So the maiden in Kentucky learned the truth from one who had seen Frank killed, and she recovered from her long and dangerous illness and lived to be a gentle, sympathetic friend to those who sorrowed. So, when she said, "Let us call her Frank Douglas," her brother kissed her and the baby was named.

Mr. West had no children of his own and he lost his heart to the little stranger. She grew up with laughter and song, bringing life to the darkest corners of the splendid house. And when she wished to please Miss West she would climb into her lap and stroke her white hair and ask to be told about Frank Douglas, for whom she had been named—the man who was the bravest man and the handsomest and the kindest that had ever lived. One night the prayer of the brave Kentucky maiden was answered. When they called her in the morning she did not reply. She had gone to the glorious reunion of the soldiers of the cross. The little child found the house lonely after that till school days came. The housekeeper had gone away and her place had been taken by a man who could cook and who did not like children. There was no more playing at housekeeping in the kitchen for Frank. When she came home from school Mr. West would greet her kindly, then continue his literary work, which consisted in the preparation of a new Latin grammar. She was very proud when she could help him, and in sorting his pages and classifying his work a knowledge of Latin words began to come to her. It never occurred to Mr. West that the girl would get lonely without companions of her own age. She scarcely knew if she was lonely or not, for the school absorbed nearly all her time, and her day dreams were devoted to another subject.

Perhaps a day did not pass after she became ten or eleven years old without some thoughts given to her parents. Was her mother living? Had she a father somewhere in the world? And if both were dead, what kind of people had they been? Was it cruelty that had led them to expose her upon the doorstep in the dead of winter? And why had they selected the home of Mr. West? If they were living, did they know of her? Perhaps she met them in the street; perhaps they sprang behind corners as she approached. Sometimes she fancied a woman was dogging her footsteps, that she had seen a white face vanish in the throng as she suddenly turned. Sometimes she built up a romance of an abduction; she had been stolen from a magnificent home by a wicked nurse, and her rich parents were traveling all over the world searching for their little darling. Again she would picture to herself a mother, driven by dire poverty, to trust her to strangers till she could make enough for her support. And then she would whisper, "Oh, mother, mother! come to me now," and her eyes would be wet with tears. Of course, she loved Mr. West, who was educating her and dressing her so well, but she never felt completely at home with him any more than she did with his Latin grammar. She was a little afraid of both; and she could not think of them apart. When the old gentleman was visited by an exceptional mood of tenderness, he would take her on his knee and say, "Now, Frank, have you forgotten how to conjugate Amo?" Or, "Well, my dear, give us bonus, bona, bonum." And he would pat her head and set her down, saying, "That's good! You'll reach the fourth conjugation in a short time." Whenever he wished to be especially complimentary he would hold out hopes of soon reaching the fourth conjugation.

The only visitor at this mansion was another old gentleman, who had been a schoolmate of Mr. West. It was a minister, whom all called "Brother Wilton," except Mr. West. Mr. West called him "Jack," which sounded strange. Brother Wilton was an old bachelor, who lived in a lodging house and preached in four small towns not far from the city. Once he took Frank with him to one of his appointments. That was a wonderful trip on the train, with a big dinner at a farm house and a walk through the woods in the afternoon. And Brother Wilton seated himself on an old stone wall—nobody knew how it got lost among the oaks and hazel bushes—and, drawing Frank to his side, talked and talked about something the girl had never heard much about. And he gave her a book to read, in which he had marked many verses. Not many weeks after that journey, Frank said suddenly to her patron, "Mr. West, I would like to be a Christian?"

"A what?" demanded Mr. West, who had not heard her last word, and who looked as if he was wondering what declension it was in. Frank repeated her wish. "Oh," said the old gentleman, laying down his manuscript; "yes—well—my sister was. I think it a good plan, my dear."

"Mr. West, are you a Christian?"

"I? No; not yet. Jack is always after me. But who knows some day what I shall be? Yes, I shall be glad for you to be a—to be one, my dear. Come here and let's have something in adjectives of the third declension—anything will do." And when she had finished he said gravely, "What a little woman you are growing to be, Frank! I shall soon have a young lady in the house. I am very glad for you to be a—a Christian. My dear, in a very short time you will be at the fourth conjugation!"

When the grammar was finished—Frank was then thirteen—Mr. West insisted on sharing his honor with her, because, he declared, she had helped him so materially. The title page bore the inscription: "New Latin Grammar. By T. S. West and Frank Douglas." He sent it forth to a Boston publisher, full of confidence. He did not live to receive the letter of rejection. He died as unexpectedly as his sister had died. Brother Wilton took Frank to his lodging house. As soon as she recovered from the shock of her patron's death, she learned that all of Mr. West's property went to a brother in California, who had been estranged from his brother and sister many years. Frank did not own anything, for the grammarian had neglected to make a will, and Frank had not been formally adopted. The California brother came on to St. Louis, but was perfectly unmoved by Brother Wilton's appeal. He allowed to the child her personal property, which consisted of an extensive wardrobe and a few keepsakes. To this the new heir added (not without a sarcastic smile) the manuscript of the new Latin grammar, which came back in due time from Boston. And now the child wondered if her parents would not come forward and claim her. She knew Brother Wilton was a poor man, who was obliged to deny himself in paying her board. But had the minister been wealthy, her spirit of independence would have prevented her from remaining contentedly at his charge. About two months after the death of Mr. West Brother Wilton, in answer to her earnest entreaties, promised to look about and try to find some place for her where she could earn her own support.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE JEWS SAVED BY ESTHER'S PLEA.*

There is perhaps no story in the world's literature that is more full of the dramatic element than the Book of Esther. The rapid succession of events, each happening just at the proper time, resulting in a series of surprises and vindications such as are rarely found, even in fiction, make the book one of surprising interest to the reader. There is a poetic justice in the outcome of events which cannot fail to please the type of mind that desires to see things set right in the end. The rapidity with which the downfall of Haman was accomplished by events which he could not possibly foresee and into which his pride led him to walk with the confident expectation that he was the master of his own fortunes, is perhaps almost without parallel in the stories even of Oriental courts. Mordecai, the quiet and despised Jew, is raised to the same eminence as that formerly occupied by Haman, only with the assurance left on the mind of the reader that he will be able to hold it with a firmer grasp than that enjoyed by his predecessor. The picture of a Jew rising to the highest place in the councils of a great monarch is not solitary in the Book of Esther. Similar had been the fortunes of Joseph at the court of the Pharaohs, and of Moses in a later day, as well as of Daniel in Babylon, and instances of a similar character in modern history have been conspicuous. The Jew, though he has been frequently hated and persecuted, has at the same time, by his qualities of perseverance and sagacity, won the admiration of unprejudiced humanity and displayed those qualities of executive ability which have given him a right to a foremost place, not only in the commercial world, but in the sphere of literature and statesmanship as well.

This lesson illustrates forcibly the thought that "the evil that men do lives after them." Here was a situation which called for the greatest anxiety on the part of Mordecai and Esther, the two persons who alone possessed the ability to safeguard the interests of their race. Haman was dead, hanged on the same gallows which he had prepared for Mordecai. There was nothing, therefore, left to fear from him; and still his hand seemed stretched from the grave in menace of the lives and fortunes of that whole race which he had doomed to extinction as the satisfaction of his vengeance against one of its representatives. How often is this the case in life! It is not alone that which a man does in the circle of his own acquaintance and in his own lifetime which works for evil, but frequently a line of unrighteous conduct sets in motion influences which are far-reaching, both in territorial extent and in point of time. No man can measure the outgo of his own life, either for good or for evil. No man lives to himself; no man dies to himself. We are part of a composite organism called society, and it is impossible for any one of us to live a strictly individual life. Even the man who shuts himself away from his fellows has by that very action sent out influences of an unbrotherly and unsocial character which contribute in their measure to the unhappiness of the world. That power which he might have used for good he has withheld, even if he has not done positive injury. Even our thoughts of others are freighted with good or ill to them. One does not need actively to injure his fellowmen. He can produce almost as great results by constant evil thoughts that go out in lines which neither he nor others understand, and yet which tear away from the life fabric of the men and women about him of whom he thinks evil. There is no life that is without its influence upon all other lives; and this our science and psychology are teaching us daily.

It is, therefore, necessary for Esther and Mordecai to mend the evil which Haman had wrought by his vindictive decree. They went accordingly to the king with their petition that he would reverse the edict which Haman had promulgated by his authority. Modecai's presence is not mentioned in the first instance, but it is apparent from the words later on that he was with Esther at the time. They were received favorably, as Esther had been when she went first to her royal master with her petition for her own life. But the king assured them that he was unable to do anything in the way of reversing the royal edict, since that was contrary to the customs of the kingdom. He had no suggestions to make further than to give them permission to do what they could in his name, and he left it to them to devise what methods they might for the safety of their people. This seems to have been all that Mordecai desired. He was a man of resources and instantly set to work to counteract the effect of Haman's policy. It was already the third month and no time was to be lost, though it was not until the close of the year that the decree was to take effect. Word was instantly sent to all the provinces giving the Jews the privilege of assembling, arming themselves and resisting the exeution of the former edict. Those swift steeds which constituted the means for transporting the royal messages along the highways, which were the wonder of the world even in that early age, were the means by which Mordecai achieved the early reversal of feeling on the part of his people. Full permission was given them to use their power in self-defence. It appeaes that the Jewish people had made a favorable impression upon their fellow-countrymen and probably nothing but the hatred of Haman could have stirred up any feeling of antagonism to them. This friendliness appears in the favor with which Mordecai was received as he went forth from the palace clothed in the gorgeous insignia of his office. There was probably an air of romantic glamour about him, owing to the course of recent events. It was enough that any man should be the favorite of the king to insure him popularity with the multitude, but when that favorite had come to his power by a series of dramatic events which seemed to select him from comparative obscurity and lift him to the highest pinnacle of power, the public interest was raised to a high pitch. The former decree had been received with silence and apprehension in the city. This one was hailed with rejoicing everywhere. The Jews themselves used the occasion for feasting and merry-making throughout the kingdom, and upon the facts of this memorable occasion it was said the feast of Purim was fonnded. The effect of these events was further seen in the adoption of Judaism by many of the people of the kingdom. They felt that the poetic justice which had been done a scattered and disesteemed people was proof of a divine force in their lives, a kindly providence watching over their interests which made it worth while to be identified with them.

The book closes with the execution of the second decree and the defence which the Jewish people made of their lives and their property. If there appears to be an unnecessary element of satisfaction on the part of the writer in his description of the number slain by the Jewish people or his statements regarding Esther's desire to see justice done even to a greater extent than was at first planned, it must be set down to the Jewish feeling of resentment which was the result of centuries of oppression at the hands of other nations, and which unfortunately has been perpetuated to too great an extent in the centurtes and among nations in which Christianity was supposed to be the dominant element. We are evidently not yet out of the circle of that narrowness and race prejudice which condemns the Jew to social ostracism and judicial injustice. But we may believe that when the Christian spirit has had opportunity to manifest itself more fully, there will be the recognition of his true place in history and an appreciation of the immeasurable contributions which he has made to the world's life and thought, the greatest of which on the side of the flesh was the gift through a long line of ancestry of that supreme life which is the expression of God in terms of humanity and the realization of the highest ideal of the children of men.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 15.

LOST OPPORTUNITIES.

(Jer. 8:20; Matt. 23:31-39; Heb. 12:17.)

Those are sad words, "It might have been!" When the summer of harvesting is over, when the hay lies blackening in the rain, when the grain is blasted by the frost, it must be sad to think of what that harvest might have been. "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved!" Sermons have been preached from that text which are like the wail of a lost soul. Do they speak the feeling of any of us, Endeavorers? For most of us the harvest is still yellowing in the sunshine. Let no years go by, no days, without doing our best.

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun Views from thy hand no worthy action done."

Jesus stood one day on the mountain overlooking Jerusalem and lamented the refusal of that beautiful city to follow him. He would have gathered them tenderly as a hen her chickens, to enfold and warm them to new life. They refused, and desolate was left their house. In the old days they had embraced the opportunity of maintaining the faith in the one true God; but in these latter years they lost the opportunity of exalting the manifestation of that God, the Son, who should win the world. Jesus stands before us to-day to choose or to reject. Yes, we who have nominally chosen him — it is ours to choose again. The choice is progressive, successive, continuous. A single choice, once and for all, will not do. Do we choose him daily? If not, we are losing our opportunity; our candlestick shall be removed.

Esau was fainting and hungry. Short-sighted, he thought his life depended on the immediate supply of food. He sold a great opportunity, the elder brother's place and possibilities, for the moment's gratification. When the momet had gone his heart sank. He sought restoration, but the chance was gone. An error of judgment, you say? Yes, but a foolish error of judgment, backed up by a fleshly appetite, sometimes destroys a life of responsibility, honor and worth. Then comes repentance; but it is too late. The faces of mankind are averted; the opportunity for great usefulness is gone. The five virgins were merely foolish—an error of judgment was theirs—but the chance was lost. We may pity them, and want to help them. Perhaps we can help them, and certainly God will; but no one can restore their lost opportunity.

O, what a responsibility is an opportunity! How quickly it must be siezed, for it depends upon time and tide, both of which do not wait. The successful man, the successful Christian, is the one who sees opportunities and never lets them slip. It is said that the only thing worth while that you can give a young person is a chance. You can't give him an education. You can give him a chance to get one. It depends on him alone to embrace the opportunity.

After all, it is not ours to sit down helplessly, as Esau, when once we have lost our opportunity. Weep? Yes, cry over spilt milk. It's a good thing, and may help not to spill any more. But while weeping, do not allow tears to blind you to other opportunities which are constantly appearing. Peep through the tears. Grasp the next occasion. Two or three lessons are enough for a wise person; and a few mistakes need not ruin a life.

Literature.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

If the Ladies' Home Journal for October does not prove to be one of the most popular editions in its history it will certainly not be the fault of its contents and make-up. The articles are about as popular as can well be found in range of a popular home journal, and the illustrations are profuse and fine. It is difficult to see how a person could find more good literature in good taste and form for the money than is contained in the Ladies' Home Journal.

The Saturday Evening Post of Philadelphia has been enlarged from a sixteen to twenty-four-page weekly magazine with a double number every fourth week. The fall fiction number, now out, is in handsome cover with thirty-two pages of short stories and entertaining articles by well-known and popular writers, and all, too, at the old price. There are few more entertaining and readable papers published, if any, than the Saturday Evening Post.

The October number of Pall Mall contains several articles of exceptional interest to American readers. That of "The American Language," by William Archer, and of "The Peace Society," by Dr. Darby, are of the articles of exceptional interest to American readers. In addition to these and other leading articles this number of Pall Mall contains its usual selection of interesting stories, illustrated poems, etc.

Of the very interesting articles in the Atlantic for October that by Henry D. Sedgwick, Jr., will be of unusual interest to the religious world. In this article Mr. Sedgwick discusses the future relations of the United States and Rome, pointing out that all religious denominations now appear to be gravitating together, and that Rome as a church universal, the church of the poor and the multitude, may yet exercise a controlling influence over our people and our destiny.

The October number of Self Culture presents a fine spread for the hungry intellect. The themes treated are of both general and special interest, according to the taste of the reader, and the illustrations are fine. The plates have a clearness unsurpassed by any other magazine. Among the leading topics discussed we mention "Liquid Air," "The Truth About the Philippines," "The Omaha Congress," "Shall Franchises be Taxed?" "Johns Hopkins University" and others of equal prominence and importance.

The complete novel in the New Lippincott is called "Love Across the Lines," by Harry Stillwell Edwards. It is a story of the war in Virginia, in the vein of Captain King, but with a difference. A unique marriage ceremony in a dark room between a man and woman who meet then for the first time opens the story, and the original and ingenious plot develops a climax so convincingly related that the reader spontaneously laughs and weeps with the heroine in her joy and misery. It is a strong story from a pen which has already won applause in short fiction.

The arrival of Admiral Dewey in New York almost simultaneously with the appearance of the Century for October gives to Rear-Admiral Sampson's hearty tribute, therein, to the hero of Manila special significance. This number of the Century closed its 58th volume, and with it ends also a number of its serial articles, but not all. Captain Slocum's interesting account of his circumnavigation of the globe in a forty-foot sloop, of which the second installment appears in this number, happily links the old and the new volume. The entire contents of this number are up to the Century's record for timeliness, variety, and interest.

IN your experience with White Lead have you ever been troubled with cracked, pulled or alligatored surfaces, or have you ever heard of such trouble in the use of White Lead?

Never; and these conditions were never known until the introduction of zinc white, "combination lead," and ready-mixed paints, the two last composed largely of zinc, barytes, whiting, etc., very little lead, if any.

Among the many interesting articles in Frank Leslie's Popular Magazine for October is one on "Liquified Air and its Uses," by Geo. H. Johnson, that cannot fail to be of deep interest to the inquiring mind. More light is thrown upon the present and probable uses of liquid air in this article than has yet appeared in print. Like all new inventions, vain things are imagined about it, but this article helps the reader to a reasonably practical basis for the future of liquid air. This number of Frank Leslie's is an unusually good one in the class and variety of its subjects.

Good short stories abound in the October number of Scribner's magazine. There are two of Joel Chandler Harris's amusing "Minervy Ann" stories; there is another O'Connor tale by W. H. Browne; a new writer, Judson Knox, tells a story of the humanizing of a bank-teller (illustrated); Brander Matthews contributes "In the Small Hours," and Quiller-Couch's serial rapidly approaches its dramatic climax. The frontispiece is especially noteworthy as a beautiful specimen of delicate printing. The wonders of "Telephotography," a new development in photography, by Dwight L. Elmendorf, will not fail to excite the admiration of all lovers of this art.

"Arabia: The Cradle of Islam," is the title of a unique article in the October number of the Missionary Review of the World. The author is Samuel M. Zwemer, F. R. G. S, the well-known missionary pioneer in that peninsula of the false prophet, and he writes fully and graphically of the country, the people and their religion, and the missionary work. A good map and several fine illustrations contribute much toward making this description of especial value. Other articles on Islam deal with "The Future of Turkey," "Pratestant Churches in Constantinople" and "A Mohammedan View of the Mohammedan World." "Medical Missions" has also a large place in the Review this month.

The Chautauquan, heretofore published at Meadville, Pa., is now published by the Chautauqua Press, the bureau of publication of the Chautauquan Assembly, whose offices have been concentrated at Cleveland, O. The October issue, beginning Vol. XXX, bears a new sub title, "A Magazine for Self Education," which indicates the broadened scope of this long established and successful publication. The new editor is Frank Chapin Bray, formerly of the Literary Digest, of New York City. The new cover is designed by the art editor, Lewis Buddy, Jr. Some original type-faces, a dress of "Century" type, innovations in make-up, and increased illustration mark the change of administration.

BONDURANT.

A. C. Bondurant, of Bondurant, Iowa, was born in Sangamon County, Ill., Sept. 1, 1829; died at his home Sept. 16, 1899. The cause of his death was heart disease, which gave, as usual, little warning of its fatal work. Since 1857 Bro. Bondurant lived in the same vicinity. His homestead was purchased from the government and was increased to about two thousand acres at the time of his decease. In 1861 Miss Martha M. Brooks became his wife, who has shared the confidence and good fortune of her devoted husband. Their household was blessed by three sons and five daughters, two of whom preceded the father into the silent land. Bro. Bondurant was a man of deep concern for the welfare of others and he gave liberally to charities, temperance, the church and education. For many years he has been untiring as a Christian, working with his great heart and strong will to make life safe from temptation in his community. No liquor could be sold in the town bearing his name. He was a donor to Drake University, an ardent friend and honored trustee of that institution. The funeral services were held at the church, attended by throngs of people bowed under personal bereavement. By request the writer conducted the services, assisted by Bro. Vail and Chancellor Craig. "He served his generation by the will of God." A great man has gone to his reward. God bless his memory.

I. N. McCash.

COLDASURE.

Mrs. Isabel Jones Coldasure, wife of Arthur Coldasure, was born near Xenia, Ill., Aug. 1, 1872; died Dec. 12, 1898. She leaves husband, two children, parents, sister and numerous other relatives and friends to mourn her loss. She united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church when quite young, but became a charter member of Oak Mound congregation nine years ago and lived a consecrated, consistent Christian life. She was one of the enthusiastic leaders of the congregation and will be greatly missed, but our loss is her gain, as the consolation of the Apostle Paul was hers also: "I have fought a good fight; . . . . . therefore there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." We have one more treasure above. Funeral services were conducted by C. A Burton, Benton, Ill. W. J. Battenfield.

COLDASURE.

Chester William, son of Arthur and Isabel Caldasure, was born near Xenia, Ill., March 9th, 1895 and died Sept. 20th, 1899. He was bereft of mother last winter and leaves father, brother, grandparents and great-grandparents besides numerous other relatives to mourn their loss. Sad indeed that one so young should be taken, but his friends have the Christian's hope of a grand reunion beyond this vale of tears. Funeral services were conducted by the writer at Oak Mound Church.

GILCREST.

Father Thomas C. Gilcrest departed this life Sept. 4, 1899, having passed the threshold of his 88th year. At the time of his death he was sojourning at the home of his daughter in Blue Springs, Nebraska. He was baptized into Christ by Alexander Campbell in the spring of 1831, and had lived a Christian constantly and consistently for nearly 70 years. He had kept the faith, and for a long time was anxious, the Lord willing, to lay down the burden of years. He was "always confident and willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." An extended and appropriate memorial will be prepared in due time for family and friends.

R. A. Gilcrest.

Eureka, Ill.

HAYDEN.

Miss Jane S Thompson was born in Trigg County, Ky., Dec. 23rd, 1810. In about the year 1834 she united with the Christian Church. She was united in marriage to Turner R. Hayden, Feb. 28, 1837. In 1838 she and her husband came to Illinois and settled in Macoupin County, where she lived, with the exception of a few years, up to the time of her death, which occurred at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Isaacs, near New Douglass, on the 23rd of the present month. Grandma was a very devoted Christian, loved and honored by all who knew her. It was my privilege to know her more than 20 years, and in all that time I never heard an unkind word spoken by her nor of her. She leaves to mourn their loss two daughters—Mrs. Jas. E. Masters and Mrs. Henry Isaacs—10 grandchildren, 10 great grandchildren and a large circle of friends. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, after which she was buried by the side of her husband near Dorchester. W. H. Groner.

Litchfield, Ill.

MORGAN.

On August 8th little May Morgan departed this life at the early age of six years. She has gone to be a lamb of the upper fold, and our loss is her gain. The writer preached the funeral sermon. S. A. Strawn.

Owosso, Mich.

MURNER.

Little Earl Almond Murner, after a battle for life, died Sept. 18th. He was five weeks old and the first born. May the good Lord speak peace to the sorrowing hearts of the parents, who so tenderly and lovingly tried to save the little one from the touch of the cold, icy hand. And may they realize that while they cannot call him back, they can go to him.

S. A. Strawn.

Owosso, Mich.

NEELY.

The Reverend George W. Neely, one of the pioneers of the religious denomination known as the Christians, has just passed away at his home in Bower, N. C., at the ripe age of 72 years. His wife survives him and he leaves three children, Mrs. Walter R. Houghton, of Connersville, Ind., A. C. Neely, of Chicago, and F. Tennyson Neeley, the publisher, of New York. Like other pioneers in religious organizations he was a man remarkable for energy and endurance. To work every day far into the night on his farm and then walk a score of miles on Sunday, preaching and visiting the sick and needy was to him no task worthy of comment or notice. It is claimed by those who knew of his ceaseless energy that he organized on his own responsibility more independent churches than any other home missionary in America. His work extends over the entire Southwest, and covers a period of 50 years. The sternness of the stuff he was made of is illustrated by his uncompromising enmity to slavery. Although he was of a slaveholding family, he braved the social ostracism and personal danger through until the slave was free. Notwithstanding this course on the vital question of slavery, he continued to live in the land of his birth, and by his unimpeachable character won back the love and respect of his countrymen. The telegram announcing his death found Mr. A. C. Neeley seriously ill at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, but Mr. F. Tennyson Neeley, of New York, was able to respond promptly to the call for his presence at the last rites of his father. The deceased had been suffering several years from a stroke of paralysis, but the end came suddenly from apoplexy. F. Tennyson Neely.

Chicago, Ill.

SHIRE.

On Aug. 18th the little six days-old infant of Sister Julia Shire, of this city, passed away. He who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," took the little one unto himself to spend eternity in the summerland of bliss, where pain and sorrow never comes.

S. A. Strawn.

Owosso, Mich.

TOWNSEND.

On Aug. 18th, 1899, the writer was called upon to preach the funeral discourse of one of the charter members of the Christian Church of this city, Sister Mary Townsend. Sister Townsend had been a member of the church for 60 years. She was a good neighbor, a devoted mother, a loving wife and a faithful Christian. "Blessed be the dead who die in the Lord." S. A. Strawn.

Owosso, Mich.

WINTERS.

Mrs. J. M. Winters was born in Henry County, Ky., and died at Hannibal, Mo., Sept. 20, 1899, aged 42 years. She leaves husband and five children who will miss her counsel, cheer and wise direction of a well-ordered home in which Christian love in a mother's heart was the special binding tie. She was a patient sufferer for many months, but she endured the storm of pain and trials until her disciplined soul passed into the haven of rest. A very large attendance at the funeral services showed the esteem in which she was held. She was a faithful member of the Christian Church. Levi Marshall.

New England Echoes.

The work of the Lord accomplished by the Disciples of Christ in New England is progressing. Allow me to present a "bird's-eye view" for your excellent paper. At Danbury, Conn., the growth of the church is constant under the efficient leadership of Bro. E. Jay Teagarden. Confessions and additions are regular. The church in Boston is increasing in spiritual power and numbers under the leadership of Bro. J. H. Mohorter. Occasional conversions, baptisms and accessions are had, and wandering sheep of the Lord are gathered into the fold.

Bro. T. G. Picton assumed charge of church interests at Everett, Mass., only recently, as successor to Eld. R. H. Bolton. The church is struggling to complete a chapel. When once it is ready for occupancy we look for a reformation and special increase.

At Haverhill, Mass., Bro. E. M. Flinn, pastor, is laboring acceptably with a band of most excellent Disciples. The pastor is off on a vacation, and Eld. R. H. Bolton is supplying his pulpit during his absence. The church is in a good working condition.

Bro. E. F. Randall is minister at Swampscott, Mass. Work is moving forward steadily with fair prospects of growth.

Bro. G. A. Reinl is holding the fort at Brockton, Mass., and enjoys regular increase to the church. Outlook encouraging.

Worcerter Church, with Bro. R. A. Nichols, pastor, recently closed a tent meeting with encouraging success. Besides conversions and additions, the brother enjoyed the blessed privilege of speaking to the hundreds of people on the plea of the churches of Christ, with satisfactory results. The erection of a second house of worship is under consideration, where the tent meeting was held. The work here is aggressive.

The church at Springfield, Mass., under the pastorate of Bro. E. C. Davis, is in a beautiful, growing condition. Initial steps are being taken for the erection of a house of worship. Accessions to the church are occasional. Our vivacious Bro. S. M. Hunt is a good helper in this church.

Bro. Wilmer Monro, pastor at Bridgeport, Conn., reports encouragingly of the work in said city.

Bro. R. H. Bolton publishes the New England Messenger, semi-monthly, at Chelsea, Mass., where he has located. He preaches here in missions occasionally and, as such has baptized eight believers in Christ. Aside from this he does pulpit supply work.

Bro. R. E. Jope reports good interest in the work at South Gardiner, Me. They look forward for a reformation and special ingathering.

The church at Gardiner, Me., is pastorless; but few of the faithful ones left there.

The church at Albion, Me., has for its pastor Bro. Chas. Drake, who we learn is afflicted. Good brethren live here.

At East Holden, Me., Bro. H. Mills has been preaching the gospel with good results. People heard, believed and were baptized. Recently, while the elder was from home holding meetings, his house was burned to ashes, wherein he lost nearly everything he possessed. Hence, financially he is in straitened circumstances.

At Lubec, Me., for many years Bro. Harry Minnick held the fort, laboring at Lubec, and South and North Lubec, with most encouraging results. But we regret to learn that the good brother has tendered his resignation. He cannot be spared from our ranks without great lo ss. Hope he may reconsider and canc his resignation.

Bro. Winfield Thornton accomplished a good work at Princeton, Me., but recently tendered his resignation. This is unfortunate, as he is a good and useful brother.

East Machias at present without a regular pastor.

Bro. Houston held meetings of late in Bangor, Me., resulting in confessions and bap tisms.

Manton, R. I., is without a pastor, but the church is holding worship and are praying and hoping for better and more prosperous times.

We need a good and strong worker in the state of Maine, as good openings prevail for successful work, and especially among the people of God known as Free Christians and Churches of God. There is no good reason why we should not all be one body in Christ Jesus. A desire for unity on Bible principles prevails there.

The following young brethren have gone to Hiram College, Ohio, to prepare themselves for the work of the gospel ministry, all of whom are of good promise, to wit: Charles Brumingham and Elijah Rainor, of Worcester; George Woodbury, of Haverhill, and H. W. C. Ainsley, of Boston, Mass.

The Boston Evangelical Alliance was recently held in Boston. There were several hundred ministers present. Dr. Corimer presided, who gave us an interesting address, with reference to his recent visit and labors in England. Besides, a Hawaiian, a Boer and an Englishman each delivered an address. The happy union manifested between the Englishman and Boer was clearly manifest. One in Christ, their desires and prayers were for love and unity. The Englishman, Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell, of Rochdale, England, delivered a fine address on "Church Federation in England and America."

While we write these lines the International Congregational Council is in session at Tremont Temple, Boston. It comprises a very large gathering of distinguished Congregationalists from America, England, Japan, Australia and many others parts of the world. As it is a delegate convention it of course includes the most cultured minds of the Congregational Churches. It is a grand mental feast to listen to those cultured minds and towering intellects, of which a number are present. It is, in a degree, to the Congregationalists what the Jubilee Convention will be to the Disciples of Christ. Tremont Temple accommodates about 3,000. The temple is filled at each session, and at times overflow meetings are held.

Next, the Biennial Convention of the Universalist Church will be held in Boston. It will assemble October 20-25. Universalists are numerous in New England, hence the assemblage will be a large one.

Quite a stir prevailed among the people when a Brigham Young Mormon elder preached on "Boston Common." The mayor of the city granted a permit, later revoked it, then later granted it again. The feeling against polygamous Mormons is rising, and protests against Mormon teaching here has arisen to fever heat, and special opposition is awakened to the seating of Mr. Roberts in the United States Congress. Will our congressmen have backbone enough to expell this polygamous congressman?

A good delegation will go from New England to the Jubilee Convention.

Glad to learn that ye editor, Bro. Garrison, has recuperated, and is invigorated and strengthened for his editorial duties. May he long live to bless the church and humanity.

Washing Crocks and Milk Vessels.

A great deal depends upon the care of crocks or pans in which milk is kept. They should be washed as soon as possible after being used. Rinse first with cold water, then wash thoroughly inside and out with hot water, in which enough of Gold Dust Washing Powder has been dissolved to make a good suds. Finish by rinsing with scalding water; wipe dry and set out, with right side up, in the fresh air and sunshine, and they will be clean and sweet.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

Wonders of the Sky

BY W. J. RUSSELL.

82 pages. Bound in beautiful illuminated cloth .....$ .50

This book leads the mind of the reader to contemplate the beauty, grandeur, sublimity and wonders of the heavens, directing them to a better understanding of the universe, and greater reverence for the Creator. The subject is treated, not from a scientific standpoint, but is presented in a popular style calculated to be easily understood by readers, both adults and the young.

The author of this book has looked reverently and thoughtfully into this olded volume of God's Revelation and states in a clear and eloquent way some of the facts anr truths which he has learned in this charming little book.—Extract from Introduction by J. H. Garrison.

One good feature about this book is that it is brief, yet its pages are crammed full of interesting information and inspiring thoughts.—PROF. G. P. COLER, Ann Arbor, Mich.

W. J. Russell is thoroughly conversant with astronomical literature, yet the magnitude of the study has been cleverly constructed by the author into simple, earnest language that cannot fail to entertain as well as instruct.—Daily Telegraph, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Military operations in the Philippine Islands, which for some time have been held back on account of the rainy season, are again becoming active. During the past week there have been several skirmishes with the Filipinos, resulting, as usual, favorable to the American forces. During the rainy season, which has not yet ended, the Filipinos have been pressing back into some of the towns and country from which they had been driven, but from these they are easily dislodged and their cities recaptured. Their leader, Aguinaldo, has recently been making several overtures to General Otis looking toward a cessation of hostilities, but inasmuch as General Otis will hearken to nothing short of an unconditional surrender, these overtures have come to naught. Another thing that Aguinaldo has been trying for some time, but with no better success, is to obtain the recognition of belligerency in the islands on the part of some nation, but he has yet to find the nation willing to assume the responsibility of the attitude that such a declaration would involve. In the meantime the new enlistments of American soldiers are beginning to arrive at Manila, so that by the time the rainy season is ended the United States will have a strong force in the islands, and the purpose of the administration is to crush the insurgent army as quickly as possible. To this end, under the advice of Admiral Dewey, it is announced that the navy at Manila will be strengthened by additional warships, so that the insurgents may be wholly deprived of aid from without the islands. The new Secretary of War is fully in accord with the administration in these aggressive measures by sea and by land, and we may expect to hear of rapid results before the close of the year in our Asiatic domain.

The President and his Cabinet left Washington City on Wednesday, October 4, for a tour into the Northwest as far as the Dakotas. The itinerary of the presidental party, as given in the Chicago Record, is as follows: From Washington to Canton, O., where he met and shook hands with W. J. Bryan, his competitor for the presidential chair in 1896. From Canton he went by way of Akron, Fostoria, Fort Wayne, Logansport, Decatur, Springfield, Quincy, Peoria and Galesburg to Chicago, where he spent Sunday. At Quincy he visited the Soldiers' Home, participating in some of the exercises. At Peoria he attended the dedication of the soldiers' monument, and on Saturday morning delivered an address incident to the anniversary of the Lincoln-Douglas debate. From Chicago on Tuesday he goes to Evansville, Ind., to attend a reunion of the blue and the gray. Returning to Chicago, he then goes to Minneapolis and St. Paul, in time for the welcome to be extended to the Thirteenth Minnesota Volunteers. From St. Paul the party will proceed to West Superior, Wis.; Duluth, Minn.; Fargo, N. D., on the afternoon of the 13th, where the North Dakota Volunteers will be reviewed, to Aberdeen, S. D., where, on the 14th, the volunteers of that state will be welcomed by the President. Then the trip will extend to Sioux Falls and Yankton, S. D.; Sioux City and Dubuque, Ia.; Galena, Ill., and Madison and Waukesha, Wis. On the 16th Milwaukee will be reached, and on the morning of the 17th a start will be made for Racine and Kenosha, Wis., Waukegan, Ill., Kalamazoo, Mich., and Cleveland, O. On the 18th the party will leave Cleveland in the afternoon, and proceed to Warren, Niles and Youngstown, where at the latter place the President will attend the wedding of his nephew. The President will return to Washington October 19 or 20. His Sunday in Chicago was a busy day. He attended church three times. The President has made but few addresses as yet in his tour, but at all the points named he was greeted with enthusiastic crowds of people.

The gravest feature of the situation in South Africa is the calling out of the army reserves on the part of Great Britain and the summoning of Parliament. These orders have set all the wheels of the government machinery in motion in preparation for war. Meanwhile, the Boers, who have assembled in large numbers near the border, have some of them retired for lack of proper support. It is said that the Boers have orders from their commanders not to fire upon the British until they are attacked. It is probable that the British soldiers have received the same instructions, and hence no hostilities have occurred as yet. Since, however, it is a strip of only eight miles that separates six thousand Boers from the British troops, it is not improbable that hostilities may be opened any day. In spite of these warlike preparations on both sides there is a manifest disposition to avoid war if any honorable way can be found by which it can be done. If there were some opportunity by which a better understanding could be reached, war might be averted, even yet. A correspondent of the London Times telegraphs from South Africa, after traveling incognito among the Boers, that "if they could be persuaded that England does not desire to undermine their independence, peace might be possible, but they call you a fool if you make such a statement." President Steyn, of the Free State, is exerting his efforts in behalf of peace and has requested British authorities to stay the increase and movements of troops until there is further opportunity to test what can be done by diplomacy, but he claims that this request has not been heeded and that he is deeply impressed with the danger of delay. Petitions have been circulated urging the President to extend the good offices of this government in behalf of peace, but the President will, perhaps, feel indisposed to take any action of this kind unless he has some assurance that it will be acceptable to both parties. There is still room for hope that war may be averted, but the probabilities seem to be, at present, that the issues will have to be decided upon the battlefield.

One of the knotty problems to be settled in the Philippines is the disposition to be made of the large amount of church property held by the Roman Catholic Church and various Catholic orders. It is reported that Archbishop Chapelle is going to the Philippines for the purpose of acting as trustee for this church property which, it is estimated, amounts to twenty million dollars. Before the American occupation of the islands, this property was vested in the crown of Spain and passed with the archipelago into the possession of the United States. It is said to be the purpose of the administration to turn this property over to the Catholic Church through Archbishop Chapelle, who will act as trustee for its administration according to the custom of the Catholic Church of this country. It is further stated, however, that the government will take into consideration the just needs of the monasteries and will see to it that their holdings are reduced to proper proportions. There is, we judge, room here for the exercise of great caution and wisdom lest we perpetuate in the Philippines a part of that oppression against which the Filipinos rebelled against Spain. The scaling down of the amount of property to be held by these Catholic institutions should hardly be left to the Catholic authorities in this country if this government would avoid cause of just complaint from the people of those islands.

The recent rise in the price of cotton has turned the tide of prosperity toward the South which, on account of the low price at which its staple crop has been held for the past few years, has not been able to rejoice with the remainder of the country. It is estimated by the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record, which is said to be very reliable statistical authority, that fully one hundred million dollars will be added to the South's income from this increase in the price of cotton. All parts of the country will rejoice in this prosperity of the Southern region. It is to be hoped, however, that this advance in the price of cotton will not prevent the movement which has already begun in that region in the direction of a greater variety of crops. The wisest friends of the South have for many years advised the people of that section not to "put all their eggs in one basket;" or, in other words, not to rely wholly on cotton as the source of their prosperity. The South has a soil and a climate capable of producing a variety of products, and by diversifying its crops it can avoid that general depression which results from a failure in the one crop.

The two events of note during the President's stay in Chicago was the laying of the corner stone, of the new Federal Building in the presence of an immense throng of people, and the banquet in the Auditorium, at which among the distinguished guests present were Vice-President Don Ignacio Marical, of Mexico, and Premier Willford Laurier, of Canada. President McKinley's speech upon this occasion was devoted chiefly to the growth, wealth and stability of the nation. But the greater interest seemed to center in Premier Laurier's address because of the dispute between Canada and the United States over a section of the Alaskan boundary and his personal part therein. The Premier spoke with great freedom and was frequently and warmly applauded. He lamented the dispute but thinks an Anglo-American war an impossibility. He says that the word is not even to be pronounced. "The very idea is abhorrent to us." He emphasized the ties of blood between the two nations and plead for a closer unity of action in all matters of common interest. The following paragraph near the close of his speech elicited great applause: "Can we not hope that if ever the banners of England and the banners of the United States are again to meet on the battlefield, they shall meet entwined together in the defense of some holy cause, in the defense of holy justice, for the defense of the oppressed, for the enfranchisement of the down trodden and for the advancement of liberty, progress and civilization." The speech of Mexico's vice-president was also in a happy vein, abounding in assurances of good will toward the United States and of unity in common interests. "Providence," he said, "made us neighbors and our common interests require that we be intimate friends."

W. J. Bryan, whose physical endurance, at public speaking during the campaign of 1896, was a matter of astonishment to the world, and who has been in constant demand for speeches for the past two months, has at last succumbed to the wear and tear of the labor upon his throat and lungs, for a season at least. While at Webster City, Iowa, last Saturday, his throat and lungs became severely affected and he had to recall his announcements for further addresses until he recovers. He had been making two and three speeches a day frequently for some weeks and was scheduled for as many speeches daily for a tour throughout Iowa, Kentucky and Ohio, this month, but may not now be able to fill these engagements, as the physician who attended him in Webster City, Iowa, has recommended a long rest for his distinguished patient. The probabilities, however, are that he will soon recuperate and be in the field again. A man of such energy and power of endurance as Col. Bryan has shown usually recovers rapidly from such attacks.

AN OPEN LETTER.

TO THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, IN JUBILEE CONVENTION ASSEMBLED:

Dear Mother of all our Missionary Organizations and Activities: We send you hearty greetings and congratulations upon this our fiftieth anniversary of your birth. While your children are gathered by the thousands in Jubilee Convention at the place of your birth, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST takes occasion to express its high appreciation of your past service and to offer a few words of encouragement and suggestion. You are yet a young matron, having by no means attained maturity, and with fine promise of a long and useful life yet before you. It is for this reason that we feel so deeply interested in you. We are grateful, not only for what you have done in the past, but for what you give promise of doing in the years to come. Suffer, therefore, these words of affectionate cnngratulation and suggestion.

You have come up through great tribulation. Even your birth was not hailed with universal acclamations of joy. There were those then, as there are those now, who doubted your right to exist. But in fullness of time you came. Your coming was a necessity. The times demanded it. The leading men of the times among us required it. There was a yearning for closer fellowship and co-operation in the work of evangelization than had hitherto been realized. There was an inappeasible desire among the advocates of the new Reformation to join hearts and hands in the great co-operative work for carrying out the mandate of the risen Lord in publishing the glad tidings among all nations. And so you were born. And sages and patriarchs among us rejoiced that they had lived to see your day and to give you welcome.

But yours, dear Mother, has been a checkered career! As already indicated, your advent was not welcomed by all, and many others were indifferent to your claims. You have been compelled, for many years, to stand open-eyed and heart-burdened before the magnitude of the world's need with empty hands, unable to minister to the spiritual hunger of the millions in our own and other lands. But you did not despise the day of small things. You did what you could. You accepted such offerings as were entrusted to your care, and with them you have made a record of good deeds of which you need not be ashamed. You have been faithful in a few things, and it is but proper that you should be made ruler over many things. You have not been found wanting in the days of doubt and discouragement, and we expect you to prove equally faithful in administering the larger trusts that henceforth are to be committed to your care.

We congratulate you that you have lived to see better days. On this, your fiftieth anniversary, your sons and your daughters have come from afar to rejoice with you and to bid you Godspeed in your future work. You have outlived most of your enemies. Few there be now to deny you the right of a place to live and an opportunity to work for the world's redemption. The door of opportunity never opened so widely before you as it does to-day. The churches salute you! Their ministers salute you! The Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies salute you! All state and district organizations for missionary work salute you! They recognize in you their cherishing mother. As you have given life to them they feel it their obligation and privilege to impart increased life to you for your great and growing work.

These are intended to be words of encouragement. Now, dear old Mother Society, will you permit us, humbly and respectfully, to add a few words of admonition and advice? You are not under any obligations to accept them except as they may commend themselves to your sober wisdom. At one time in your history, when you were much weaker than you are now, having fewer friends and more enemies, you hesitated about taking up the work of Foreign Missions; so much so that godly men. who desired to carry out the full commission of their Master and "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," formed an independent society for the foreign work. But this was a part of the work for which you were brought into existence. But, at the period mentioned, you did not receive sufficient encouragement from your children and from you friends to undertake this larger work. We do not blame you for this now. Whatever blame is due to any one attaches to those who had no eyes to see, no ears to hear and no hearts to respond to the Macedonian calls that were coming to us from foreign shores. But time has changed all this. Your children now believe, not only in missions at home, but in missions abroad. They are all engaged in this work. It is one work. Would it not be well, therefore, for you to ask once more to be entrusted with the work of carrying out the whole commission in preaching the gospel to all lands? The suggestion is thrown out for what it is worth.

Pardon another suggestion. Get as close to the churches as possible. The Christian congregations all over this land are your natural supporters. Your reliance in the future must be in close alliance with them. Their spiritual growth and edification means your prosperity. The larger representation you can have from these churches n your great conventions the better will it will be for both you and them. The sooner, n our judgment, you can feel able to dispense with annual and life memberships and directorships and rely directly upon the churches for their free-will offerings, intelligently and conscientiously made, the better we believe it will be for all concerned. This expedient may have been necessary at one time in your history, but it is at least worth while to raise the question whether it is any longer necessary or even advisable. There is a widespread disposition among your most generous supporters to make individual offerings through the congregations to which they respectfully belong. This we believe to be right. This will have a tendency to encourage the churches and enlist a larger proportion of the membership in the offerings. Foster the idea that the churches are carrying on this missionary work and that a missionary society is only a method by which they do the work.

Once more and finally: Make your appeal to the conscience! Rely upon the education of the churches. Let your methods be educational and inspirational. Do not make too many appeals. Do not discourage the people. Rely upon the ministry and the religious press, with the co-operation of your secretaries, to lay the burden of this great work on the conscience of the brotherhood and to train the churches in the grace of giving. It is only as this work takes root in the spiritual nature, in the religious convictions of the people, that it has the promise of a future, healthful growth.

Finally, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST once more offers you its congratulations, its best wishes and its loyal co-operation in fulfilling your great mission. Make yourself the handmaiden of Jesus Christ to carry on His work, to exalt Him among the nations; to carry glad tidings to those who sit in darkness; to strengthen the feeble knees and the hands that hang down; to carry the bread of life to earth's perishing millions, and generations yet unborn will rise up and call you blessed!

ROMANISM AND CRIME.

If the tree is known by its fruit, the Catholic tree cannot be pronounced an unqualified success. A controversy is raging in England over the question of the relative criminality of the Roman Catholic population as compared with Protestants and pagans. The statement of Robert F. Horton, in the Times, that Catolics form an undue proportion of the criminal population, has upset a Catholic advocate, who demands his authority. This is a dangerous demand for a Romanist to make, for the facts are all against him, Catholics themselves being the judges. Monsignor Nugent, at Darlington, on October 18, 1886, said:

> His daily duty during the twenty-two years had been within Her Majesty's prison at Liverpool, and it had afforded him daily opportunities of studying mankind. Last year there were 21,324 prisoners committed to that prison. Of these, 13,676 fell to his charge as Roman Catholic chaplain.—Catholic Times, October 22.

And referring to immorality he said, at the Liverpool League Hall, on the 11th of the month following, that nine out of ten of the girls to be seen at night along London Road or Lime Street, were Catholics; there was no use hiding it. In the Month, a Jesuit paper, for July, 1897, Mr. A. J. Wall, writing on "Aid for Catholic Prisoners on Discharge from Prison," said:

> As regards the number of prisoners to be dealt with, it is difficult to make any accurate estimate, as the religions of the prisoners are not shown in the various Bluebooks; but it appears from the judicial statistics that in 1894, 877 males and 677 females of Irish birth were received on conviction into the London prisons. On the other hand there are many Catholics who are not of Irish birth. Perhaps the majority of the Catholics in London prisons are "London Irish." From Wandsworth Prison nearly a thousand Catholics are discharged yearly.

These are facts regarding England, amply confirmed by more recent statistics and all the testimony ever given on the subject. It is no better in Australia. The government statistics of Victoria, Mr. Hayter in the Victorian Year-book of 1885-'6 gives a table of birthplaces of persons arrested and committed for trial in the previous year. There were 7,714 Irish to 6,994 English and Welsh, and 2,378 Scotch. Says Mr. Hayter: "In proportion to their numbers in the community the Roman Catholics supplied nearly two and a half times as many arrested persons as the Protestants, nearly twice as many as the Jews and more than three times as many as the pagans. . . . The Roman Catholics committed for trial were nearly twice as numerous as the Protestants." As to America here is the testimony of Father Walter Elliot, of New York, in the Catholic World of September, 1890:

> Now comes the horrible truth. In many cities we (Catholics) have something like a monopoly of the liquor traffic, and a monopoly also of getting drunk. There is scarcely a Roman Catholic family but one of its members is a victim of intemperance. I hate to acknowledge it, but three-fourths of the public paupers, and more than half the criminals carried to prison are, by baptism and training, members of our church. For twenty years the clergy of St. Paul's parish, New York, have had a hard fight to keep saloons from the very church door, because the neighborhood of a Catholic Church is a good stand for the saloon business, and this is equally so in nearly every city in America. The saloons line all the way to the Roman Catholic cemetery. The Roman Catholic chaplain asserts that of six or seven thousand women brought every year to prison, more than 80 per cent. are Catholic.

No Protestant could put it stronger than this. An English Roman Catholic, who signs himself Verax, deeply laments, in the London Times, the evidence of the demoralization of Catholic France. As an old scholar at a French Jesuit school he denounced the systematic tampering with conscience in such schools as at the root of the shameless conduct of the generals who were trained in them, and he expresses infinite disgust at the conduct of the French priesthood in hounding on the people against Dreyfus. Another English Catholic speaks of the "deplorable inefficiency of the French Catholic clergy in staying this devil's work," as a source of deep regret and resentment. But why did not the English Catholic clergy make their voice felt in stern denunciation of the crime that bespatters their whole church with stains like those on Lady Macbeth's hand? Why did the Pope remain silent? He shows great readiness in issuing bulls against heresy; why did he fail to condemn this leprous moral heresy of the French nation? The absolute silence of the Pope concerning the infamous tactics of the Catholic press and priesthood in France is one of the most shameful facts in modern history, and gives small hope that the Catholic Church is likely to recover from her fateful disproportion of crime.

Word has been sent from Rome that there was a general feeling of strong indignation when the result of the Dreyfus trial was made known, followed by the remark, "The only party which did not condemn the verdict was the clerical faction." The Holy Mother Church and the degenerate French nation the only partners in the tragic infamy at Rennes! Mercier and Boisdeffre were both under the spiritual direction of the same Jesuit priest, and every member of the general staff who had taken any part in the lying, forgery and attempted assassination of Colonel Picquart, is the pupil of a Jesuit college. After all this a Cardinal Archbishop, in a recent speech on the decay of the Latin races, which he refused to admit, after cursing Freemasonry, Liberalism and freedom of conscience as first-class abominations, indulged in a piece of rhodomontade like this: "Compare Bacon with Levoissier, Leibnitz and Kant with St. Thomas Aquinas, Bismarck with Napoleon the Great, Cook with Columbus, Gladstone with Leo XIII., and then tell me which is the race which gave to humanity the great men that made its ornament and glory. Triumph will be in the future as in the past, with that Roman Catholic civilization over that other civilization of machinery and battleships which carries in its bosom a certain religious Americanism, whose triumph would be that of free thought over divine revelation, of anarchy over order, of matter over spirit. Spain was great while she was Catholic. . . . Now what a contrast! Poor, anaemic, sick and weak.' Certainly. When did old Spain become Protestant?

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

The Missouri Christian Co-operation held its sixty-second annual convention at Jefferson City last week. This was the first convention we ever held in the capital of the state, and its entertainment was a severe test of the hospitality of the mission church there, but under the leadership of its pastor, J. P. Pinkerton, the people rallied to its assistance and all were comfortably provided for.

The convention met in the Hall of Representatives of the Capitol, which was kindly put at the disposal of the convention for all its sessions, together with such other parts of the stately building as were required for its use. This is a form of union of church and state to which we can see no objection. The convention sermon was preached by D. R. Dungan, on "The Fellowship," to a large and appreciative audience. The attendance on this convention was considerably larger than at the one held at Nevada, a year ago, and more representative; but it lacked much, in both respect of being what a Missouri convention ought to be.

On Tuesday morning Pastor Pinkerton welcomed the delegates in a happy speech, to which Chairman W. H. McClain made an appropriate response. This, however, after an impressive "Quiet Hour" service, conducted by Andrew Scott, of Higginsville. The reports of the Sunday-school Board, Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer were presented.

The amount of money coming into the hands of the board was disappointingly small, amounting to less than $4,000. This is co-operation only to a very limited extent. It is quite evident that something must be done to induce a larger number of churches to co-operate in evangelizing the state. The remedy recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means was a change in the constitution, providing for an assistant corresponding secretary in the state to assist in stirring up the churches in their respective counties to make the offerings and otherwise promoting the interest of the co-operation. This recommendation was adopted and the assistant secretaries will be appointed.

In other respects the work in the state seems to be prospering. There is more money raised for general missionary purposes in the state than ever before. General Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Church Extension and benevolence have all, we believe, received additional support. The total amount given for all purposes during the year past is over $700,000. In 1837, when this state co-operation began, we had sixty churches and 3,000 members. After 62 years, we have 1,575 churches and 161,013 members in the state. During the last ten years 424 new churches have been organized and 41,523 members added. This is indeed a wonderful growth, but it involves certain responsibilities in the way of supervision, organization and education which we fear are not sufficiently understood.

Sermons were delivered by E. B. Redd, Platte City; H. A. Denton, Warrensburg; M. M. Goode, St. Joseph; W. N. Briney, Paris, and D. W. Moore, Springfield, and brief addresses were made by J. T. Ogle, on Church Extension, W. F. Richardson, on American Missions, and B. T. Wharton, on Foreign Missions. All of these sermons and addresses showed careful preparation, and some of them had a special fitness for the occasion.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Many of these committees had no report ready. Several of the chairmen were not present, and sent no reports. Our programs have been formed for a number of years on the basis of these standing committees, and the theory has not worked satisfactorily, though as a theory it is all right. Pres. McClain gave us a good list of committees, evidently selected with care. Now if they can be made to study their subjects and bring in something mature for the action of the next convention, the practicability of the theory will have been demonstrated. Otherwise, let some other method of securing adequate treatment of important and practical questions be adopted.

EDUCATION.

As usual, there was no time to consider this question. Because of the absence of the chairman of the committee on schools and education, the report was not made until most of the delegates had departed. There was a called meeting of the educational conference, which adopted a recommendation for some constitutional changes relating to our educational work, which may have important results if adopted. But nothing is likely to be done in that line until a new interest is kindled on the subject. This interest is bound to come, and that soon, or retrogression is inevitable. No religious body can neglect its schools very long without dropping to the rear.

C. W. B. M.

Another hand will report its proceedings more in detail. The ladies had a good meeting. We are frank to admit that their addresses reached a high eraverage in literary merit and up-to-dateness, than those of their brethren. They laid a little more emphasis upon the spiritual side of their work. In spite of the ill health of the state president, Mrs. Williams, the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Hedges, and the treasurer, Mrs. Johnson, the work seems to have gone forward. This was because Mrs. B. F. Clay filled the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mrs. Hedges, for the last half of the year, and has proved herself so efficient. The sisters of Missouri regret her early departure from the state. It is due also to the very successful work performed by Mrs. Gilliam, as organizer. New officers were elected, all around. The nominating committee explained that the state president, Mrs. Williams, had positively declined to serve them another year on account of the condition of her health, and expressed their appreciation of her faithful service, their sympathy with her in her illness and their continued esteem and confidence; also for the other outgoing officers. Mrs. F. M. Lowe, of Kansas City, was nominated for state president; Mrs. M. M. Goode, St. Joseph, vice-president; Mrs. L. G. Bantz, of St. Louis, corresponding secretary, and Miss Burgess, of St. Joseph, treasurer.

A RECEPTION.

On Tuesday eveing, after the evening session of the convention, the governor's mansion was thrown open, and Governor and Mrs. Stephens tendered a reception to the delegates who visited the mansion in a body and were introduced, individually, by T. P. Haley, who was a guest at the mansion during the convention. The delegates were permitted to pass through the spacious rooms and hallways, all beautifully illuminated, and were favored with both instrumental and vocal music. Light refreshments were also served. It was a gracious act of courtesy to the delegates on the part of his excellency and his good wife, and the occasion was greatly enjoyed by all.

The next convention was voted to Moberly, Mo., and W. A. Oldham, of Carthage, was chosen chairman. The consecration sermon on Thursday evening was by D. W. Moore, and is spoken of by those who heard it as an able effort. If all the delegates could have remained to hear it, and to have engaged in a consecration service following it, it would have been a fitting close, indeed, for our annual convention.

CONVENTION NOTES.

W. H. McClain made a model chairman, and his rotund figure filled the speaker's chair in the Hall of Representatives to perfection.

W. E. M. Hackleman and wife, of Indianapolis, led the music of the convention, aided by several solos from Bro. Millard.

Among the older veterans present at Jefferson City were T. P. Haley, George Plattenburg, J. A. Berry, F. J. Lampton, Dr. McComb, Wm. Featherstone and W. T. Moore. Special mention was made of some absent ones, including Alexander Procter, J. C. Reynolds and B. H. Smith; to whom fraternal letters were sent.

Judge W. W. Wood, an elder of the church at Warrensburg, and, by the way, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the Judgeship of the Kansas City Court of Appeals, was present at the convention, among other prominent laymen.

It was a layman, white-haired and venerable, who made this criticism on the convention to the writer: "Somehow, there is not enough soul in the convention of the brethren. They do not lay the emphasis on prayer and on divine help, as the sisters do." The preachers might think of this.

The man who "hollered" was not heard in the Hall of Representatives. His voice went to echo, and his ideas to vacuity. The lady speakers were heard better than some of the men.

Miss Burgess, returned missionary from India, was received with the Chautauqua salute—the waving of handkerchiefs—as she came on the platform to speak. She told the story of her work in India very modestly and interestingly.

The address of Mrs. Kelly, national organizer, on "The White Woman's Burden," was the literary gem of the convention. A number of our Missouri sisters—Mrs. Goode, Mrs. Longan, Mrs. Gilliam and others—did nobly, and we are proud of them.

A large number of delegates visited the State Penitentary one afternoon, in response to an invitation, interfering more or less with the attendance on one of the sessions of the C. W. B. M. This led to a resolution, introduced by Mrs. Bantz, of St. Louis, that hereafter invitations of this character should be made for some hour when the brethren were in session, that they might learn to sympathize with their sisters! Unanimously approved!

Hour of Prayer.

MY DUTY TO THE CHURCH.

(Heb. 10:19-25; 1 Cor. 12:14-26.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Oct. 18.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The church, considered locally or in its universal aspect, in the Scriptures is one. Its members have different abilities and functions, but are under mutual obligations to serve each other under their common Lord.

Among the duties mentioned in the above passage from the Hebrew letter are the following: (1) Drawing near to God with a true heart in fullness of faith; (2) holding fast the confession of our hope that it waver not; (3) considering one another to provoke unto love and to good works; (4) faithfulness in attending the assemblies of the saints, and in exhorting one another. Consider these.

1. We live too far from God. We do not walk with Him in close fellowship. Why not? He is our Father. His love for us is infinite, surpassing knowledge. Why should we not draw near to Him? We must do this by faith—a faith that submits to all His requirements—and a true heart—a sincere purpose.

2. There are too many wavering Christians. They hope to-day, and are in despair to-morrow. They trust to their feelings, many of them. They are not content to walk by faith. To waver in our hope is to doubt God's Word of promise. Let us not do that, no matter how hard the storm beats upon us, or how dark seems the way. "Hope thou in God."

3. Consider each other. Let us not think of ourselves all the time, and give no consideration to our brother's welfare. What effect will my action have upon other members in provoking them to love and to good works? Often one good, liberal-hearted brother in a church will shame the stinginess out of all his brethren. Your devotion may kindle the altar fires in many other hearts.

4. Do not forsake the assembly of the saints. Attend the regular services of the church. You need the spiritual food you can get there, and your minister and your other brethren will be encouraged by your presence. Go not simply to receive, but to impart as well. "Exhort one another." The prayer-meeting is a specially suitable meeting for this. Do not neglect it.

This passage, from 1 Corinthians, emphasizes the unity of the body through the specialization of function of the several members. Many members, one body. The eye, the ear, the foot have each its own special function, and they go to make the unity of the body. So it is in the body of Christ. Each of us has a special talent, and it is in the use of this talent for the benefit of the church that its true unity is conserved. It is far better that we are not all alike in taste, talent and temperament. This would breed monotony and stagnation. Only let us respect each other's function in the body, and each do what he can for the general good.

PRAYER.

Our Father in heaven, we are all the children of thy Thy love. We are members one of another. We owe each other mutual service. Help us, we pray Thee having been redeemed by one Lord, to recognize our unity in Him, and so discharge our obligations to the one body and to each other severally as to secure Thy divine approval at last, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

There is a great deal in a name. A rose by any other name would not smell as sweet—to some people. A reader writes thus: "I am in favor of the most thorough investigation of the Bible, but I am opposed to criticism." This reminds us of the story of the minister who bought a violin for his son. Some of the maiden sisters heard that the parson had actually got a fiddle for his boy, and they were greatly scandalized by it. They went to him and reported what they had heard, and expressed their opinion that it was a false rumor. The preacher replied that the only ground he could think of for this scandal was that he had purchased a violin for his son, and, to show them the truth of this, he would have his son come in and play for them. He came in and, at the quiet suggestion of his father, played "Old Hundred," in a very solemn and unctious manner. When he had finished the preacher said, "There, you see what it is for yourselves." The maiden sisters remarked on the depravity of certain persons in circulating false reports, and said that they had not believed it possible, and they were fully satisfied now of its falsehood, and went away in a perfectly contented state of mind! It is not difficult to imagine the scene in the parsonage after the visitors had departed. All right, then; let us bury "criticism" out of sight, but go on with the investigation of the Bible until we find out all about it there is to be known.

No doubt many a church has been broken up on some issue that had in it about the same substance as the difference between a fiddle and a violin. It is strange to what extent even fairly intelligent people are governed by names. The discussions among us on the subject of church government and organization has generally turned upon a difference of names. All agree that there are certain things to be done in order to the life of the church, and that some persons must be chosen to do them; but what shall we call them?—that is the burning issue! The same is true concerning the discussion of our missionary societies. The brother who was opposed to electing a president and secretary of a meeting held in the interest of missionary work, but was willing to have a man selected to sit at the front and put the questions to vote, and another brother to write down an account of what was done, supposed, of course, he was standing for principle, but, as a matter of fact, it was only names that frightened him. It is curious to note how largely this tweedle dee and tweedle-dum has entered into the theological and ecclesiastical discussions of the past. It is the old question of the fiddle and the violin. A violin is a fiddle put to nobler uses. We need to take a number of old words we have been using flippantly, and put new and larger contents in them.

We read, yesterday, Horace Bushnell's sermon on "Spiritual Dislodgments," and we feel like commending it to the entire ministry irrespective of religious affiliation. There is a vast amount of comfort in it for those who are tossed about from pillar to post, here and there, with no certain abiding-place. We lay our plans and say, "Here, now, we are settled for life; we will send down our roots into the soil, and send up our branches above it, and grow, and bear fruit;" but straightway we are displaced and transplanted, as it were, into new soil and new surroundings. It seems very hard to us, and doubtless the transplanting process is often carried to extreme among us; but after all, Dr. Bushnell thought these dislodgments were for our good. They keep us humble, and cause us to put our trust in God rather than in ourselves and in our friends. We tend naturally to run in grooves and to become mechanical in our thoughts and in our methods of work. These dislodgments serve to break the crust of our dried-up conservatism, and to give us fresh thought, new experiences and a larger and better life.

If the preacher be right in this, the compensation for our disappointments, disarrangements and dislodgments is ample. Whatever enriches the life, deepens our religious experience, widens our horizon and puts us into closer and more vital relationship with God is worth all it costs in the way of sacrifice of earthly gain, personal ease and self-complacency. If it be necessary that we be buffeted, beaten back and thwarted in our plans and disloged from our places, in order to the development of the highest type of Christian character, and to bear the largest amount of fruit in our lives for the glory of God and the good of men, then we should welcome all these experiences, no matter how undesirable they may seem to us, as blessings of God in disguise. Many a man has been infinitely blessed by being disloged from his material prosperity, while more still have been brought into a new and grander life by being dislodged from their old stereotyped religious "views." In all these experiences God dealeth with us as His children, whose everlasting good He is seeking to promote.

Questions and Answers.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—In your last Macatawa Musings for this year I find the following:

"We can no more tell now whence the wind cometh and whither it goeth than on that eventful night in the long ago when Jesus talked with the Jewish Rabbi and explained the mysteries of the kingdom of God." Now it is about thirty years since I ceased to believe that Jesus ever said anything to Nicodemus about the wind blowing where it listeth, etc. About that time I heard Bro. Randall Faurot preach on John 3:8, and he gave the following translation: "The Spirit speaketh the mind (or will) of God and you hear its voice through (or in) the gospel; and so is every one begotten, that is born of the Spirit." Now it has always seemed to me that his translation is a correct, lucid and perfect answer to the question of Nicodemus, such as Jesus would be likely to give, and that it takes all the wind and nonsense out of the passage, and fills it full of light and life. What does our scholarly editor think of Bro. Faurot's translation?

M. W. CRAMER.

Holland, Mich., Sept. 28th.

Our remarks in the Musings referred to were based on both the Common and Revised Versions, and on the common understanding of the passage—a sort of "accommodation" to existing ideas as it were. Scholars are divided in opinion as to whether pneuma, in this passage, should be rendered by "wind" or "spirit," the greater number preferring the term wind, in spite of the fact that spirit is the almost universal meaning of the original. Either rendering, however, makes sense. If wind be the proper rendering, the idea would then seem to be: "You may not understand all the processes by which the Spirit accomplishes His work; but neither do you understand all about the wind—its coming and going; but you witness its palpable effects and do not doubt its reality. So is every one that is born of the Spirit." This is certainly true, whatever the passage may mean. There are movements of the Spirit that elude our senses and our understanding. We see a life quietly revolutionized in its tone, temper and aim. The effect is apparent; but who pretends to know all the subtle influences brought to bear by the Spirit on the soul to effect its conversion? The translation concerning which our brother asks our opinion is not a translation of the original at all. It is a paraphrase or exegesis, like that we have given above.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

ITS ORGANIZATION.

A. M'LEAN.

Two main reasons led to the organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. The first was a desire to be loyal to Christ. He charged his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation. Those who have the truth are required to carry it far and near. As we took the Bible to be our only rule of faith and practice we could not fail to be a missionary people. As we drank more deeply into the Spirit of Christ we felt irresistibly impelled to help him bear the gospel of his grace to every kindred and tribe and tongue and people on the globe. The founders of the society felt as did Peter and John when they said, "We cannot but speak what we saw and heard."

It is well known that this was not the first attempt of our people to carry on Foreign Missions. More than a quarter of a century before, the American Christian Missionary Society was organized to promote the preaching of the gospel in this and other lands. The world was its field. While looking after the work at home, missions were opened in Asia, Africa and the West Indies. These were sustained for a time and then abandoned. At the twenty-fifth anniversary of that society the historian said, with a feeling of sadness, that in all the wide foreign field, destitute of the gospel, we do not have a single herald of the cross. Jerusalem and Jamaica were deserted; Liberia was forgotten.

The abandonment of the work in the foreign field was the result of a marked decline of the missionary spirit, and not of impaired ability. About the time the American Society was organized Mr. Campbell said that we have abundant means if we had willing minds and liberal hearts. A little later Isaac Errett spoke of our people as being "alarmingly rich." The Civil War reduced some of the friends of the society to poverty, but there were many thousands whose wealth was greatly increased by the war. From the very first there were those who opposed the society. They assailed it in season and out of season. They opposed one plan because it was not a co-operation of the churches and another plan because it was. They refused to be conciliated by any concessions. Because opposition abounded the love of many grew cold. Benjamin Franklin, while serving as secretary, tried hard to abate prejudice and opposition, and thought he had succeeded. He gave it as his conviction that we were destined to become a great missionary people at no distant period. His views were far too optimistic. The opposition was much stronger than he thought. President Pendleton told the convention in 1866 that instead of a steadily swelling treasury our contributions have been less and less liberal; instead of establishing new missions we have allowed some that were started with enthusiastic zeal to perish in our hands; instead of anticipating the new and expanding fields that have been opening upon us, and providing the means properly to enter them, we have slept upon our post till the opportunity has offered, and we are not ready to improve the providence that calls us to rise up and possess the land. "Advocates that were once eloquent have withdrawn their plea, friends that were liberal have ceased to contribute, members that came up to counsel have stayed away to chide, enthusiasm has been chilled, generosity has been discouraged and wisdom made despondent of her hopes." Ten years later the case was no better. The same careful writer used the following words: "A large number of people utterly ignore the idea of propagating the gospel. It is scarcely correct to say that they do not believe in the conversion of the world, for they have no thought or concern about it of any kind. Among the elders are many Gallios, who care for none of these things. The world may for them take care of itself. They are not its keeper. The congregation is a close corporation, if not offensive, practically defensive, with prohibitive tariffs upon all foreign agencies of the kingdom, that they may keep the gospel at home and save the expense of a preacher." David S. Burnet was one of the most active of the managers and knew the facts as well as any one else. He said that there was much difference of sentiment in regard to the foreign missionary enterprise. Some seemed to forget the aggressive character of our holy religion. They forget the word go in the commission; their mind is riveted upon tarry ye.

The year the Foreign Society was organized the Christian Standard said that many regarded the American Society as dead, and were eagerly and rejoicingly anticipating the funeral services. Their hopes were doomed to remain unrealized. There were those who did not cease to plead with all earnestness for a great enlargement of the work at home and for a renewal of the efforts in foreign lands. They felt that the work in the regions beyond had been only temporarily suspended and not closed forever. Among the men of this class was the saintly Joseph King. At the convention of 1874 he referred in an address to the humiliating fact that we were the only people who were not obeying the commission, and not even trying to obey it. His words provoked some angry discussion, but they were not spoken in vain. Another man to whom all our organized missionary work owes very much was Thomas Munnell. By tongue and pen he sought to prevail upon the brethren to do something to send the gospel to all the ends of the earth. The two men who were most influential at that juncture were Isaac Errett and W. T. Moore. Through the Christian Standard and the Christian Quarterly they pressed the claims of Foreign Missions home to the hearts and consciences of multitudes. Their advocacy led to decisive action.

The second reason was a desire to help the work at home. The annual report of the American Society for 1875 specially recommended to the brethren the work of Foreign Missions in some way, as a means of awakening the missionary spirit for the home as well as for the foreign field. "Our efforts at Home Missions, spending so large a percentage of all our money on the fields near where it was raised, has tended to contract the views of the churches as to the world-wide commission given to us by Jesus Christ himself. We are satisfied that a thriving foreign work will prove the best practical educator of our people in the missionary spirit, both at home and abroad. Let our hearts leap over frontiers of district and neighborhood selfishness; let us put our hearts and our treasures in other lands, from which we may often hear of the horrors and hardships of heathen life, and of their great need of salvation through Christ, and we will more fully realize the spirit of the great Missionary, sent out from heaven to earth." The next report has the same sentiment: "Our past history, as well as the history of other religious bodies, proves that home work alone fails and is likely to fail in developing the true missionary spirit. One reason is that the spirit of the great commission is against it. The flow of true religious life is outward bound into all the world and to every creature. The report tells of a demand that our means be spent in our own country, in our own respective states, then the counties, until not a few are unwilling to let a dollar go out of their own vicinities—not scarcely out of their sight. In the deep and well grounded conviction that Foreign Missions will not only meet this last will and testament in Jesus Christ in other lands, but will be the directest route also to success in our home work, we suggest that this convention urge the brethren generally to do, not less for home, but more abroad."

After thirty years of study Isaac Errett said that he had a profound and unfaltering conviction that we, as a people, will never reach the culture in faith, in self-denial and in godliness that we need and are capable of, and will never occupy the position before the religious world which, so far as our principles are concerned, we are entitled to occupy, until we give ourselves heartily and permanently to missionary work in the broadest sense of that phrase, until our hearts and homes and pulpits and presses are all aflame with zeal for the spread of the gospel in all the earth, until the ancient order of things is reproduced in that supreme consecration to God which not only spends money freely, but offers life freely and welcomes toil, privations, persecutions, imprisonment, aye and martyrdom, if only Christ be preached and the gates of salvation be thrown open to all the world. "We never did so much to plant the gospel in destitute home regions as during the years that we sustained those Foreign Missions. The records show that these years were years of unparalleled success in raising money and of unparalleled prosperity in Home Mission work. In an evil hour, under the pressure of adversities to which our faith was not equal, we abandoned our Foreign Missions, and from that day to this we have been smitten with confusion and cursed with barrenness in our home work. All our painstaking, laborious efforts to unite our brethren in any scheme for the evangelization of our home fields have been confounded." He states that some of the strongest states that complained most loudly over the folly of wasting money in Foreign Missions that is so much needed at home, reported less than one thousand dollars for missionary work within their own borders. He had no reason to believe that God would ever lift the curse away from us that has brought blight and desolation everywhere to our missionary enterprises until we repented of our folly and began anew to act a part worthy of us under the great commission. He maintained that it was not true that if we do nothing abroad we shall do more at home; for, in refusing to do anything abroad we paralyze our faith, we dwarf our sympathies, we blunt our consciences, we enervate our impulses, we gratify our selfishness and we have less faith, less sympathy, less conscience, less heroism, less benevolence to draw upon for the home work. We bring to it a weakened moral nature and a strengthened selfishness, and the work in the home field is lessened. Forever and forever is it true that there is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet and it tendeth to poverty. Mr. Errett was a friend of Foreign Missions because he was a friend of Home Missions. Among the friends of missions it seemed as self-evident as a primary truth, that no people have ever been blessed in their home enterprises without a foreign missionary spirit and work.

A minor consideration, but one that was not without weight, was that of self-respect. When religious friends asked where our foreign missionaries were located, it was not easy to give a satisfactory answer. When they inquired what we did more than others since we claimed to have the truth and to be guided solely by it, we could make no effective reply. Our self-respect compelled us to do something worthy of the great plea which we make towards the evangelization of the whole wide world.

The birth of the Foreign Society was on this wise: During the convention of 1874 several meetings were held in the interest of Foreign Missions. Owing to the lack of time the discussions did not reach any satisfactory conclusion. A special committee was appointed to take the whole matter into consideration. Of that committee W. T. Moore was chairman. At a meeting of that committee the following summer in Indianapolis the subject was further canvassed and a constitution was drafted. The committee reported at the Louisville convention in October, 1875. The friends of the enterprise met in the basement of the First Church. There were present on that occasion: Isaac Errett, B. B. Tyler, Thomas Munnell, W. T. Moore, F. M. Green, J. B. Bowman, J. C. Reynolds, Robert Moffett, A. I. Hobbs, J. S. Lamar, R. M. Bishop, W. S. Dickinson, C. S. Blackwell, Leander Lane, John Shackleford, J. H. Garrison, J. T. Toof, W. F. Black and David Walk. W. T. Moore presided and B. B. Tyler acted as clerk. Isaac Errett stated the object of the meeting and gave some reasons why an earnest and persistent effort should be made in behalf of Foreign Missions. He said it was a time for prayer rather than for talk. If the undertaking was to succeed it must be born in the spirit of prayer and consecration to God. J. H. Garrison relates that as he talked in his own tender way about the dying love of Jesus, his heart became too full for articulation and many eyes swam in tears. There was a consciousness of God's presence, a conviction that what was being done was in line with the divine purpose. It was decided with unanimity that a society be organized to preach the gospel in foreign lands. The constitution which had been prepared in Indianapolis was adopted. At an adjourned meeting officers were elected as follows: President, Isaac Errett; vice-presidents, W. T. Moore, Jacob Burnet, J. S. Lamar; corresponding secretary, Robert Moffett; recording secretary, B. B. Tyler; treasurer, W. S. Dickinson. The first address was delivered the same evening by W. T. Moore. In it he referred to what had been attempted in earlier years: "You say we have tried Foreign Missions and failed. I beg pardon, but I really do not think we tried very much. True, we sent a faithful missionary to Jerusalem and also one to Jamaica, but did we sustain them there? While we were discussing the propriety of having a missionary society with a moneyed basis our missionaries were starved out and had to leave their work, which had only been fairly started, and come home. This is precisely the way we have tried the foreign missionary work." In this noble and inspiring address the speaker outlined what he conceived to be the work of the society and the principles by which it should be characterized.

The Foreign Society was organized because the American Society could not do foreign missionary work. From the first the two societies have worked together in perfect harmony. The new society was on a somewhat different basis from the old. In it the people who furnished the money directed how the money should be used. The managers were determined not to waste any time or strength in controversy as to plans and methods. They were not wedded to any special plan, nor had they any quarrel with those who preferred some other ways of working. What they wanted was work done, and they were not disposed to stand on the order of doing it, provided the order was not incompatible with the will of God. If better plans should be proposed they held themselves in readiness to adopt them promptly and gratefully. But they and the brethren generally were thoroughly weary of vain jangling about plans, while nothing was being done and while no better plans were even proposed. There is no use in arguing against success. To all objections urged the Foreign Society has pointed to its work, and then without argument has endeavored to do the next thing that needed doing.

The society began its work in a modest way. It was born, as has been shown, in a basement. Other great movements began in an upper room, or in a stable, or behind a haystack. The managers did not expect to appeal to any large constituency. The society was ten years old before it had a secretary giving his whole time to its interests. W. T. Moore served for two years without any compensation. A nominal sum was paid a competent bookkeeper. W. B. Ebbert served for four years as corresponding secretary. He had other sources of income and received pay for the portion of time given to the society. When he resigned the first act of executive committee was to resolve that his successor be paid only five hundred dollars a year. It was not till 1885 that the society had an office of its own. Up till that time the committee met in the storeroom of the Standard Publishing Company. Boxes and windows served as chairs. The recording secretary used his knee as a desk. The corresponding secretary did his work at his own home. No rent was paid. Circulars were printed on a hectograph. The policy was conservative. The committee did not care to venture beyond "the cash on hand and in the bank." The income for the first year was $1,706.35. It was according to the faith and enterprise of the managers of the society.

EVOLUTION OF THE DIVINE CHARACTER IN MAN.

(LUKE 10:25-37.)

PROF. FRANCIS E. NIPHER.

Perhaps the most important advance made during our time, in its bearing on human character, is the changed method of training children. The result of this change is destined to profoundly affect the next generation. The results already attained will be transmitted, and they will become more pronounced in character.

In former times people seem to have thought that when little children were brought to the Master he beat them with a birch stick and told them that if they did not change and behave more like grown people they should never see the kingdom of heaven! How else are we to explain the way in which good people treated children? They seemed to have thought that when children were enjoined to obey their parents it was implied that the parents should compel such obedience; which is a very different matter and nowhere recommended in the Scriptures.

No one ever believed that the limb of a tree could be made to grow into some desired position by beating it occasionally with a club; but a method of training children which somewhat resembled this has been in very general use among the best of people.

The growing tendency of late has been toward a policy which never allows an issue of parental authority to arise. Children cannot be wicked. It is a very conservative statement, that before they are spoiled they compare favorably with their parents. They are little animals, who will gradually learn to restrain themselves if they are shown by example how to do so. The wise parent now abolishes all of the commandments. Then there cannot be any disobedience. The child never learns that there is such a thing as disobedience. The child is taught to do right, but it is never compelled to obey. The father does not wish his son to be run over by a street car, but he never commands him not to play on the tracks. He simply tells him of the danger.

He tells him from time to time of the accidents that happen, and how the accidents might have been avoided. The pressure is there continually, and can be made as effective as the case seems to demand, but there is no command. And when the boy is found playing on the car tracks, as in any case he will be, it merely serves for an occasion for the expression of a fear that he may sometime make a mistake or a misstep, or that he may forget, and to point out how dreadful the result might be. In this way the child is guided without ever being repressed. The child always decides upon his own action. He is from the first a law unto himself. Even in infancy, when its acts are leading it into danger or into "mischief" it is simply allured into something more attractive, and it does not suspect that its desires and designs have been thwarted by superior skill and wisdom. Whether we will or not, the one great and dominating influence which molds the forming character is parental example. There is no teaching by precept that it is wrong to quarrel. The sabject is not mentioned at all. The child is simply not taught to quarrel. It never hears harsh or angry words until it hears them on the street. The boy is shown how to be gentle with animals, and he learns how to value their mute responses to such treatment. Without any oral instruction he learns to be considerate of the rights and feelings of others, and he becomes a little gentleman always and everywhere. And there can be no sham about such training, if it is to succeed. Children are keen to detect shams. When children grow up in this way it is found to be unnecessary to compel obedience. It needs no moral law with threats of punishment and promises of reward to keep men so trained in paths of righteousness. They can never feel the temptations which on every hand beset men who have grown up as companions of the vicious and who then seek to lead lives of righteousness. They never can feel the temptations of a depraved appetite. They never can know the power of evil habits. But they do know the feeling of personal responsibility. It has been bred into their very bones. It is easy for them to forget self and give themselves to the work of helping others. They become an efficient type of moral machinery. Just in proportion as their training has been what it should be does their personal credit for right-doing diminish and their effectiveness as moral agents increase.

And there is plenty of work for such men to do. The good leaven has not reached all. The uplifting of humanity into God-likeness is not the work of a day. It is a growth, which in the individual and in nations continues as long as growth of any kind is possible. In the individual it continues through life. In society it lasts through the ages.

We hear doleful tales of corruption and fraud in business, in politics and in business-politics, or political business. Even if all are true there is little to indicate that this generation is worse than those which have preceded it. Certainly the political boss of the present day is entitled to his share of the contempt that honest men feel for scoundrels, but he has not invented any new forms of rascality. Our revolutionary ancestors knew the meaning of the word scoundrel, and it would be safe to assert that we have probably made less advance in various forms of official corruption than in any other field of human activity. Such evils can never be cured by political revolutions, or by replacing the rule of one party by that of another. It can only be done by means of an education which begins in the family. It can only be done gradually by replacing men who do right from fear of punishment, or from hope of some personal advantage by men who do right as the meadow lark sings its own song, and is never tempted to croak like the raven. The man who must be bribed or hired to do right is in danger of being bribed or hired to do wrong. With him it is already a question of price.

But in the meantime, society has been driven to defend itself. It has invented criminal laws. Crude as they are, ineffective as they are, we know not what else to do. We must patiently continue as now until better influences shall have had time to act.

Society has arbitrarily assumed the right and it necessarily possesses the power to punish those whose moral sense has not been quickened into dominating self-control.

The laws of the state lay no hand on the murderers who have not found their opportunity, or upon the thieves who have not stolen. They make no distinction between those who refrain from crime from fear of punishment, those who are deterred by the hope of some kind of reward and those who are not criminals.

And here we sometimes lose sight of one phase of home and general instruction. Whatever we may think of the wisdom or propriety of a city ordinance or a state law, it is a very serious matter for a father to show his children that he is a lawbreaker. The man who does not promptly remove the snow from his walks, as the ordinances direct, is neglecting a duty to his fellow-citizens; he is neglecting an opportunity to teach his own or his neighbor's children to respect the law. He who drives his horses at an unlawful speed on the river bridge is giving some innocent child his first lessons in an education which may end in utter ruin. And, to put the matter on a much lower ethical plane, there are many people who take note of the mental and moral dimensions of a man who puts himself on exhibition in this manner.

And the influence of such acts on the public is an unmixed evil. It breeds contempt of all law. One cannot do society a greater service than to be most careful in the observance of all public ordinances, and every public duty. Certainly, the effective way to instruct children to observe and obey public ordinances is by example.

It is most demoralizing to society that the idea has become current, and is given general credence, that while possession of stolen property is under some circumstances evidence of guilt, it is not always so; that when the property is very valuable, and the thieves very influential, possession of such property is nine points in the law of defense for permanent ownership under judicial decree.

It is to day a public danger that the idea is becoming prevalent that corporations never for a moment think of submitting to laws intended for their regulation in the interests of the public, as they demand at the point of Federal bayonets that citizens shall do; but that they simply proceed to have such laws declared unconstitutional. The educational side of such proceedings is by far the most important element in the matter to every citizen. It far outweighs any mere matter of dollars and cents that may be involved.

The law of the state, so far as it touches the question of good and evil, demands simply that the citizen shall do no wrong to his brother. It does not touch the question of righteousness on their affirmative side.

The divine law, which covers this ground, seems to be also very indulgent of motives. Men are reached by appeals which they can understand. The teaching of Christ was adapted to all grades of mental and moral development. The reward is offered to the righteous. And if we go further back in history we find a still lower standard, because men were on a lower plane. Certainly, one could hardly conceive a more businesslike proposition than is contained in the vow of the patriarch Jacob. When he was seeking a wife and had the dream of the ladder which reached to heaven, he made a vow in which he said: "If God will be with me and will help me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God. And this stone, which I have set up for a pillar, shall be God's house: and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give a tenth unto thee."

Here we have one who seeks to secure divine favor in return for specific service. It may be that even such service will not be rejected; but what a fathomless gulf there is between such a spirit and that to which the Son of Man appealed when he said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," with no thought of reward, but as a result of having partaken of the divine nature. For moral grandeur what is there on earth to compare with this? It appeals to the noblest instincts of mankind. It contains within itself the germs of all that is best and greatest in individual life and in national character. It is a promise of endless growth through generations and nations yet to be.

The law of the state, with its threats of punishment, seeks to force us upward and away from the lowest depths. It is like the pushing locomotive at the rear of a train of cars. The divine law also has its threats of punishment, but by its promises of reward men are drawn to higher moral levels. In this respect it is like the pulling locomotive at the head of a train. There is no mechanical distinction between a push from below and a pull from above. There is the same ethical and moral identity in the threat of punishment and the promise of a reward. Both are artificial incentives imposed upon the individual from without and tending to lift him to higher moral and ethical planes.

To be perfect as God is perfect is to be an intellectual and moral prime mover, equipped with one's own machinery, vitalized, energized and made active by the fires of eternal truth.

AN AGE OF UNREST.

RUSSELL F. THRAPP.

The favorite passage of President Garfield is fouud in the 17th Psalm, the 15th verse: "As for me I shall behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." This favorite verse of one of earth's greatest and heaven's immortals, points forward to a life wherein all is rest and complete satisfaction; it further implies that in the present state we may not hope to be entirely rid of discontent or dissatisfaction.

In looking out over our age we behold a restless, heaving sea, but we must not conclude that our times are peculiar. Unrest has always been the sad heritage of humanity ever since there presentatives of the race chose to walk in the seductive pathway of disobedience.

Johnson's Rassalas is a type of humanity in general. It was written many years ago, but is yet worthy of a place in the library. It purports to be the history of an Abyssinian prince, who dwelt near the headwaters of the mighty Nile, whose waters make fertile a territory that would otherwise be a desert. This prince lived in a beautiful palace, surrounded by everything that this earth could provide for his happiness. Yet Rassalas was dissatisfied. He is represented as saying, as he looked upon the birds and flocks about him, "What makes the difference between man and all the rest of the animal creation? Every beast that strays beside me has the same corporeal necessities with myself; he is hungry, and crops the grass; he is thirsty, and drinks the stream; his thirst and hunger are appeased; he is satisfied and sleeps; he rises again, and is hungry; he is again fed, and is at rest. I am hungry and thirsty, like him, but when thirst and hunger ceases, I am not at rest; I am, like him, pained with want, but am not, like him, satisfied with fullness. The birds peck the berries and the corn, and fly away to the groves, where they sit in seeming happiness on the branches and waste their lives in tuning one unvaried series of sounds. I likewise can call the lutanist and the singer, but the sounds that pleased me yesterday weary me to-day, and will yet grow more wearisom to-morrow. I can discover within me no power of perception which is not glutted with its proper pleasure, yet I do not feel myself delighted. Man surely has some latent sense for which this place affords no gratification, or he has some desire distinct from sense, which must be satisfied before he can be happy." Rassalas is a type of all. Earth does not satisfy with its beauties and pleasures. Only as we look higher do we find the source of all true happiness.

Whatever the future historian may say of the closing years of the nineteenth century, whatever glowing description he may give of its wonderful inventive progress, of the surprising triumphs of mechanical genius, of its growth in wealth and spleddor, there is one feature that will force itself upon him as a striking characteristic of the period. He will be compelled to regard it as an age of discontent.

He who does not note this feature of our times has yet to open his eyes. It is forced upon us every morning as we read the daily paper, every noon as we tread the busy street, and every evening as we consider the experiences of the closing day.

We hear it in the cries of pain, in the calls for help, in the mingled groans and appeals that are constantly rising from the great ocean of human existence.

But we are not to think that of necessity this foretells disaster. This age is far in advance of the preceding one. Greater woes were those of our forefathers. The best test of the civilization of every age is the condition of the masses of the people. Thus compared, how fortunate our generation!

The laborer one hundred years ago had few of life's comforts. He was compelled to plow his ground with a forked stick, harrow it with the top of a tree, cut his wheat with a sickle and thresh it with a flail and clean it by tossing it in the wind. His house was without paint, his floor without carpets, his walls without pictures and his shelves without books. Should his fire chance to go out in the nighttime oftimes he was compelled to wade through the snow to his neighbor, four miles away, and borrow a pot of coals. He went barefoot all summer, while the suit of linsey-wolsey, spun by his wife, was worn for a year. Should he have the dread misfortune to mangle his arm, without a knowledge of anesthetics he was strapped to a bench and compelled to undergo the harrows of amputation, and after long illness probably die, through ignorance of antiseptics. For want of oil or electricity the boy, eager for knowledge, ruined his eyes trying to read by the blazing logs. Women were flogged through the streets, with naked backs, for disobedience to their husbands. In a week's journey from Oxford to London, Hampden saw threescore corpses rotting on the scaffolds of different towns and cities. A hundred crimes were punishable by death.

Art in statue and painting was for the prince alone, and carpets for the rich. And yet some point to these "bad old times," and complain that the world is going downhill.

In literature the pessimists affirm that the great poets and philosophers have died and left no successors. In politics it is said the leaders of to-day are but pigmies as compared with the giants of yesterday. Tolstoi fears lest civilization is rapidly moving toward the final crash and disaster. But let us not think that pessimism is a new and monstrous growth of our own age; every century has heard its despondent cry. Much of it comes from the headache, dispepsia or nervous prostration. When a child tires of his playthings he usually ends the day by breaking in pieces his tin horn and tearing his picture books. But when this irritable mood reappears in manhood it is elevated to the dignity of philosophy and renamed pessimism.

Not fewer scholars, orators and statesmen to-day; but more. One hundred years ago but few were educated, and hence some Webster towered as a mountain peak above the foothills. For a hundred years the masses, through universal education, have been rising until, instead of a mountain peak here and there, we have a tableland amid the clouds. The general trend of humanity is upward. To this discouraged and turbulent age this word is sent forth falling upon men's hearts like a message from heavenly battlements: "Goodness shall triumph, iniquity shall go down, integrity shall come to the throne; the darkness of the night is blooming into the lilies of the morning cloud, sweet harbingers of the brighter day to come."

1. Fundamentally, the growth of education and the very progress of the world are responsible for much of the existing social unrest.

Man is not satisfied with present comforts. Through education and travel he has caught a vision of better things. The World's Fair was an educator for 100,000 families. Entering those noble buildings and looking upon the conveniences for the workshop and kitchen and beauties for the parlor, and going home they were not at rest until the new had taken the place of the old, and the family had taken one step in higher civilization. When the boy catches sight of a pony, no longer has the rocking-horse charms for him. Next year some citizen will visit the World's Exposition at Paris and be amazed at the number of automobile carriages in use. At once he will sit down and with pencil figure the difference in cost between keeping a horse and surrey and an electric automobile carriage. To his surprise he will discover that with a five-year basis for calculation the latter is about as cheap. He will invest, and coming home will create an unrest in the bosoms of his neighbors which only a better and finer vehicle can satisfy.

When Commodore Perry, seventy-five year ago, sailed into the harbor of Tokio, Japan, he found a nation barbarian, but content. They had no education, but were satisfied; they wore few clothes, but were satisfied; they were oppressed by their rulers, but long slavery had made them content. But when the Commodore and his sailors marched through the streets the people saw comfortable garments and the weapons of warefare of civilization. They found that the American youth was educated. At once a sublime discontent siezed hold of the nation. One hundred and twenty boys were sent to Yale and Harvard for education. The tools of civilization and comforts of life are fast taking the place of the rude implements of savagery, and for many years Japan has been filled with the noise of reconstruction.

Discontent and unrest often means advancement and progress. Adam and Eve were content to walk in the garden in the cool of the day, but now the bicycle has made walking contemptible.

2. False ideas of life breed discontent.

Our cities have much good in them, but also much iniquity. Six thousand saloons in Chicago mean much unrest for a large number of her population. A few years ago, during a labor strike, there marched down the streets of the city a vast procession of men. Upon one of their carried banners was the inscription: "Our Children Cry for Bread." Their destination was one of the parks of the city, where that day they consumed fourteen hundred kegs of beer! The wages of dissipation is unrest. Many young men feel that to have a good time means to squander their earnings in riotous living. Instead of saving they sow to the wind and reap the whirlwind of disappointment and dissatisfaction. Many of them will become the anarchists and extreme socialists of to-morrow, demanding that the rich make division with them.

3. A constant element of disturbance: the inventive faculty crystallized into labor-saving machinery.

Such is the inventive genius of our people that each year witnesses the displacement of large numbers of workingmen through the increasing use of machinery. Recently two machines were put into use which resulted in the throwing out of employment of fifty thousand men and with their famlies influencing two hundred and fifty thousand persons.

When the inventor was testing the machine one of the workmen stood by his side and anxiously awaited the result. When he saw that the test was successful he burst into tears and exclaimed: "This morning I entered that door as a skilled laborer. For twenty years I have received four dollars per day. I have looked forward to the day when my children could receive the advantages of the higher education denied me, but all my hopes are blasted. I go out of that door a common day laborer." Sad the confession of this man! And yet, he is but the spokesman for thousands.

But there is a brighter side. No doubt, while this invention took away from him his skilled profession, it gave ten unskilled men in another community labor. Fifty years ago the ten-talent or skilled workman made shoes sitting at a bench and laboring fourteen hours per day. Shoes were so expensive that but few could afford them. Machinery for making shoes was invented. The price became cheaper. While fifty years ago one ten-talent man received employment, now, as the shoe passes from cowhide to finished product, fifty one-talent men make a comfortable living.

Machinery is not an enemy to happiness. So far from tools degrading men, they represent the uttermost of kindness and divine benefaction. With a wide sweep of view we may truthfully say that through invention five men now have labor where formerly one was employed. The new adjustment causes disturbance for a time, however.

Printing presses make demand for cheap books, carpet looms for floor coverings, sewing machines for more dresses and coats. Steam dredges made possible the Suez Canal, steam drills the railroad over the mountains, electricity comforts and helps innumerable.

4. The great changes now taking place in the industrial world through the growing power of trusts.

This is the greatest cloud upon the country's horizon to-day. In his testimony before the Industrial Commission recently Mr. P. E. Dowe, president of the American Commercial Travelers' League, stated that thousands of traveling men were being thrown out of employment by the combinations of most lines of goods; and instead of salaries being raised for the few who remain, they were being lowered. The dividends must be paid, though the people suffer. This is not a political question to be juggled with by the politicians, but one affecting the life of the whole people. Could the truth be known of the methods employed in the organization of trusts the public would be amazed.

5. Immigration of the weak and incompetent.

As the River Nile by its annual overflow enriches the fields and gives harvests to Egypt, so the flood of immigration has swept over the great West and Northwest, and blessed these states with happiness.

But some who come are unwelcome by all who love America's highest interests. Many come low of forehead, large of backhead, thin and weak of blood, diseased, without nerve, energy or ambition, and a century will be required for the nation to expel this poison from the social system. They settle in the large cities, and among them is found abundant material for the anarchist and hysterical reformer.

6. The follies of the brutal rich in the centers of population.

Display of wealth and extravagance of expenditure tend to embitter the toiling masses. Some men honestly make money and wisely distribute it. Others use their wealth only for show. The Bradley-Martin ball of last winter aggravated the growing discontent among New York's laboring masses.

But are we looking in the right direction for happiness? Paul said that "the things seen are temporal, while the unseen things are eternal." Perhaps we hope to be satisfied by neglecting the higher demands of the soul. The spirit of man thirsts for that which alone the Christian religion can give.

The great Teacher said, "Come unto me . . . . and ye shall find rest." "I am come that they might have life, and have it more abundantly."

We need knowledge of life, forgiveness, fellowship, true riches and a hope of immortality; this God's Word gives.

The world alone cannot satisfy; Christ can. Paul learned the secret that should be sought for by thousands: "I have learned in every state to be content." The gospel he preached can rectify all ills and satisfy all hearts.

Contentment shall yet roll like a glorious flood over our long troubled earth.

Leaves from Mission Fields—IV.

CHAS. E. GARST.

"In all my life I felt
God's presence evermore,
And reverently knelt
To love and to adore.

Such let the record be;
I charge you, friends of mine,
Add but a date to this life-history—
The obituary line."

Any treatment of the character of our missionary hero would be incomplete without some mention of his beautiful home-life and influence. His home was his realm, in which he ruled by the law of love. To this object-lesson the native converts gave heed as to a light that shines in a dark place. The presence and the influence of a Christian home in the lands of idols are of priceless value to the cause of missions. Paganism makes no homes as they are known to our holy religion. A tree is known by its fruit. The gospel can rest its claims to the serious consideration of thoughtful men on what it has done for the human life in every land where it has gone. Mr. Garst was a most tender husband and father. This was his chief chrrm and power. On the eve of his last sickness he wrote a characteristic letter to his three children who were visiting their aunt, Mrs. W. E. Macklin, in Nankin, China. The closing words of the letter were as follows: "Goodnight. Many prayers that you may be fruitful, honest and pure. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Surely, it must be somewhere written that the virtues of such a father shall be visited on the children in every generation till the end of time. These fatherless children are rich in the heritage of a good name, which is better than precious ointment. That which most engaged his thoughts as he entered the valley of shadows was the theme on which he had constantly discoursed to great assemblies. To one who sat by his side he said: "My waking and my sleeping thoughts have been of righteousness." The light of his pathway continued to shine brighter and brighter till it was lost in the dawn of the perfect day. To such a life there is no death as there is no life to him who sees the infinite and the unknown.

"It is but crossing, with abated breath,
And white, set faces, a little strip of sea."

The influence of this sainted missionary will be felt in the coming years in two hemispheres even more than it was in the days when he lived, and wrought, and sacrificed for the salvation of Japan. His sympathies and affections were too great to be confined within narrow channels. He loved all men, and gave his support to every effort that was made to establish the reign of righteousness on earth. The following is an expression of the National Temperance League of Japan: "Mr. Garst was one whose life was devoted to every good work. Every benevolent movement had his support. Every phase of suffering he tried to relieve. The unselfishness and wideness of his sympathy with the common people caused him to give, not only of his time and strength, but his life also to their uplifting. His devotion to the temperance cause and to other efforts to enlighten and bless the people, made him a power in all religious and reform movements that have brought blessings to Japan. His devotion is an example and an inspiration to all, and we believe his influence will long abide." That life is long which answers life's great end. The average time of a missionary's service on the foreign field is only about five years. The public ministry of the Master covered a period of only three years and six months. It seems briefer than a flash—yet, measured by results, it was longer than an age. The Apostle Paul was anxious to magnify his Lord, whether by life or by death. It is good to teach the heathen by example, both how to live and how to die. The sick bed on which Charles E. Garst fought his last battle and gained his last victory was in reality the best pulpit in which he preached. His heroic faith, radiant hope and patient suffering were object-lessons of more value than many sermons. The following quotations are invested with new interest, emphasized as they were by this soldier of the cross as he passed into the valley of the shadow of death: "I know whom I have believed." "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me shall never die." "My love to all the relatives. Tell them I can only commend them to God who is able to raise them from the dead—I have no confidence in any other." With many other words he also gave evidence of the fact that he had reached the end in peace and was about to lay down the burden at the Master's feet. Like a peaceful river, with green and shaded banks, the current of his life flowed into the waveless sea. On the twenty-eighth day of December, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, in his mission home, in close touch with those whom he could no longer serve, but would ever love, he turned his face to heaven and was gone! It must be sweet to die in such surroundings. In such an experience the change that comes but once cannot seem so strange to the soul as it enters the isles of the blessed, where the sun is ever shining and where separations never come.

"Noiseless, timeless, all-forgetting,
Shall his sleep Elysian be,
While eternal tides are setting
Inland from that mystic seat."

"Take time by the forelock." If your blood is out of order, begin taking Hood's Sarsaparilla at once and prevent serious illness.

Our Budget.

—This is the Year of Jubilee.

—And this is the week the jubilation begins.

—This issue of the paper will reach many of our readers first at Cincinnati, whither the tribes "go up."

—Even as we write these lines the caravans are moving, steam-drawn, across many distant states and territories towards the place of rendezvous.

—"The receipts of the American Christian Missionary Society for the Jubilee Year," writes B. L. Smith in a note charged with the electric current, "are $100,550.99." No wonder he adds, "We feel like singing the Doxology." Wait till we all get there, Bro. S., and we will help you sing it.

—When it was proposed at Chattanooga to make $100,000 the goal for which to struggle this Jubilee Year, a conservative brother said, "What's the use of naming a sum we know cannot be reached?" B. L. Smith came forward with a ringing speech and said, "We can raise it and ought to raise it and we should name no smaller sum." It is raised. Faith conquered doubt.

—Let us be very thankful and very grateful for what we have accomplished the past year and during the past Fifty Years, but let us not be brag-ful, if we can help it. We have done nothing more than our duty this year, which shows we have been falling a long ways behind our duty in previous years. If we humble ourselves before God he will enable us to do even greater things in the years to come.

—Boer and Briton still stand facing each other in South Africa armed, waiting for the signal. Will it be war or peace? That will depend upon whether reason or passion will prevail in the next few days. There is apparent hesitation on both sides about taking the decisive step, and well there may be, for war will not leave political boundaries as they are now.

—The Outlook wants Admiral Dewey to go back to Manila as civil governor of the Philippines and finish his job. The suggestion isn't a bad one. If the Filipinos will believe and trust any American it is Admiral Dewey, and they would be inclined to make terms as early as possible.

—At nine o'clock on Thursday morning of this week the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special will pull out of Union Station, this city, over the Big Four R. R., with its load of delegates to the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati. On the same day there will be special cars over the B & O. Railroad filled with delegates bound for the same city. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special is to be run through to Cincinnati with but few stops, so that it promises to be a happy occasion for those going by that route. But these two lines are but a foretaste of what will occur on that day and the remaining days of the week. From all parts of the country the great iron steeds of transportation will be drawing delegates by the hundreds and by the thousands to the great convention.

—The assistant editor enjoyed the pleasure of renewing his acquaintance with the church at Mexico, Mo., on last Sunday. The occasion of the visit was the dedication of the new church building in Benton City, for which the pastor of the church in Mexico, S. D. Dutcher, was wanted. This gave the assistant editor the opportunity of supplying the pulpit of the church in Mexico. The dedication of the church in Benton City was a fine success. The audience at each service was large, and the supply in cash and pledges exceeded the immediate demand by over $100. These facts we learned before leaving Mexico. Although a large number of people went from Mexico to Benton City, yet there remained a good audience for the supply preacher, both morning and evening. There was one feature of the dedicatory services, however, that was a cause of regret to the Benton Church and others, and that was the inability of their pastor, J. W. Coggins, to be present. His physician in this city thought it best to have no interruption in his treatment, and so he was not present. We are, however, glad to report improvement in his case.

—Some weeks ago we published a provisional program of the A. M. C. S. for the Jubilee Convention. The program has now been finally arranged in all particulars and appears in this paper as it will be used in the Jubilee Convention.

—A. B. Jones' reply to Bro. Briney's last reply to him on Actual and Formal Remission of Sins came in too late to appear in this paper. Look for it next week.

—Delegates from Central and University Place Churches, Des Moines, Iowa, are going to Cincinnati by way of this city and from here to Cincinnati over the Big Four.

—The terrible tragedy near Montgomery, Mo., recently, by which three lives were extinguished, tells too plainly of the weakness of human nature and the need for its regeneration. There are many times in life when we need a stronger than human arm upon which to lean, lest we fall. Had the slayer of that bride and bridegroom and of himself had the faith in God that is the privilege of all helpless, dependent mortals, he would have found strength to have borne the disappointment to which an inconsiderate woman had subjected him by marriage to another person. There are trials in this life to which any person at some time may be subjected which cannot be endured uninjured without God's strengthening grace; but through Christ they can endure all things.

—Any church wishing to be placed in communication with a minister who, as well as his wife, is highly recommended—he as a pastor and she as a musician—may address T. J. Thompson, pastor First Christian Church, Lincoln, Nebraska.

—The Western Presbyterian is the name of a new religious journal published in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and takes rank with some of the leading journals of that religious family in the United States, both in appearace and in its contents.

—The churches of Moultrie County, Illinois, have formed an organization for cooperative work and mutual edification.

—For a succinct statement of the purposes and methods of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses procure a copy of the first number of the third volume of the Bethany C. E. Bulletin and carefully peruse its pages. The subscription price for the Bulletin has been reduced to 25 cents per year, single subscription; five subscriptions for $1.00; ten for $1.50, or fifteen for $2.00. This number of the Bulletin announces new publishers, new fields, new edition of all our handbooks, new handbooks and a new Bethany C. E. Reading Circle pin. The handbooks hereafter are to be published by Revell and an effort made to create a demand for them in the regular channels of trade. A list of Bethany C. E. Readers who have sent in examination papers on past courses is also contained in this number of the Bulletin, besides numerous other articles and items of interest and importance.

—The leading editorial in the Missionary Intelligencer for October emphasizes the fact that the year 1900 is the silver anniversary of the organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and dwells upon the importance of making the year memorable by greatly enlarging the work. With the increased interest in all missionary enterprises and the formation of a missionary conscience there is reason to hope for enlarged activities in this and other missionary societies. That it is the beginning of a century burdened with greater things for the world than any that has yet appeared ought to be another reason for greater things in the mission field, both home and foreign, than ever before.

—The Church Economist, of New York, for October, makes respectful mention of G. W. Moore's account of his combination service of school and church given in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST some weeks ago. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is abreast of the times in religious news and glad that we are so recognized by leading religious journals of the nation.

—The reported actions of preachers and others at a holiness convention held in this city last week shows the danger of pressing religion into the purely mythical realm where fanaticism, hypnotism and spiritism seem to combine into an indefinable, distinctionless mysticism. The fruits of the Holy Spirit are love, joy, peace, etc., and not sobs, moans, groans, pale-facedness and other evidences of ignorance of the way of life.

—W. H. McClain, of this city, so well known in Christian Endeavor circles throughout the United States as a prominent and successful manager of large delegations to Christian Endeavor and other conventions, has already announced arrangments for a delegation not to exceed one hundred persons to the convention in London next year. Aside from attending the convention in London, the delegates will have the privilege of four tours, one in the British Isles and three on the continent at remarkably low rates. Mr. McClain has issued a book describing these tours, together with information calculated to whet the touring appetite, which we have no doubt he would be glad to send to interested parties or to give any additional information wanted.

—A copy of the Christian Lesson Commentary on the International Bible studies for 1900, by W. W. Dowling, editor of all Bible-school supplies published by the Christian Publishing Company, this city, has just been laid on our table, and a hasty glance at its appearance and contents convinces us that it is in no way inferior to any former volume of the entire series of commentaries. Aside from the careful analysis, so characteristic of the author, each lesson outline abounds in helps, side lights, illustrations, comments and appropriate quotations from noted Bible commentators, authors and preachers. All of the lessons for 1900 are in the four Gospels, and being the first year of the new century, as we now count the centuries, ought to be a year of unusual activity and interest in Bible study and Bible work, in which this lesson commentary should play no inconsiderable part.

—It is reported in the daily press that Helen Gould will use her influence and money to prevent the seating of the Mormon Congressman, Roberts, in the next Congress. The dispatch to the Globe-Democrat shows that she takes a very high moral view of the subject. It says:

It is not wholly a sentiment at crusade that Miss Gould is entering into. Legal measures are to be taken. The majesty of the law is to be appealed to, and courts will be set in motion to stop what educated, refined women consider a crime, an act that would mean the lowering of the standard by which men judge the other sex, and a crying shame to civilization, as well as a stumblingblock in the way of woman's emancipation.

—It is officially announced that on the occasion of Pres. McKinley's visit to this city, he is to be entertained at the home of Mr. Joseph B. Greenhut, the "Boss" distiller and distiller and distinguished ex-president of the wiskey trust. Please tell your readers what you think of "our Christian President"—the "Gawdly man"—the head bartender of the Army Canteen. W. A. BRUBAKER.

If Pres. McKinley selected his host himself, and made the selection on the ground of his being a "Boss Distiller," we would not mind telling our readers what we think about it. In the absence of any evidence of this kind we prefer to tell our readers what we think of the foregoing letter. It is altogether unfair and ungenerous. Its tone is not calculated to help the temperance reform. A dignified criticism on Mr. McKinley's relation to the Army Canteen is well enough. But referring to him as "the Gawdly man" and "the head bartender of the Army Canteen" is not the sort of warfare that is going to down the saloon. This we say in the interest of the anti-saloon movement, which we heartily approve.

—In response to a message from the Missouri state convention, Jefferson City, Brother B. H. Smith sends to the committee and others the following very tender and loving message:

Dear Brethren Garrison, Monser and Winders, Committee: I thank the Missouri Christian Missionary Convention, recently assembled in Jefferson City, which, through you, sent me a letter of "fraternal greeting and brotherly love." It is a source of great consolation to me to be assured that I am "not forgotten," and that I "hold a warm place in the hearts of the brethren." The fraternal greeting and the prayer draw me nearer to God. I am stronger in the Lord because of this loving remembrance. Words cannot express my gratitude for this manifestation of the fellowship of the saints. Your brother, B. H. SMITH.

Canton, Mo., October 6, 1899

—We are informed that the Western Passenger Association refuses the thirty days extension of time on their tickets to the Jubilee Convention. This unfavorable bit of information may not be pleasing to many of the delegates from the West, but no blame attaches to the secretaries, men or committees who have had these matters in charge. They have worked hard to get the lowest possible rates in the Western Association and also the best terms as to tickets, but with the result stated.

A Leader in our Journalism.

A number of our religious periodicals find their way to my desk every week, representing a wide territory of activity and influence, from the little local church bulletin to the dignified, sweet-spirited and solidly reliable CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We have long since learned to look upon the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as no longer a luxury, but a necessity. Its prompt and courteous recognition of items of news from an extended field, and its timely and well-chosen articles of great importance, is to us a blending of pleasure and profit. Such a paper has a stimulating tendency. In the field of literature every book, sermon, speech or dissertation is the arrangement in a whole of the gathered parts; and when these gathered parts are presented to us in such a manner as to thoroughly convince us of what is high and noble and true they become ours, and by weaving themselves into the marvelous web and woof of the mind we cannot in one sense rid ourselves of them, as they become constitutionally our own. Individually, I owe much to this leader in our journalism in the line of healthy, stimulating thought and action.

"A Good Name At Home

Is a Tower of Strength Abroad." This truth has been perfectly verified by the history of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which effected its first cures in Lowell, Mass., where it is made and where it still has a larger sale than all other blood purifiers. Its fame and cures and sales have spread abroad all over the world, and it is universally recognized as the best blood medicine money can buy.

PERSONAL MENTION.

E. E. Davidson is now engaged in a good meeting in Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Geo. Wetzel writes that the church at Farmer City, Ill., is progressing nicely and will be ready for dedication by December 1st.

S. A. Ennefer has taken work for the church at London Mills and at Harmon, in Illinois, and writes encouragingly of the outlook at these points.

Christian Visitor, Sherman, Texas, says that David Walk and his son, a prominent attorney of Los Angeles, Cal., are to make Sherman their headquarters.

T. H. Kuhn, recent pastor of the church at Greensburg, Indiana, has become state evangelist. A good picture of him, together with a brief sketch of his life, appears on the first page of the Indiana Christian for October.

The Christian Oracle, October 5th, gives an excellent likeness of F. G. Tyrrell, pastor of the First Christian Church, Chicago. The cool breezes of the lake do not seem to have driven the smiles from his face as yet.

J. H. Allen, of Luystown, Mo., is open to engagements for November. Will teach primary classes, church choirs or glee clubs, or hold protracted meetings. He uses Gospel Melodies in choir and revival work.

The Central Christian Collegian, Albany, Mo., for October, tells us that P. O. Powell, formerly of C. C. C., later of Drake University, has been called to the chair of chemistry in the Columbian School of Osteopathy at Kirksville.

The Watch Tower, Washington, N. C., in a recent number quotes from Joseph F. Newton's excellent article on "The Curse of Commercialism," which recently appeared in this paper, strongly emphasizing the truth of the quotation and of the article.

J. M. Vawter, pastor of the church in Liberty, Mo., paid his respects to this office on last Monday. He is on his way to Charleston, Ill, and thence to the Jubilee Convention. He was recently assisted in a protracted meeting at Liberty, by F. O. Fannon, of this city, in which there were 42 additions; 19 baptisms.

E. M. Smith, pastor of the church in Centralia, Mo., was in the city this week. Bro. Smith is quite a familiar man at this office, having been for several years the pastor of the Beulah Christian Church, of this city, and a faithful member of our ministerial association.

T. W. Grafton, of Rock Island, Ill., is in the city this week, looking after business matters. Bro. Grafton is widely known throughout the brotherhood, both as a successful preacher and interesting writer. His recent book on "Men of Yesterday" is a popular contribution to our historic literature.

J. W. Shively, of Paola, Kan., passed through this city on last Tuesday on his way home from Indiana. He has been preaching in Southern Indiana during the summer. He called a few moments at this office and went from here to Missouri state convention at Jefferson City. On his arrival home he expects to meet two soldier sons just returned from the Philippine Islands. Although 70 years of age, Bro. Shively is still quite active and vigorous.

From the Missionary Tidings for October we learn that Dr. Arabella Merrill, who was one of the C. W. B. M.'s first medical missionaries, is now in the Klondike. The Tidings has this to say of her Klondike mission: "With her usual vigor and earnestness she is doing good to all as she has opportunity, not only in caring for the sick and unfortunate, but in working for the best development of those who are far from home and all its wholesome restraints. That the men of the camp at Grand Fork, Yukon Territory, may have a pure and helpful place to spend their leisure hours, she is planning to open a reading-room for them. We will be glad to receive at our headquarters and to forward to her, books friends may donate for this purpose. Send only books of the best character—histories, biographies, travels, fiction, and the best religious books. Many of the miners are college graduates and professional men. Do not delay in this matter. Send the books to us at once, please."

M. M. Davis, publisher Christian Courier, has been assigned to preach at the Richmond Street Church, Cincinnati, Oct. 15th, by the supply committee of the Jubilee Convention.

W. W. Blalock has joined in the journalistic crusade against Mormonism. He is writing a series of interesting articles in the Register-Review on the doctrinal errors and inconsistencies of Mormonism.

D. H. Bays, author of "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," has closed his work for the church at Englishville, Mich., and can be secured by any church in need of a strong preacher. His address now is 205 Champion St., Battle Creek, Michigan.

Charles E. Taylor, pastor of the Grant St. Christian Church, Omaha, Neb., concluded his labors there Oct. 1st and has removed to Winona, Ohio, where he says he will rest from active pastoral work for a season. In leaving Omaha he addressed a touching souvenir farewell letter to his congregation.

Christian Commonwealth, London, England, says that Dr. Lorimer appears to be the only American preacher who can draw crowded houses in England. We fear that the Commonwealth has not made due allowance for English conservatism.

J. P. Davis, of Decatur, Ill., can be secured for protracted meetings or for regular pastoral work, in which he has had much experience. He can also be secured for a lecture by any church, Endeavor society or Sunday-school, in which he is highly reputed for wisdom, wit, humor and pathos. His residence in Decatur is 1099 Macon St.

The Missionary Intelligencer for October contains the pictures of two new missionaries, Miss Bertha Marshall, daughter of our city evangelist, A. J. Marshall, now on the ocean for India, and Mrs. L. C. McPherson, our missionary to Cuba.

Lathrop Cooley, of Medina, Ohio, has given $5,000 to each of the following missionary societies this year: The Foreign, the Home and the C. W. B. M.; $15,000 in all. Aside from the direct benefits of the money contributed the example of liberality will have a most healthful effect upon the churches and bear fruit for years to come.

Among the numerous cuts of prominent persons in the Christian Standard of last week is that of our friend and co-laborer, W. A. Foster, formerly of this city, but now pastor of Walnut Hills Church, Cincinnati.

F. A. Bright and wife are now pleasantly settled in their new work at Painesville, O., and write that the work is opening hopefully. He is preaching a series of sermons to young people, and has been elected editor of the Visitor, a neat little four-page paper published by the church people.

E. W. Thornton passed through this city last week on his way to Mayfield, Ky., which he has recently accepted as a new field of labor. Bro. Thorton is a staunch friend of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Bro. Thornton is an active, studious preacher of the Word, and we are sure that Kentucky will appreciate his sermons and work.

James Small took charge of the church at Bedford, Ind., two weeks ago. This church has a membership of over 800. He writes that this will be a busy pastorate and he trust also a pleasant, helpful and profitable one. Z. T. Sweeney, who filled the pulpit recently, will supply two or three Sundays in November, while Bro. Small helps J. H. McNeill and the Muncie Church in a protracted meeting.

On last Friday we had the pleasure of a call from Prof. W. E. M. Hackleman and his wife as they were returning from the convention at Jefferson City. We were especially glad of the opportunity of a personal acquaintance with Sister Hackleman, but we do not yet know which of the twain is the author of the unique ceremony by which their marriage vows were expressed and solemnized.

W. E. Garrison landed in New York in time to see the latter end of the Dewey celebration. He saw his famous warship in the Bay of Naples and again in New York Harbor. The readers of "Wheeling Through Europe," however, will be glad to know that it will be some weeks yet before the writer authentically lands in New York.

The New England Messenger for October informs us that Bro. Geo. H. Mills, of East Holden, Me., recently lost his home property by fire. Buildings and all therein burned while he was away preaching. Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism.

THE CHRISTIAN PUB. CO., St. Louis, Mo.:

Gentlemen:—I have just examined Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism, and am surprised that the author, with no investigation worth mentioning, should assume to say the Spaulding manuscript theory must be abandoned. His statement shows that he doesn't even know what that theory involved. I call attention to this so that in a second edition he may be led to further investigation.

Yours very truly,
A. T. SCHROEDER.

REPLY.

205 Champion St., Battle Creek, Mich., Aug. 9, 1899.

HON. A. T. SCHROEDER, Salt Lake City:

Dear Sir:—Your communication of the 1st inst., forwarded by the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo., for my consideration, is at hand and contents noted. Permit me to assure you that I am glad to have discovered a gentleman sufficiently acquainted with the facts to afford me some additional information concerning the "Spaulding manuscript theory" of the origin of the Book of Mormon. I am not loath to confess that I do not know all that may be known upon that question, and I assure you that I shall only be too glad to duly consider any fact that may tend to throw any additional light upon this somewhat perplexing question. Although reared in the faith of the Mormon Church and trained in its history and philosophy, and while I had preached its doctrines and defended its theology in twenty-three public discussions, yet there is no doubt much for me to learn respecting the Spaulding romance.

One thing, perhaps, which has helped me to reach this conclusion is your unqualified statement that the author of "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism" "does not even know what that theory involved." Before reading your letter I had really flattered myself that I understood, not only the "theory," but also "what that theory involved." During my forty years of experience with Mormonism, and especially during the period of my public debates in its defense, I had carefully examined every fact, every argument advanced in support of the Spaulding theory, which includes the testimony of Mrs. Davidson, Mr. Spaulding's widow, Mrs. McKinstry, his daughter, the Rev. Dr. Storrs, et al.—in fact, everything my opponents could produce—and yet the author has made "no investigation worth mentioning." This reminds me how sadly even authors are sometimes mistaken in themselves.

A critic who is able so to discover the shortcomings of a writer as to justify him in the conclusions you seem to have reached must be in possession of a rich store of information to which the writer did not have access. In view of the fact that you "call attention to this so that in a second edition he may be led to further investigation," the writer respectfully requests that you furnish him such evidence as may be in your possession which will in the least aid in reaching just conclusions.

It was my aim when writing "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism" to present "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," and if I have failed in this I have fallen short of my ideal. Will you, therefore, as an attorney with a thorough understanding of the laws of evidence, give me such facts as would be admissible under Greenleaf's rules in order to prove, not merely assert, that the Spaulding romance is the foundation and origin of the Book of Mormon?

As a lawyer you must have what to you are good and valid reasons for being "surprised that the author with no investigation worth mentioning should assume to say that the Spaulding manuscript theory must be abandoned."

Please give me the facts upon which you rely, and state the reasons for your great surprise. I am at the present time engaged in writing upon a subject involving this issue, and shall be delighted to avail myself of any reliable information you may possess which will throw more light upon the questions involved. Hoping to hear from you at once, I am very respectfully

Yours for the whole truth,
D. H. BAYS.

FLORENCE AND VENICE.

It is doubly hard to leave Rome. It seems, in the first place, like doing violence to all that is sacred to stop there only three days, but the exigencies of a bicycle trip do not admit of a protracted residence. In the second place, the roads leading out of Rome are as hard to find as those leading into it. But we set about the task heroically at five o'clock one morning, and passing up the Corso and through the Porta del Populo, soon emerged upon the dreary Campagna. It was doubly desolate that morning, for there hung upon it like a pall a rank miasmic fog. It was the kind of fog that could be cut with a knife—if the knife were sharp enough. Old inhabitants said it was worse than usual, but the Campagna has a great reputation for that sort of thing. It is really Roman fever in visible and tangible form, and it is this which makes the Campagna an almost uninhabitable waste. Rome rises on her seven hills in the midst of this shallow sea of liquid death. The hills are mere bumps—Kansas City can show larger—but, assisted by an excellent drainage system, of which the ancient Cloaca Maxima is still the backbone, they are enough to make the difference between populous Rome and the desolate Campagna. Nevertheless, we ate that same liquid fever as it condensed on the blackberries by the roadside that morning and found both it and them very palatable. Italy is a many-sided land. When one thinks of its art, it is a vast gallery and museum. Looked at with reference to its roads, it is an immense "switchback" which the cyclist always has to ride the wrong way. In another aspect I shall always think of it as a blackberry patch, bounded only by the Mediterranean and the Alps.

The road from Rome to Florence is hilly and toilsome at its best, and by the time we had lost ourselves a few times, had climbed a mountain range or two where there was no road and had ridden most of the byways in that part of the peninsula, it developed into quite the most fatiguing section of the whole trip. But there were compensations, for we saw untrodden parts of Italy. There was one little town, Bagnaja by name, which travelers never touch unless they are lost as we were, which paid for several hard hills. The square was full of people when we rode into it. It was not a marketday crowd, for it was composed almost entirely of men and there were none of the paraphernalia of trade in sight. It looked like a political gathering of some sort, perhaps a crowd waiting for election returns which were not due to arrive for an hour or more—but that is only a guess. At any rate, when we halted at the great stone fountain in the middle of the square, all other business was laid aside and the crowd massed about us. Of course, we were accustomed to being stared at in the villages, but such intense and unanimous interest was entirely unexpected. When we put a drop of oil on our wheels, the excitement rose to fever heat, and when one of us began to pump up a tire they fairly fought for places in the front row. It seemed a pity to lose such a large and attentive audience. Damon said he had never a chance to talk to so many people at once and he would do it now at any cost. So after a few preliminary maneuvers he mounted the fountain and gave them a rendition of "Spartacus to the Gladiators," which may perhaps be surpassed, but never equaled. When he came to the thrilling words, "If there be three among you dare meet me on the bloody sands," and paused with outstretched hand for a reply, I trembled for the results, but not a man in all that craven crowd took up the challenge, and Damon, who couldn't remember any more of Spartacus, went on to remark that he had "come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him!"

It was over two hundred miles by our route from Rome to Florence, and I scarcely dared believe that we were approaching the "Lily of the Arno" until passing the crest of a hill the city lay before and below us. There were all the noble landmarks long familiar to the mind's eye but hitherto unseen—the cathedral of Santa Maria del Fiore, crowned with Brunelleschi's great dome and hallowed by the memory of Savonarola's preaching; beside it Giotto's bell tower, the airiest structure ever built of marble; before it the domed Baptistery with Ghiberti's bronze "Gates of Paradise" and the unique tower of the Palazzo Vacchio, in which Savonarola was imprisoned and in front of which he was burned. All these, seen at a glance from that hilltop gave promise of the joys in store.

Florence is not a place to be spoken of lightly. I cannot even take its name upon my lips or pen without a feeling of reverence which needs no further description to those who know and love the Florentine heroes from Dante and Giotto and Petrarch, through the long list of painters, sculptors, cathedral builders, story-tellers, poets and humorists, whose work was the prelude and introduction of modern civilization. It is a beautiful city, lying in the narrow valley of the Arno, girt about with wooden hills, but its beauty of location is not what one goes to see. One wishes to see the Florence of the Renaissance—the Florence of Dante and Giotto, of Galileo, of Fra Angelico and Savonarola—and the charm of it is that this is just what one may see, if the eyes of his soul are keen. Of course, Dante's house has been "done over" till scarcely a stick of it can be confidently accepted as original, and not many of the walls which Giotto covered with his paintings are still standing. But there, well authenticated, is the street in which the divine Beatrice lived and at the corner of which Dante sat and sighed and gradually wrought the vision of her beauty into a vision of heavenly truth. And there is the chapel in the church of Santa Croce, on the wall of which Giotto painted scenes from the life of St. Francis of Assisi. Fortunately, many of the names which one loves to remember here are the names of artists, and the artist leaves behind him a visible and permanent record of his work. Hence it is that in its very walls the Florence of Italy to-day speaks to us of the Florence of the Renaissance.

One Sunday morning, when the sun was bright and the Sunday calm of a New England village brooded over the city, I strolled out to the monastery of San Marco to burn a pinch of incense at the shrine of the uncanonized saint, Savonarola, and to rise on the wings of praise with Fra Angelico's painted angels on the walls. When Cosimo dei Medici gave this building to the Dominicans early in the fifteenth century, Brother Angelico, painter and monk, began to adorn it. Kneeling, and with tears in his eyes as he depicted the sufferings of our Lord, he painted in chapel and refectory and cloister large pictures of the Annunciation and Crucifixion and of adoring angels, and on the wall of each separate cell he painted a little picture, so that each monk might have some portion as his own peculiar possession. Later Savonarola took up his residence here, and it was as Prior of San Marco that he became the leader of political and social revolution in Florence. In that day of crisis when the mob came to the convent to carry its prior away to his death, Fra Bartolommeo, Angelico's successor as convent painter, and like him one of the greatest artists of the century, stood by the prior with a crucifix for a weapon and repelled invaders till he was overpowered. Then when the storm had passed, when the prophet had been burned and his ashes scattered, Bartolommeo returned to San Marco and painted that famous portrait of Savonarola which is still to be seen there. A Sunday morning visit to San Marco, with its pictures and its memories, can be recommended as fully equal to any sermon and better than most.

To go from Florence to Venice one must cross the entire range of the Apennines and then the valley of the Po. The latter is easy enough, but the Apennines are always hard, even when a head wind does not blow rain in your face. But the rain lasted only long enough to drive us for refuge into a cottage where an old woman was spinning flax by the most primitive method imaginable. She was much amused that we should show interest in her every-day doings, but thought that we were well worth looking at and wondering about. It is queer how many queer people we meet who think we are queer.

After sixty miles of continual climbing out of one valley into another—and that is the whole story of riding in the Apennines—we reach the end of the plain. Three charming old cities ie along the route from this point to Venice—Bologna, Ferrara and Padua. The first and last seem to maintain a reasonable measure of their former prosperity, but Ferrara has the appearance of a collapsed boom town of four centuries ago. Its ancient ramparts still mark out the space which it once filled, but much of it is now wilderness, some of it is market garden, and the shrunken population rattles around in the rest like a dry pea in its pod. A wretched statue of Savonarola before the church reminds the passer-by that this was his birthplace and that Ferrara seeks some share of the lustre which the name of her greatest son has shed upon his adopted home, Florence.

After Marriage

They are going to be together just as much as before; going to ride the wheel, take little pleasure jaunts, etc., enjoying everything together. Isn't that what many a young couple promise each other? And yet, how very soon the wife begins to say "No, I don't think I care to go. You go alone, dear." Young women don't reckon on the great physical changes which follow marriage. How can they when they are allowed to grow up in entire ignorance of vital physiological facts? They feel languid, weak and nervous. Sometimes there is headache and backache. The pulse no more leaps in answer to the thought of a spin on the wheel. Women who have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, know how promptly the languor, headache, backache, nervousness and weakness are cured by this medicine. Many husbands write in gratitude to Dr. Pierce for the medicine which gives them back the wife's companionship, as it gives her back her health.

"All praise is due to you for your wonderful 'Favorite Prescription,'" writes Mr. John W. Coffman, of Ellisburg, Casey Co., Ky. "My wife suffered with female irregularity; was confined to bed every three weeks. After using two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription she was cured, and has not suffered any derangement since. Your 'Favorite Prescription' is a boon to delicate women."

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

These old cities are well enough in their way, but when one comes within easy thinking distance of Venice all other places must be considered merely as stations on the road. One cannot think very hard about even Padua, with its old university, the very type and pattern of a mediæval seat of learning, when he knows that moonlight on the Grand Canal is just ahead.

The beauty about Venice is that with all its richness it has a vast number of sights which must be seen. Even the conscientious and energetic sightseer loses his haste and learns to loiter along the narrow streets or recline contentedly under the awning of a gondola, while it slides quietly through the shady side canals. And that is seeing Venice; for you can't absorb the spirit of the city unless you forget all your anxieties, even the anxiety to see the sights of Venice, and adopt its comfortable pace. You can no more "do" Venice in a hurry than you can make haste to go to sleep. The soothing effect of the Venetian atmosphere is nowhere better illustrated than in the fact that even the gondoliers, who take the place of cabmen of other cities, are mild-mannered and quiet. Their boats lie in rows at the various "stands," and applicants for gondolas always take the one at the end, while the returning boats take their place at the other end. Only the man whose turn it is to have the next passenger ever makes any effort to solicit patronage, and he not much. The others are somewhere in the shade. Speaking after the manner of baseball, it is Antonio at the bat, Giovanni on deck, and the rest on the players' bench. Since the gondolier is a sort of cabman, the traditions of the craft of course require that he shall uniformly demand more than the legal rate of fare, but the environment has produced such a marked variation from the ordinary type of cabman that his extortionate demands are made without spirit and obviously with no hope of success. They are made merely to preserve the honor of the guild, and only the most timorous travelers ever take them seriously. The frugal reader (if there is any such) may be interested to know that the legal fare for a gondola is equivalent to twenty-five cents an hour, and that a gondola accommodates five persons.

There are several churches of exceptional interest in Venice, and there is the Academy of Art, which must be visited if you wish to become acquainted with Giovanni Bellini (for you can't study him to advantage anywhere else, not even in the Uffizi and Pitti galleries at Florence), and no one needs to be told that the Doges' Palace is a piece of architectural perfection which must be enjoyed both inside and out. But the things which constitute Venice for me are the Cathedral of St. Mark and the canals. My prescription for a satisfactory sojourn in Venice is: Between visits to St. Mark's ride about in a gondola, the small canals by day for the shade, and the Grand Canal by night for moonlight and music; and between gondola rides visit St. Mark's.

Scraps from the Desk.

I question if there be degrees in miracles so far as the power is concerned. It requires divine power to create an atom—just the same as to launch a world. Between making a leaf and creating a planet I distinguish no grades of power. It is wholly unnecessary, I think, to contend that the body of our Lord was in any way differrent after his resurrection from what it was before his death. His sudden appearance within barred doors or his vanishing from sight required no greater miracle than stilling the tempest or restoring the life of Lazarus. "See my hands and my feet, that I am he; handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as you perceive me to have. And they gave him a part of a broiled fish, and taking it he ate in their presence" (Luke 24:39-43). I once heard Isaac Errett say in a sermon: "Jesus carried to heaven a glorified human body and enthroned it there."

It is painful to hear a preacher raising doubts before a trusting audience in regard to the apostleship of Matthias. The baptism of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost was for a special purpose. The apostles were under divine direction before this, however. It was too serious a time for a blunder. Jesus had his chosen teachers well in hand, no doubt. Matthias was certainly qualified. Peter had been already designated to look after the flock. He appealed to the Holy Scriptures, and the casting of the lot was before the Lord. When the fiery tongues appeared Matthias was not slighted. When Peter stood up to speak for the King, Matthias was in his place as one of the "witnesses." As the Holy Spirit recognized him—and Peter, who had the keys, didn't disturb him—I think we can safely let the record stand. God allowed, to say the least, the first chapter of Acts to go into the record, and it's been there a good while, and he allowed the things to occur there recorded.

Over and above all human criticisms, over and above all our theories of inspiration, is Divine Providence. Many will stumble and fall beyond recovery, no doubt, in the distractions of controversy about portions of the Bible, but the great Book itself will, no doubt, without any material change, continue to be the faithful guide and inspirer of all in every age that may devote themselves to saving souls.

There is much of ordinary history in the Bible. Some of the records, dates, names, etc., are such as could be set down as a part of the history of the times by any competent person. A part of the testimony of the apostles could have been given without inspiration. They saw, heard and remembered just as we do. They could even have testified to the resurrection of our Lord without inspiration. But they could not have revealed to us the Word of God without inspiration. God inspired them to tell correctly what they already knew and to reveal still other truth as he imparted it to them. Now God made the shell as well as the kernel. I have an idea that the kernel will always need the shell.

God's revealed will lies between the beginning of Genesis and the close of Revelation. It is enswathed there, no doubt, in the way that seemed wise to him. It will likely continue about that way. Jesus and the apostles paid wonderful respect to the Old Testament. They drew constantly from this great treasury of divine thought, without a single slur or doubt. It is hardly worth while to undertake to mutilate the book that Jesus used so authoritatively. If the Old Testament stands, there can be no question about the New. In this faith the martyrs endured. In this faith stand all the forces to-day that may be expected to do anything toward the evangelization of the waiting nations.

New York Letter.

We had the pleasure of a recent visit from Bro. Gilbert Harvey, of Waynesburg, Green County, Penn., who was on his way from a summer's outing at Popham Beach, Maine, to his field of labor at Waynesburg. He reports the young church at that place as in a growing, hopeful condition.

Among the honored servants of the Lord whom we were delighted to see at our home recently was Bro. W. Durban, of London, who writes the interesting "English Topics" appearing biweekly in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He and Sister Durban have come to America to visit relatives, to see our wonderful country and attend the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati. Bro. Durban is supplying for a few Lord's days the Sterling Place pulpit in Brooklyn. Besides his pastoral work in London and his staff work on the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Bro. Durban is associate editor of the Christian Commonwealth, London, and also president of the Christian Association of Great Britain. He came to us some fifteen years ago from the Baptists. He was a warm friend of Spurgeon and helped him in preparing his commentary on the Psalms, "The Treasure House of David." He is a most delightful conversationalist and an interesting talker before a congregtaion. He gave us a most pleasing address at prayer-meeting recently.

Bro. B. Q. Denham began his new pastorate with the church on W. 56th St., last Lord's day, Oct 1st, under favorable auspices. We hear that large and interested congregations waited upon his ministry at the opening services. For many reasons the 56th St. field is a difficult one, but for others it is bright with possibilities and promises. We sincerely hope and pray that Bro. Denham and this historic old church may be richly blessed of God in their labors together. Bro. John Keevil is much encouraged with the work and the outlook in the Second Church field, Brooklyn. Four persons confessed Christ at the service a week ago and others are almost persuaded. This makes some eight or ten good additions to that church recently. The congregation holds the house of worship free of all incumbrance and owes but $1,500 on the lots which are easily worth $3,500.

The young congregation at Kensington, Brookyln, ministered to by Bro. Chilton Dean (a "lay brother" who works at the carpenter's trade to pay expenses, but preaches the gospel on the Lord's day), is doing well. The Sunday-school is growing and the attendance at the services is increasing. May this new congregation soon grow into a strong army of the Lord and turn all South Brooklyn into the way of salvation.

Bro. J. M. Philputt, of the 119th St. church, New York, has returned from his summer's sojourn in England and has taken up his work with renewed vigor. In the midst of his excellent field may he and his church stand for that simple and beautiful religion set forth on the pages of the New Testament. When this letter comes from the press he and his people will be celebrating the tenth anniversary of their church in which we hope to take part and of which we may say something later.

The Sterling Place congregation, Brooklyn, is full of hope at the prospect before them under their new pastor-elect, Bro. M. E. Harlan, of Topeka, Kan., who will begin work with them in the latter part of October.

Our work at 169th St. starts well this autumn. A number have been added to the Lord's people and others will soon "step over the line to Jesus.'' The congregations were never better, perhaps never so large, before. The evening audiences for the passed few weeks have filled the house. The Sunday-schools both at church and chapel are large, enthusiastic and growing. The chapel building has been finished and paid for and the workers are united and happy in the Lord.

On Tuesday morning, Oct. 3rd, at 6 o'clock, Sister Bertha Marshall sailed via S. S. ''Ettuopia,'' of the Anchor Line, for Glasgow, whence she will go to Hurda, Central Provinces, India, to labor under the auspices of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. She is a daughter of our Bro. Marshall, city evangelist of St. Louis; she studied for three years in Drake University, was a member of the Student Volunteer Band, and now under the commission of the foreign board is happy in the prospect of mission work. In one sense she goes home, since she was born in India while her father was missionary in that land under the Free Baptist Board. I met her upon her arrival in New York, and owing to the delay of her ship in sailing, we had the pleasure of her company a few days at home and thereby learned to know and esteem her very highly. It is encouraging to meet and know these heroic servants of the Lord who go as our representatives to the heathen world to preach and teach the unsearchable riches of Christ. And we are rejoiced to know our executives at Cincinnati have raised the $150,000 and more for Foreign Missions. Praise the Lord!

The first fall meeting of the Disciples' Club of New York, was held at the 56th St. Church, Tuesday evening, Sept. 26th, and owing to the absence of President Hunt the writer, being vice-president, had to preside. Standing committees for the year were appointed and the topic, ''City Missions,'' was discussed as a local matter. The attandance was not large, but the interest was good, and hopes are entertained of an excellent season's work.

Iowa Letter.

In my last letter I said it was not yet known whether the state board had closed the year free of debt or not. I am glad to say that it begins the present year without debt.

This letter should cover the remaining history of our late convention, from Thursday noon. The report of Chancellor Craig for the board of trustees of Drake University was full of interest. The campus and buildings are worth $150,000. There is $100,000 of productive endowment. The enrollment in all departments for the year just closed was 891, which with the summer school—368—added makes a grand total of 1,259. This is an increase of 20 per cent. over the previous year. The debt of $66,000 called for a year ago lacks but three thousand more to complete it. Oskaloosa College made a short report also.

The sermon of the afternoon was by J. M. Lowe. His text was Matt. 6:33, and his theme, ''First the Kingdom of God.'' It was a credit to the man and the convention. It is published in full in the Christian Index, of Sept 27th. Thursday evening was devoted to the Jubilee Convention and to the interests of Drake University. The speakers of the hour were three. E A. Nye, of the Des Moines Daily News, led off with a really eloquent speech on the heroism and greatness of our pioneer preachers. ''The world has never seen greater men than those who constituted the advance guard of this Current Reformation. We should hold a jubilee because of our present prosperity and because of the great outlook of the future.'' Pastor McCash followed with a fine statement of our position. Some one has said that a masterpiece is an old theme treated in a new light. This address illustrated this saying. Chancellor Craig came next and spoke as follows:

The happiest time for the Jews was the year of jubilee. It seems that I can almost see the jubilee on the mountain top, and to-night I feel that we have started on the journey. You can do nothing great without great ideas. In the matter of schools we have not been greatly successful. Drake University is a great institution, but we must do more in the next ten or fifteen years than we have done before or our future will not be what it ought to be. Let our motto be: ''A million-dollar endowment for Drake University.'' Large plans for Drake University would mean larger gifts to other lines of mission work.

Friday forenoon was largely devoted to the university interests also. The deans of the various departments spoke of the advantages of Drake University. Among the number were H. W. Everest, A. M. Haggard, Hill M. Bell, Bruce E. Shepperd, Ed Amherst Ott and the Chancellor. The good things said would make a valuable educational pamphlet.

The committee on resolutions reported in part as follows:

Resolved, That the Christian Church in annual convention request the coming legislature to creat the office of temperance commissioner, similar to other commissions of the state.

Resolved, That we pledge our hearty sympathy and support to the work now in progress in Iowa under the direction of H. H. Abrams, superintendent of the Anti-saloon League, and Francis Murphy.

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and heartily express our sympathy with every honorable effort to secure state and national prohibition.

Resolved, That the pastors be requested to report at the various district conventions the condition of temperance in their respective fields and that our state secretary be instructed to furnish blanks for the same.

There was some discussion and an effort to pass a resolution very rugged in its wording. I worked for and helped carry the one above. In the stress of the moment I did one thing for which I am sorry. I could have voted for the other and still helped to carry this in case the first had failed. I did not do so, and now acknowledge my mistake. Some of my good brethren did not vote for the resolution as it stands on the ground that it means nothing. For several years the I. C. C. was silent on the liquor question. The above resolution is a hundred times better than silence. The Friends (Quakers) in annual convention at Oskaloosa passed the following resolution:

We believe that all Christians should do all in their power for the entire suppression of the liquor traffic, and that no Christian can consistently support parties or men that legalize and protect the traffic. Therefore all Christians should unite in supporting a party that stands for prohibition in its platform.

Our resolution means the same thing to me as this does. I do not know how to preach Christ and let the political partnership with the saloon alone. I believe that it is a sin to padlock our mouths for one hour or one day on this question, by the plea that the hour or the day is devoted to the interests of missions. The most sacred hour is made only more sacred by going on record by a mojority, if possible, (at least by agitation) against the greatest evil of the day.

The Y. P. S. C. E. part of the convention was full of good things. The evening address was made by Prof. E. S. Ames, of Butler College. ''Following the Fathers'' was his theme. It was not only good, but very excellent. Wm. Orr in his Bible-school address took a number of scalps. He is probably the best Sunday-school man in Iowa. Some of us think he is more largely God-made than school-made. He blames the schools for not turning out phenomenal workers. If he will tell us what schools and teachers made him, we will send a regiment of young men and women thither at once. Edgar Price, W. A. Moore and A. F. Sanderson made good addresses. J. M. Lucas was put at the head of the Y. P. S. C. E. work for the coming year. This is a wise selection. Prof. A. Hull, of Oskaloosa, was made a member of the educational committee. The Sunday-school interests were put into the hands of a good committee consisting, I think, of W. A. Moore, W. B. Clemmer and N. G. Brown. They will leave nothing undone to make the Iowa Sunday-school work more perfect than that of any other state.

The report of the obituary committee is always a very tender part of the Iowa convention. This year it was, if possible, more touching and spiritual than ever. The sad death, but a few days before, of Fred Williams, prepared a larger number than usual to enter deeply into the spirit of the hour. Time and space fail me or I would give an outline of this service, so tenderly presided over by S. B. Ross, of Oelwein.

Among the new faces in Iowa we noticed Pastor Scott, of Marshalltown, and Sherman Hill, of Hampton. We missed the faces of S. T. Martin, J. M. Rudy, G. W. Burch, Gov. F. M. Drake and others.

On account of an unfortunate misunderstanding the returning delegates did not get reduced railroad fare. The required number were present with certificates of full fare paid. It was not their fault. Next year the matter will be carefully looked after in time and no one need fear that he will lose his reduced rates.

Organize A Reading Circle at Once.

Every church should be an educational center. It should have a school of higher grade, wider scope and more definite aim than the average Sunday-school. The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses are admirably designed to meet this need. Concise handbooks are provided for Bible study, the study of missions and the study of the plea and history of the Disciples. Two successful years have demonstrated the wisdom of this plan. Every Christian Endeavor Society, every C. W. B. M. Auxiliary and every church ought to investigate the merits of these courses at once. Full and free information will be sent on application to J. Z. Tyler, 798 Republic Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

NINTH ANNIVERSARY.

Sunday morning, Oct. 1st, was our ninth anniversary at the Central Church as people and pastor. The Dallas News made a full report of the service, and from that report I make such selections as may be of general interest.

"At the morning service yesterday Rev. M. M. Davis, of the Central Christian Church, preached his ninth anniversary sermon. The audience was large, the music was inspiring and the whole service was a joy to the people. The sermon in part was as follows:

"Nine years, almost a third and more than a fourth of an average lifetime, have come and gone since the beginning of our work as people and pastor. And these have been years that have tried the souls of men. They began just as our great boom was beginning to explode, when hundreds of good men were crushed to the wall, and such a period of financial depression followed as was never seen before by our generation. This made our work as a church peculiarly difficult, for this elegant and costly property had been inaugurated in boom times, but we had to finish it in the midst of this unprecedented depression. But God has been with us, and after many and great sacrifices it has been completed. His strong arms have ever been about us. His gentle hands have guided us, and to-day, surrounded by his rich blessing, we are here in this ninth anniversary service for his worship."

Then follows an account in detail of the different departments of the church work, with some summaries:

"The work of your pastor, so far as cold figures can represent it, is as follows: Sermons at home, 139; abroad, 14; total 153. Additions at home, 165; abroad, 5; total 170. Funerals, 49; marriages, 36. In addition to the heavy work of this pastorate I am associate editor and business manager of the Christian Courier, a member of the state board of missions and Southern correspondent of the CHRISTIHN-EVANGELIST. And besides all this I have prepared a new book, 'Elijah,' soon to come from the press. This is truly a heavy work, but with God's help and yours it has been the joy of my life to do it.

"The financial report is: Current expenses, $2,702.68; building fund, $1,712.68; miscellaneous, $1,982,80; total, $6,398.16.

"Summary for the nine years: Sermons, 1,245; additions, 1,665; marriages, 216; funerals, 246; money raised, $123,806.06."

Then followed the roll-call of the dead—sixteen in all; after which the News concluded as follows:

"But we must not pause here (by the graves of our dead) too long. The future, with its rich fields and crying wants, is before us, and we must enter it. Now is the time for work. The day of rest—sweet rest—will come by and by. As a motto for the new year let me suggest a threefold one: Devotion, diligence and determination. Let us live nearer the cross, that we may catch its inspiration; let us draw near to the Son of Righteousness that we may bathe in his life-giving beams. Let us empty ourselves of self that we may be filled of God. Let us pray more, love more, forgive more, adore more, praise more; let our lives be hid with Christ in God.

"Let us be more diligent. There is so much to do and so few to do it that it is a crime of the deepest dye to be idle. Our Lord went about doing good; there was not an idle moment in his life. He is our model; let us imitate him in a year of untiring diligence.

"Let us be determined. The life we live is one continuous battle. The foe we fight never goes into winter quarters. At Waterloo, when the Old Guard was making that last noble but helpless fight for their idol, the peerless Napoleon, an English officer, anxious to spare the little remnant, cried out: 'Surrender, brave Frenchmen, fate is against you!' But the answer, quick and defiant, came back: 'The Old Guard can die, but it cannot surrender!' Let this be the spirit of our lives for this year. Come what will, let us be true to our Leader."

GOING INTO CONSUMPTION.

Thousands of Persons are Hastening Towards Their Graves as a Result of Merciless Consumption.

READ HOW TO SAVE YOURSELF.

The danger from consumption is real—too much so.

One-seventh part of the world's death rate is caused by it.

Its terrors cannot be glossed over. Statistics do not lie.

There must be a reason for this state of affairs. It is this: That those who are already infected do not believe they are; and that those who are not take no pains to prevent infection.

A deplorable state of affairs, to say the least.

Remedied only by the prompt and timely action of Dr. Slocum, the greatest bacteriologist living, who offers to send a complete Free Course of Preventive or Curative Treatment to all upon receipt of a simple request.

The Course consists of Four Remedies or Preparations of known curative and remedial properties, as endorsed by leading physicians and scientists the world over.

Combined in the Slocum New System of of Treatment they unite to drive the germ of consumption out of the system, and cure the result of its destructive action.

They make thin, coughing cosumptives strong in body, in mind, and in lung, and bring to a stop those who are hurrying to the grave.

They lengthen life and make it worth the living.

The Slocum System is dispensed by druggists with full directions for use, or a Complete Free Course will be sent, as explained, to any address.

WRITE THE DOCTOR.

Simply write to Dr. T. A. Slocum, 98 Pine Street, New York, giving your name and express and post office address, when the Four Free Preparations will be sent you, with full directions for use in any case.

Write and please say you read this article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

A CIRCUIT OF THE GLOBE, by A. McLean, contains the author's observations and impressions during a trip around the world. He visited all mission fields, and gives a detailed account of his visit to mission points. To the pastor who desires to present the subject of Foreign Missions to his congregation this book is an excellent source to gain needed information on missionary work. Superbly illustrated, and contains 348 pages. Price, bound in cloth, $2.00. Christian Publishing Company.

Forty Years' Preaching.

The writer in passing through St. Louis called at the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to renew his subscription and to greet the familiar faces of its editors, but regretted the absence of Bro. Garrison, as was the case also last year.

Forty is the number of first importance in the Scriptures and in nature; and also seven.

The writer, while attending medical lectures, learned that almost every bird and beast and man that comes into the world comes in a multiple of weeks; as the hen in three, the duck, goose and turkey in four, and many of the animals and man in forty weeks; an argument impressed by the Creator upon creation in confirmation of revelation that no created man can overturn; and either unknown or unnoticed by writers in confirmation of the Mosaic record of creation.

Forty days was the flood. Forty days they spied out the land. Forty years they wandered in the wilderness or desert. Forty years old were both Isaac and Esau when they married and became fathers of nations. Forty days and nights was Moses on the mount, the first and the second time. Forty years was Moses when he slew the Egyptian and fled from Pharoah; forty years in exile; forty years in the desert. Forty years was Joshua when sent to spy out the land. Forty years the land had rest in the days of Othniel judge of Israel; forth years also in the days of Deborah, and forty years in the days of Gideon. Forty years Samuel judged Israel. Forty days Goliah defied Israel. Forty years reigned David and Solomon and Ahaziah. Forty days went Elijah to Horeb. Forty years the land was desolate. Forty days was given to Ninevah. Forty days was the Lord in the wilderness. Forty days was he seen after his resurrection.

And the writer, humbly returning, thanks to him who has said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," can say that forty years ago he was climbing the mountains of California and preaching in their growing towns and cities, and ever since has been doing what he could, distributing Bibles in their own languages, supplied freely by the British and Foreign Bible Society, through fifteen out of the eighteen provinces of China, mostly beyond the labors of other men.

And after seven years spent abroad in India, China, Japan, and passing through Egypt, France and England and into Mexico, Central Americoa and Canada, have lectured on the condition of the heathen in churches, courthouses and public halls, and preached the plainest truths of the gospel in the highways and hedges and the lanes and streets of the cities through nearly every state of this Union; and in answer to the question, "Where I sent you without purse or scrip, did ye lack anything? and they answered, Nothing," the writer can say the same for all these forty years, traveling about 10,000 miles a year and preaching three to six times a day.

These things are not written to receive commendation of men, for then would the offence of the cross be ceased; nor in any wise setting up any standard for the guidance of others, who may have other methods of carrying on the work of the Lord; but that the teachings and the example of the Son of God and his apostles and disciples may be honored and glorified in so far as these forty years of labor and travel can attest in me the fulfillment of his promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Many railroads have rendered me great assistance in this work for many years among, which the great Louisville and Nashville system, reaching through or into eleven states from Cincinnati and St. Louis to New Orleans and Florida and Norton, Va., a most desirable route to Richmond and the East. The writer has from time to time been over all the principal lines of this system. It is in a most excellent condition as to roadbed equipmen and management, making the run from Cincinnati to Louisville through a country at the rate of about 30 miles an hour, during which time the writer wrote with pen and ink nearly all the way. Their lines reach or connect with all the cities and cheif towns of the South. The road has never had a strike or changed hands, and has not given just cause for the public to complain and is prospering.

The St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway is the great system of Missouri, Arkansas and the Southwest. They ran special fast trains twice a week from St. Louis to Los Angeles, Cal., last winter 67 1-2 hours, avoiding all snow blockades, and no doubt will this winter. Arkansas is probably ahead of any state in the union for the last few years in her lumber making and her railroad building, but this railway by reason of its occupation of most of the chief towns and cities of the state and its valuable lands for sale on easy terms is now and must continue to be the great artery of commerce for the Southwest.

Kekaha,

"Where the palm tree rises, Telling of a foreign strand."

"Kekaha? Why, that is hot, sandy and terribly lonely," was the verdict of a friend whom we asked about our new station. It may be lonely, but there are the sea and the sky. True, we cannot see the sea, for the sand dunes shut it out, and we are slightly lower than the shore. But we sometimes see the spars of sailing vessels or the black tops of a steamer's chimneys, for we are in the road of the great China steamers, though only sailors and small local steamers touch here.

Out somewhere in the channel,

"Ever shifting,
White spars lifting,"

floats the hulk of the hoodoo ship, City of Columbia, that put out from Honolulu for Hong Kong four or five weeks ago, and two days out foundered and now lies a menace in the path of other vessels.

We cannot see the sea, but we can hear it, the slow ingathering and rush, then a pause and the thud of the heavy surf on the beach, followed by the hiss of the waters tearing back through the reef, combing themselves into spray upon its teeth. Sometimes the sea moans like a whipped beast from a typhoon scourging in the South Seas. Rarely the storm follows it into these quiet waters. Then the roll of thunder and surf make the air breathless with terror; electric fire-balls run along the ground and a pall of waters drops out of the sky and wraps sea and land. The native fisherman beaches his canoe and crouches, wild-eyed, in his hut, biding the wrath of Pele and all the little gods. The native is fond of riding the surf, of fishing and swimming. If he keeps still in the water the sharks take him for a stone. If the beast turns on its back preparatory to making a meal of him, he is off, out of the way, far off, while the creature clumsily rights himself. A ship picked up a native, miles out at sea, with a pig under his arm. The undertow carried it out and the owner braved the teeth of reef and sharks to save it.

The Kekaha sky is the sky of the desert. Blue by day as seen through the shimmer of heated air, with the stony brilliancy of a jacinth. Looking up through the fretwork of lacy algeroba boughs one sees it as a ceiling of purest blue, ornamented with tracery in pale green. The sunlight is not the white glare of Japan, nor yet the yellow of the home lights, but a medium, still with a glare that makes the eye turn to rest from the sandy stretches and sparkle of the sea to the purple heights of Niihan and the cool greens of algerobas and palms. Yet, the sky is most wonderful at night, when such myriads of stars come down out of the depths, and one sees them as they are—vistas of stars—some near and blazing, some far off, shinning mistily their light kalpas on its way to us. The planets hang low and burn steadily, but the suns flash and sparkle like torches set along God's road. Gazing, one forgets his feet are fast to a clod and almost "knocks his head against the stars." When the moon rides below, her light bathes the earth, but scarcely dims them. Lying on one's back on the sand, still hot from its daily baking, one sees and grows hungrier for more sight and ken for all their blazing mystery. Out of the heights some drop a flashing track among the glory and go out—wandering stars, for whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever. Later on, toward morning, the Southern Cross in the van of that bright train, that we in northern latitudes never see, wheels above the horizon and slow across until the sun comes back, puts them out and warms the chill air, sweet with lantana and acacia scents. Such a sky makes a worshiper. One cannot kneel humbly enough in that shining presence and his heart's cry is, "Lord, what is man that thou are mindful of him?"

Many of these beautiful worlds must be perfect, even from their girdle of silver moons to the tinest insect's wing. They doubtless are the abode of happy, faultless lives, while our "planet of suffering" hangs upon its cross and cries, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" There was that other people, who knew the desert of old, whose feet were calloused with its burnings, whose hearts were sore with its hunger and thirst, its fiery serpents, its losses, whose realms were far between, yet they came at last to the land of cool mountain tops, to the fertile slopes of Lebanon. Our God loves contrasts. He brings life out of death, joy out of bitterness. So faith lifts with strong hands her cross, binds heart and shoulder to its burden and follows on to know her God.

Wisconsin News.

The State Convention at Richland Center was a success in every particular. The number of delegates in attendance was fifty-five, the local attendance was good, the entertainment could not have been better, the reports were well received, the addresses and papers were of a high order, the music was good and the spirit was one of brotherly love. Harmony prevailed throughout the sessions. The pulpits of the various churches were filled most acceptably on Sunday by our visiting ministers. The business of the convention was transacted expeditiously, and plans for future work were adopted without a dissenting vote. It would be hard to say of any convention that it was better than the one a year ago at Pardeeville, but I did hear of the Richland Center convention, as compared with Pardeeville, "It was just as good and more of it."

One interesting feature which is unusual in a convention was the laying of the corner-stone of the new church, in which ceremony G. W. Muckley, J. H. Berkley, F. N. Calvin, myself and the local building committee participated.

During the convention addresses were delivered by G. L. Wharton, J. H. Berkey, C. C. Smith, Mrs. E. M. Pease, Mrs. Helen E. Moses, F. T. Galpin, F. N. Calvin, Claris Yeuel, G. W. Muckley, J. H. Hardin and C. G. McNeill. Papers prepared by P. S. Olson and Mrs. Wm. Harper were read.

The C. W. B. M. sessions were business-like and most interesting, the reports showing three new auxiliaries this year, as well as other growth.

The year's work did not leave the State Board in debt, though the surplus was small—less than it was last year.

The report of the board's work can be summarized as follows: There were nine men employed by the board, or working under its direction, during the year; three others, local pastors, also worked under our direction. The number of days' work was 662; number of sermons, 376; baptisms 73; other additions, 14; total additions, 87. There were eight protracted meetings held, one church dedicated, two corner-stones laid, one convention held, one other church now building, one dead church resurrected, 1,674 letters and postal cards written, 1,382 other parcels mailed, a number of churches induced by our secretary to give for home and foreign missions which did not give last year, so that every church in the state gave for foreign missions. Financial problems were handled involving $6,217.05, including one debt of $3,112.05, and one building fund of $1,805. Two auxiliaries were organized, 13 subscriptions taken for the Missionary Tidings, one pastor located, two Sunday-schools organized, one aid society, one Y. P. S. C. E. and one prayer-meeting.

The outlook for the coming year is more hopeful than ever before. Nothing is reported in the preceding except what was directly the board's work and for which the board was at least in part financially responsible.

None of this work could have been done but for the help given us by the American Christian Missionary Society and the C. W. B. M. and our own state apportionment.

Two new churches are now being built in the state—Richland Center and Pardeeville.

Claris Yeuell held two meetings, one at Footville for Pastor Mutchler and one at Bloom City. There were seven additions at Footville. He has gone now to Everton, Ontario, Canada.

Bro. Land's meetings at Lynxville resulted in 34 additions. I organized a Y. P. S. C. E. there during my last visit. Bro. J. A. Hawkins, of Marble Rock, Ia., spent his vacation there during the early part of this month.

The churches at Footville and Center, where F. W. Mutchler labors, gave $293 for missions this year, besides donating their pastor's time to our board for three weeks.

Our convention voted to continue the apportionment plan, attempting to raise $600 for state missions this year, and also to ask churches having pastors to donate one month of the pastor's time to do evangelistic work under the direction of the State Board.

The next State Convention will be held at Monroe, Sept. 19th to 23rd, 1900.

I regret to make record of the loss of two of our good workers in this state. Mrs. Julius Stone and Miss Edith M. Tourtelatte have fallen asleep.

Sister Stone, the wife of our faithful pastor at Chippewa Falls, was born in Norway; came to America about ten years ago and died at her home Sept. 20th, leaving her husband and eight children in deep sorrow. She was a woman of cheerful disposition and "given to hospitality." She was a charter member of the auxiliary in that church.

Sister Tourtelatte was born at Amanda, Wis., June 2nd, 1875; died there Sept. 16th. She was a faithful member of the church at Hickory, and though she had not been a member a long while, she will be missed. She had become an active worker and was a charter member of the auxiliary there.

There are many friends to mourn the loss of these two sisters. May our good Father comfort them.

C. G. McNEILL,

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The Randolph Bible-school, under the superintendency of Miss Nora Kiernan, are set for a banner each, all of them to be just such as you saw at the State Missionary Convention, and which it is said so many commended and complimented so highly. But now, are you going to see that your school has one? Why not?

J. W. Hawkins, and Fair View, Monroe, send word they intend having a banner or know the reason why, and such are sure to have it, and we are glad of it. Next!

Shelbyville, F. L. Schofield, superintendent, J. H. Wood, pastor, is going to secure a banner, and I am always glad to see them go to such worthy efforts, and they may take the state prize banner from Clarksville, for ought we know.

Fair View, Shelby, is a new school, congregation and house, and while the membership is small, they are set for the success of the kingdom of God, and under the leadership of Bro. Wood will succeed. He is teaching them the fundamentals pertaining to the Church of Christ, and we have promised them help in this line.

Ridgley, where my friend and brother, J. C. Creel, is doing such good work, sends in their apportionment for 1899, and before next June will remit for 1900. The Ridgley school is not large, but their work is good and their liberality always manifests itself in our work, never failing in their apportionments.

Beulah's rally was in the form of a "birthday party," the church being a child of the school. The school celebrated its sixth anniversary "with a good program and a hearty welcome," two fine drawing cards, and the people turned out in mass and were not one whit disappointed. The souvenir cards of invitation were right in it; so was J. B. Dunkerly, the efficient superintendent, as were all the assistants.

Are you preparing for next year's lessons on the Life of Our Lord, and have you ordered the Normal Instructor on the Christ of the Book? Do so immediately.

New Florence is one of the newly organized old schools that has joined us in the work of God's Son, sending their apportionment with good words. Thank you all.

Pleasant View, Ray, has some faithful friends, and just as faithful are they to our cause, sending us the apportionment in full for 1899, though they had in an error long since remitted it to another good cause. They will remember us again.

Pleasant Union, Jackson, sends us greeting, with an offering for this work, and other Jackson schools will do likewise, for Mrs. Lou Hargis is the county superintendent and her earnestness quickens others in a like direction. These are helpers of much service in the behalf of the kingdom of God.

Some would not tell it, but Mrs. Birdie Shelton is developing into one of the best superintendents of the state, and is now planning that Troy shall have one of our banners, and possibly the prize banner, now held by Clarksville.

Mt. Cabanne, St. Louis, had a great day during their rally, having proffered a beautiful souvenir to every member of the school and inviting all officers and teachers; all pupils now enrolled, or that have been enrolled; all parents, all willing to co-operate in such work, and every well-wisher of the Lord's cause; and some one said they were all there and had all their friends with them. W. W. Dowling was right in his element, and D. R. Dungan as pleased as a boy with red top boots. Great day! Glad workers! Happy children! Have you tried it? Why not?

D. E. R. Woods, an all-round friend to all works for good, brought us an offering from Versailles, a little band with a heavy debt, working hard for the glory of God and the good of men. Thanks to him and them. Bro. Woods has membership with a little band at Bowling Green, Florida, that never fails in its Bible-school or Lord's day meeting, and it will be sad news to many of his friends to know that he is hindered in his journeyings toward his Southern home by sickness in this city. But we are glad that he is getting better and yet remains with us. "He has built us" several synagogues in his time, such is his love.

Pastor of the Church in Sullivan, Ill.

Fairfield, Iowa.

The new church at Fairfield, Iowa, is expected to be ready for dedication by December 1st. It will cost in the neighborhood of $4,000. The congregation will dispose of their old pews, which are substantial and in good shape, at reasonable figures. They cannot be used very satisfactorily in the new quarters. They will seat comfortably about 300 people. We hope for good developments when we are again in our own house. At present we holding our services Sunday afternoons in the Congregational Church. Denver, 1901.

In this week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Bro. A. M. Harvuot asks: "What city bids against Minneapolis for 1901?" The answer is, Denver. Colorado delegates are coming instructed by the state board in behalf of the state to secure the convention in 1901. The National has been farther in every direction than West. It has been North to Des Moines, but never farther West than Kansas City. Des Moines is nearer to Minneapolis than Kansas City to Denver. It is time to come to the Rocky Mountains. Denver is the ideal convention city.

A Special Request.

All German-American Disciples of Christ are requested to meet at the Palace Hotel during the Jubilee Convention in order to have a conference in regard to missionary work in Germany. Since a few of us are planning to conduct evangelistic services in some of the leading cities in Germany during the coming year, a meeting in order to suggest methods of working would be a great encouragement to those who are interested in that kind of evangelistic work. When we talk about the world for Christ, do we think of Germany? Let us think over it, pray over it. Do the best we can to adopt ways and means to save 50,000 souls for Christ during 1900.

Northern Notes.

Joseph Keevil, who came to the Christian Colony from Kentucky and entered a claim, is pastor of the church at Rat Portage. The Church of Christ in Burriss township took collection for Church Extension. Bro. Crist writes: "Our apportionment is $5; we are going to try and raise it." This church has taken collection for missions from the time she was twelve hours old. The writer will visit again and preach for this faithful band on the second Lord's day in October. Preached in the Presbyterian Church at Port Arthur last Lord's day. Will preach for the Baptists next Lord's day. R. A. BURRISS.

Ministerial Relief.

The suggestion of A. M. Atkinson, that $5,000 be raised for Ministerial Relief before the close of the current missionary year, is one that should be carried out promptly and joyfully. This will be, as he has well said, "a crown of glory to the year." The men who need aid in their declining years are the men who have helped to make the marvelous success over which we are all rejoicing possible. Winter is approaching; these men need clothing and food and fuel. The need is urgent. By raising this amount we will do much to gladden the hearts of the heroic workers of the earlier days, and at the same time do much to make our own hearts better. There will be cause for regret if we fall behind in our care for the men and women who in other times bore the heat and burden of the day. I have made one offering in the year; I shall make another in order that the effort to raise $5,000 more may not fail. A. MCLEAN.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR PILES.

Safe and Effective in Every Form of This Common and Annoying Disease.

Many people suffer from piles, because after trying the many lotions, salves and ointments without relief or cure, have come to the conclusion that a surgical operation is the only thing left to try, and rather than submit to the shock and risk to life of an operation, prefer to suffer on. Fortunately this is no longer necessary; the Pyramid Pile Cure, a new preparation, cures every form of piles, without pain, inconvenience, or detention from business.

It is in the form of suppositories, easily applied absolutely free from opium, cocaine, or any injurious substance whatever, and no matter how severe the pain, gives instant relief, not by deadening the nerves of the parts, but rather by its healing, soothing effect upon the congested membranes.

The Pyramid Pile Cure is the most effective, the safest and most extensively sold of any pile cure that has ever been placed before the public, and this reputation has been secured by reason of its extraordinary merit and the reasonable price at which it is sold, all druggists selling it at 50 cents per pack, age, and in many cases a single package has been sufficient.

A person takes serious chances in neglecting a simple case of piles, as the trouble soon becomes deep-seated and chronic, and very frequently develops into fatal, incurable rectal diseases, like fistula and rectal ulcers.

Any druggist will tell you the Pyramid is the safest, most satisfactory pile cure made.

The Pyramid Co., Marshall, Mich., will send free to any address a treatise on cause and cure of piles, also book of testimonials.

Blue Rapids, Oct. 2.—We have just closed a very successful meeting with Sister C. H. Hazelrigg, evangelist. We have organized a church here with 49 members; 21 former members of the Christian Church and 15 by confession. We have also organized a Bible-school and Endeavor Society. All lines of work are moving well. We have chosen L. W. Myers as our pastor, and we hope soon to build a place of worship. Sister Hazelrigg is a consecrated Christian worker for Christ and has done a grand work for the Master here. Sister Hazelrigg held a meeting at Waterville before coming here with some 40 additions. Large audiences at each place.—MRS. H. SAVILLE, church clerk.

Briston.—Bro. De Jarnett, of Sheldon, closed a meeting last night for the Liberty congregation near Nevada, of not quite two weeks' duration, with 35 additions; 29 by baptism, 11 were young men between the ages of 15 and 22 years, five were men with families, two were from the Methodists. The Church of Christ at this place is strengthened and encouraged.—J. E. FOWLER.

Glasgow, Oct. 3.—Three baptisms on Sunday afternoon, four conversions Monday, a morning 10 a'clock meeting with an attendance of 60, and this in a country church where the nearest residence is half a mile away. Every indication points to a meeting of unusual interest and blessing.—G. F. ASSISTER, pastor New Franklin Church.

Burlington Junction, Oct. 3.—On Sept. 24 I closed a three weeks' meeting at Dawson with 17 added to the church; the most of them new to us. Their number was about doubled by the meeting. I only preach there two Sunday afternoons in the month. There were two more added last Lord's day afternoon. The work here moves along pretty well. Some seven or eight added here since last report.—N. ROLLA DAVIS.

Balm, Cedar county, Sept. 30.—A very interesting meeting of four weeks at the church here, conducted by Bro. John Giddens and the writer, closed last Lord's day with eight added by baptism and six by relation. This church has encountered much opposition from Latter-day Saints, whose stronghold is at Lebeck, two miles away, and during our meeting we were presented many queries which were thoroughly answered by Bro. Giddens. In the meantime we were challenged to debate origin, history and merits of their church along with our own, the Bible to be the standard of authority. The debate is to be in Balm (Cedar Springs), Cedar county, between Eld. Walters, of the Latter-day Saints, and Eld. Wetherford, of the Christian Church, beginning Oct. 17, in daily sessions of four hours each, to an indefinite close. Success to the truth.—J. N. MURPHY, pastor in charge.

"The Man with the Hoe."

[Those who have read Edwin Markham's famous poem, "The Man with the Hoe," will be interested in the following opposing view. But do not forget to judge each poem from the standpoint of the writer.—EDITOR.]

Lo, here I stand, the independent man,
The first of men, who won, when Time was young,
By strength of arm, from Nature's niggard grasp,
All needful things for those who looked to me.
And down the lagging ages subtle brains
Have multiplied inventions numberless,
Evil and good, but none to supersede
My trusty hoe. While thrones have risen and gone
To darkness, it shines brighter than of yore
When forged by Tubal-cain.

Ye bookworms pale,
Why point at my slant brow and rugged hands,
Why wonder at my shoulders bent and wry,
When on me rests the burden of the world,
With your own feeble selves? Great Atlas I.
Kings, nobles, millionaires, all hang on me;
I, self-sufficient, have no need of them.
They, should I leave them, soon would starve and die.

Ye pinched and pent-in cities, look at me;
I breathe the dewy freshness of the earth
In open fields resounding with the song
And jubilance of bird and beast—while ye
Jostle each other in the smoke and grime
For leave to labor at the beck of gold.
Ye herding fools, come out where there is room,
Come out and fill the earth's waste places up;
Make howling deserts laugh with running brooks,
Turn pathless woods to green rejoicing fields;
Dot the vast lonesome plains with cheerful homes,
Work for yourselves—live healthily, content
On your own land's productions. Doing thus,
The last curst Anarchist will pass from earth!

Betsy Ross and the American Flag.

[In Self Culture for August is an interesting article by Fred Cozzens on "The True Story of Betsy Ross," in which he relates her history as told by Mr. Geo. Canby, a grandson of Mrs. Ross, who yet lives in Philadelphia in the enjoyment of good health, although 70 years of age. By the courtesy of Self Culture publishers we publish below the story as told by Mr. Canby in Mr. Cozzen's article.—EDITOR.]

"The personal history of Betsy Ross has been so fearfully distorted by those who in in recent years have attempted her biography that I am quite grateful for an opportunity to give you the actual facts, as far as I am able, from the story as told me by my mother, with whom Betsy Ross Claypoole lived for some time prior to her death, and at whose house she died on the 30th of January, 1836, aged 84 years.

"Betsy Ross was born in Philadelphia on the 1st of January, 1752, and was the seventh daughter of Samuel and Rebecca Griscom, who were consistent members of the Society of Friends. Under the sober influence of her Quaker parents she passed her childhood days, and when maturity was reached had grown to be an exceptionally bright and beautiful young woman. Among her many admirers was one John Ross, the son of an Episcopal clergyman, and to those familiar with the distinctiveness with which religious lines were drawn in those days it requires no great stretch of the imagination to understand that his attentions were far from pleasing to Betsy's severe Quaker parents. But in spite of parental opposition the two young people became excellent 'friends' of quite another character, and in time were married, although to accomplish this a runaway match was necessary. This took place in December, 1773, and Betsy was punished therefor by being disowned by the Friends. With her husband she afterward attended Christ Church, where General Washington worshiped when in Philadelphia.

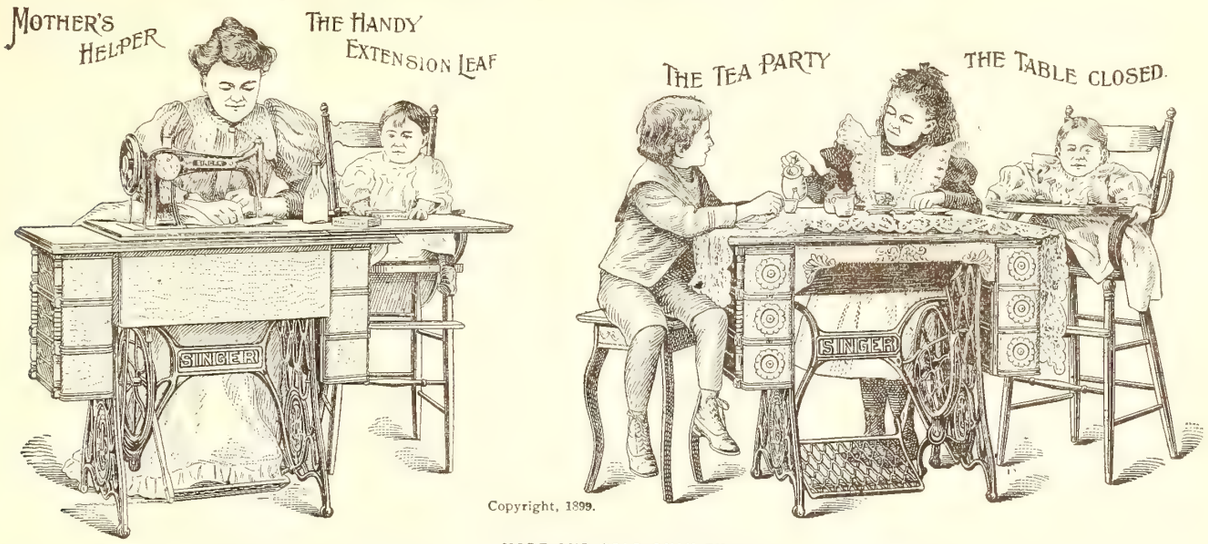
"Betsy's skill as a needlewoman was a natural gift, but had been cultivated by an apprenticeship to one Webster, a leading upholsterer of the day. It came about in this wise: One day John Ross, who himself was an upholsterer, noticed some of the young women in Mr. Webster's establishment puzzling over a simple question of drapery; he remarked that he knew of a young woman who could arrange it for them, and succeeded in inducing Betsy Griscom to come to their assistance. Mr. Webster, noticing her supperior skill, persuaded her to come to his establishment and learn the business. Thus it was that she became an upholsterer.

"In founding a home of their own, these young people started in business on Chestnut Street, near the Webster establishment, but soon moved to 239 Arch Street, now known as 'The Old Flag House.' Here, in the latter part of January, 1776, John Ross died from the effects of injuries received while guarding military stores on the wharf, and from here he was carried to his last resting-place in Christ Church burrying-ground, at the corner of Fifth and Arch Streets, on the 20th day of January, 1776.

"Thrown upon her own resources, the young widow, then but twenty-four years of age, courageously determined to continue the business established by her husband. Shortly after this, on the 23d of May, Washington came to Philadelphia, at the request of the Continental Congress, to confer regarding important military matters. The need of a general flag for the colonies had long been recognized—in fact, on the 1st of January, 1776, such a flag, consisting of seven red and white stripes alternating as at present, but with the field filled with the English cross, had been made and was first unfurled by Washington just outside Boston on that day. The delivery at this time by General Howe, under a flag of truce, of the arrogant proclamation of George the Third, rendered impossible of use the flag which had just been adopted; for whereas up to this time the struggle had been for Americans' rights as colonists, the tone of this document demonstrated conclusively to Washington that hereafter the fight must be for independence.

"A flag which bore the emblem of England must, therefore, be replaced by something distinctively American, and when Washington reached Philadelphia this question, with others, was taken up and discussed by the revolutionary leaders. As an outcome, a committee consisting of Washington, Robert Morris and George Ross was given authority to select and submit a design for a new flag. The meeting of this committee was undoubtedly held at General Hancock's house, just a block from Betsy Ross's home, and as circumstances required that the matter be done as secretly as possible, and the services of a skilful needlewoman were needed, it was perfectly natural that George Ross should suggest his niece, so near at hand, and in whom he was so much interested. To her house, therefore, they repaired, and upon being asked by her uncle whether or not she thought she could make the flag, she replied with true American spirit, 'I do not know, but I will try.'

"General Washington, having a fairly clear idea of what was wanted, made a pencil sketch of the flag with the now familiar thirteen stripes, but with a blue field and thirteen stars in the place of the cross of St. George. Mrs. Ross, being of a very practical turn of mind, noticed that Washington's stars were six-pointed, and suggested a five-pointed star as being easier to make. Washington replied that he had supposed a six-pointed one could be more easily formed, but Betsy promptly settled the question by folding a piece of paper and with one clip of her scissors producing a perfect five-pointed star. Thus it was that the stars in our flag are five-poited in place of the customary six-pointed star of heraldry, and Betsy Ross did it with her little scissors. The matter was then left for Betsy's skilful fingers to complete, and in due time the finished flag was ready for inspection. The committee again visited the house, were shown into the little back parlor, and after some discussion the design was accepted. It was not, however, formally adopted by Congress until the 14th of June, 1777.



"Betsy Ross afterward made many flags for the government, and her daughter, Mrs. Clarissa Wilson, continued the business in Philadelphia until 1857. In May, 1777, the naval board of Pennsylvania, as shown by the official records, paid Betsy Ross £14 12*s.* 2*d.* for flags made for the fleet in the Delaware River. So the business of flag-making was unquestionably the source of an income much more profitable, no doubt, than upholstering.

"Some time after this, on the 15th of June, 1777, Betsy Ross married Captain Joseph Ashburn, who died at Mill Prison, Plymouth, England, being under sentence for high treason against the crown—in other words, for being a loyal American. He died in the arms of his friend, John Claypoole, himself a prisoner for the same offence, but who, being released soon afterward, bore loving messages to Ashburn's widow. Claypoole was apparently a successful comforter, for not long after this he married the twice-widowed Betsy, only to die, not many years later, as a result of wounds received in the service of his country, combined with the effects of his prison life in England. Thus it was that all three of Betsy's husbands sacrificed their lives for the young republic for which Betsy made the first flag.

"No children were born to John and Betsy Ross, but one descendant of her marriage with Ashburn is still living. John and Betsy Claypoole, however, had four daughters, many of whose descendants now live in the vicinity of Philadelphia."

Such is the simple story of Betsy Ross and her connection with the flag as it exists to-day.

Brotherhood.

The crest and crowning of all good,
Life's final star, is Brotherhood;
For it will bring again to Earth
Her long-lost Poesy and Mirth;
Will send new light on every face,
A kingly power upon the race.
And till it come, we men are slaves,
And travel downward to the dust of graves.

Come! clear the way, then, clear the way!
Blind creeds and kings have had their day.
Break the dead branches from the path;
Our hopes are in the aftermath—
Our hope is in heroic men,
Star-led to build the world again.
To this Event the ages ran:
Make way for Brotherhood—make way for Man!

Caste in the Churches.

J. C. DICKSON.

Caste is by no means new in the churches, for it existed among those instituted as far back as the apostolic times. They recognized that such a state had made itself manifest, and in the spirit of Christ they condemned it. It is not to be wondered at when we remember that the early Christians came from the ranks of pagans (and the heathen world during all ages has been given to it) who were accustomed to caste in their pre-Christian days. Perhaps no nation was ever more bound by caste distinction than the Romans, and wherever their power extended. The same was true of the Greeks, not, perhaps, in the same way. You cannot wonder, therefore, that some of the old spirit should still be seen after they have embraced the new faith. The apostles noticed that there was an evident distinction made for the man with the gold ring and good clothes, who received the good place in their meetings, while the man in poor clothes was made to feel his inferior standing, and take a meaner place. James has to point out that such things can not exist in the church without the condemnation of God. And here, perhaps, we may see a partial solution of the absorbing question of to-day, how to reach the workingman and get him interested in spiritual things. A man, because he has hands soiled and black with honest labor, does not feel inclined to be patronized in church any more than elsewhere. This is a growing feeling in these days of labor unions, when politicians are working hard to get the support of the workingman. Scotland's poet can say "a man's a man for a' that," but do the churches quite believe Burns in his saying? We would not for a moment think that all men are equal in or out of the churches, for such is not the fact. Differences in ability and spirituality are evident in every church among Christians, for some are better thinkers than others, and some are more capable of doing efficient service than others. There never can become that socialistic leveling, so much advocated in certain quarters, by which all shall be considered equal in every respect. Some men can run an engine better than others, and some can be conductors and not have any wish to be engineers, while others again feel that they have no qualifications for either, but can make successful merchants or professional men. All cannot sing in choirs, and delight the ear of visitors, and so increase audiences. But while recognizing the evident diversity of fitness for special work no one need be therefore looked down upon and made to feel his inferiority. "Shall the foot say to the hand, I have no need of thee?" is a familiar expression to every Bible reader. It is a serious question whether a man pleading at the bar is doing the will of God more than the engineer, or merchants in our cities. And yet, often he would be respected more and a caste distinction made. If the church would deliberately set itself to frown down all the patronizing airs sometimes noticed, I believe we would see more men in the churches in our day. A horny-handed son of toil may be vastly more precious in God's eyes than some sweet-voiced but empty-headed and light-hearted one who is greatly sought after because of great range of voice, and hence a splendid draw to the services. Of course, no one would say a word against consecrated vocal talent of the highest order. Let us have all we can get of that kind, and the more the better. But let us not overlook latent talent in another direction, and so make castes. Is what we have drawn an imaginary picture? No. Fortunately, it is not common, but it does exist. The church which is doing its best to bring about that brotherly spirit where worth and not money is the gauge, is fulfilling the end for which it was formed. Jesus had to impress upon the Twelve that "all ye are brethren," and "be not called rabbi." There is also another kind of caste distinction sometimes shown in the carefulness to fence off clergy from the laity. This is fought against by our plea, for where the preacher is the right kind of man, and the church has the true spirit, the undershepherd will work always for the good of the Lord's people, with a consuming zeal which will not give him time or inclination to think on the questions of clergy and laity. Our experience is that it is only small-souled preachers and congregations that need such care to keep up distinctions. The preacher who is worthy of it will always obtain the respect of the members.

Arab Superstitions.

The "Nachrichten" of the German Palestine Association (1899—II) has an article on "Arab Superstitions," from which we learn that a man who points at the stars in counting them will get warts on his hand; that if the palm of his hand itches he will receive money the same day; that if the fire begins to sing while the housewife sits beside it, somebody is talking about her family and she must say: "If you are talking good, may it be so for you and for us; but if bad, may it fall upon your own head." To see a camel in a dream means death is near; to dream of death means long life; a snake in a dream means an enemy; a child that does not cry when baptized will soon die; and if two children be baptized together, the second will not live long. To step over a baby or its clothes will stunt or cripple it. It is bad luck for a mother to box her child's ears on the threshhold. A newly married couple must not go home from the church by the way they come, or the bridegroom will die. If at a marriage, while the clergyman utters the words of consecration some one ties a knot in a string, the couple will have no children; girls must not chew gum after dark, otherwise they chew the flesh of their ancestors. A sick child is smoked with incense to drive away the devil.—Interior.

October Pictures.

The pensive day
Is dull and gray,
  Whose banks of haze
Drift, swirl and fray;
  Where acorns fall,
  And squirrels call,
The sumachs blaze
  Beside the wall;
And in the streams
  The trees are stoled
In fairy dreams
  Of fairy gold.

The bee has fled,
The rose is dead,
  The apple's green
And brown and red,
  And up the steep,
  Through shadows deep,
I see serene
  The bonfire creep;
The cricket shrills
  Beneath the bars,
And nightfall spills
  Her urn of stars.

The air is still
From hill to hill,
  No lily beams
Upon the rill;
  And in the wold,
  All chill and cold,
The pumpkin dreams—
  A lamp of gold;
Rich russet glows
  The tented corn,
And Plenty blows
  Her mellow horn.

O'er meadows brown
The thistledown
  In pennons floats
From Fairytown,
  And through the mist
  Of amethyst
The bobwhite's notes
  Fall zephyr-kist;
And at my hearth
  I hear Her sing
Who makes with mirth
  My autumn spring.

—R. K. Munkittrick, in the October Woman's Home Companion.

A Baby Drunkard.

The youngest alcholic patient ever received into the Gouverneur Hospital, New York, was recently admitted. She is ten years old. Two policemen picked her up on the street, dead drunk, and sent her there in an ambulance.

When found, she had a nearly empty brandy flask in her hand. He mother had given her twenty-five cents to spend, and the child had run out among her companions of the street and called gleefully:

"We'll all go on a spree! Let's all get drunk!"

They suggested candy, but she said:

"No candy for me! I want whisky?"

She persuaded a thirteen-year-old boy to purchase the whisky for her, and the bartender who sold it has been arrested. The children did not share Mary's potations, but formed a line and followed her most unsteady steps until she fell senseless, crying:

"Mary's drunk! Mary's drunk!"

Her parents, worthy working people, are heart-broken. "We cannot account for Mary's action," they say. "She had never tasted liquor to our knowledge." Proximity to barrooms, the sight of older people going in and out, suggested this evil thing to the child. The accursed system which licenses barrooms and permits the sale of poison to children is to blame.

God speed the day when children may tread our streets in safety! A more powerful argument against the liquor traffic was never penned.—Christian Herald.

Bookkeeping in Babylonia.

Paper and ink are perishable things, like certain other "modern improvements," but some of the clay tablets used by earlier civilizations still survive. In the buried city of Nippur American explorers have recently found in one room more than seven hundred of them—the business records of a rich firm of merchants, Ulurashu Sons, who flourished twenty-five hundred years ago.

Among them is this guarantee for twenty years that an emerald is so well set that it will not fall out:

"Bel-ahillina and Bel-shumu, sons of Bel, and Hatin, son of Bazuzu, spoke unto Bel-nadinshumu, son of Morashu, as follows: 'As concerns the gold ring set with an emerald, we guarantee that for twenty years the emerald will not fall out of the ring. If it should fall out before the expiration of twenty years, Bel-ahiddina (and the two others) shall pay to Bel-nadinshumu an indemnity of ten mant of silver.

There are also leases of various kinds, and contracts for the sale of sun-dried bricks and other merchandise, and for the loan of seed-corn and oxen for plowing.—Youth's Companion.

Love's Spelling-book.

Harry found an old spelling-book about the house, which his grandmother had once use in school, and which had a very curious way of spelling many words. He was laughing over some of the funny spelling when his mother called him to her.

"How many ways of spelling love have you found, Harry?" she asked.

"Only one," he replied. It is just the same in this book as it is in my spelling-book at school."

"Why," said his mother, "I know of more than one way. I think there must be at least a dozen ways, possibly a hundred or more."

Harry opened his eyes wide in surprise.

"Just now," said his mother, "you gave up a part of your dinner that the poor Jackson boy might have a good meal. You didn't send a word in the basket, because you didn't want to let your right hand know what your left did, but, nevertheless, there was one word the basket spelled out in very large letters. Can you guess what that was?"

"Was it love?" asked Harry.

"Yes," answered his mother. "And last week when you put your dime into the missionary bank, you didn't say anything, but as it rattled down among the other coins I heard it speak very distinctly a word which you did not catch. Do you know what it was?"

"It must have been love," again answered Harry.

"Yes," said his mother, "that was another way of spelling love. And a little while ago, as I was watching you play your games out in the yard I saw you step out to make room for James Marshall. Why was that?"

"Why," replied Harry, "that was because he thought it was his turn, although I was sure it was mine, and so were all the rest of the boys; but I gave up to him just because I wanted him to have a good time."

"And you spelled our word in another way," said his mother.

"Well, I declare," said Harry, "it is such a wonderful word that it ought to have a spelling-book all to itself."

"It has," answered his mother. "Our whole lives were intended to be primers of love in which we should be constantly spelling out the word by kind, thoughtful actions, so as to make the world a beautiful, happy place in which to live."—Unidentified.

KIDNEY TROUBLE.

The Most Prevalent, Dangerous and Deceptive Disease,

Thousands Have it and Don't Know It.

Pains and aches come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble. Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is overworking to pump the thick kidney-poisoned blood through the veins and arteries.

Soreness or uncomfortabe feeling in the back indicates kidney trouble of no small importance.

The passing of scanty or profuse quantities of urine is a warning of kidney trouble. If you want to feel well you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys.

The famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is the true specific for kidney, bladder and urinary troubles. It has cured thousands of apparently hopeless cases after all other efforts have failed.

Sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. A sample bottle sent free by mail to any address. Also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. When writing, address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and mention that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Is Jonah in Your Bible?

"Father, are you sure that Jonah is in all modern editions of the Bible? Is it in yours?" asked a college boy.

"Is it in mine? I assure you that no vestige of the sin of Jehoiakim could ever appear in my home. I want a whole Bible, or none at all."

"But, father, let me see the Book of Jonah. Your earnest words have aroused my interest."

The Bible was produced—the old copy the father had been reading for many years, every page in the Psalms, the Gospels, and the Epistles soiled with frequent handling. But in vain they searched for Jonah. After turning the leaves of the Old Testament a number of times, the old gentleman repeated in order the names of the prophetical books, but still Jonah could not be found.

"Father," said the young man, "do not get angry, but come here."

As he spoke he held the book under the light, and it was evident that the two leaves containing Jonah had been cut out with a sharp knife.

"Father, pardon me, but I cut out those leaves three years ago, and yet you did not miss them. Now, father, was Jonah in your Bible?"

The father's face revealed a peculiar mental struggle; but he answered:

"I see it, my son; I am as bad as the the higher critics. There has been no Jonah in my Bible for three years."

Friend, how is it with you? A Bible neglected is a Bible mutilated.—Herald of Mercy.

The Millionaire's True Wealth.

Few sadder events are chronicled than the death of a man whose "worth" in dollars and cents has made his name a synonym for wealth. The news often is only a reminder of great opportunities worse than wasted and of a fortune won and held at the cost of the true life. It is pleasant when a man worth millions can be remembered for his worth in ways that cannot be estimated in money. Cornelius Vanderbilt's name will be associated with the Railway Christian Association, with noon evangelistic meetings for Wall Street, and with many matters that count more in the other world than railroads and stocks.

This was doubtless in large measure due to his early training. One of the best legacies that his rich grandfather left was that of making his children depend on their own efforts. When Cornelius at sixteen sought a place in a bank, he had to seek it like any other boy of his age. His name raised a question that brought out his relationship to the "Commodore." The boy showed the spirit that deserved seccess when in answer to the questien why he did not bring a recommendation from his grandfather he said, "Because I don't want to ask him for anything." By diligence and thoroughness he held his place and advanced. Such qualities, when combined with training that lead to trust in God, form the best safeguard against perils that wealth brings and an important foundation for a character more precious than a fortune.—Christian Endeavor World.

How Patti Identified Herself.

On her recent marriage to Baron de Cederstrom, Patti left orders at her home that her mail should be forwarded to the Cannes post office. On her arrival there she went to the post office and asked if there were any letters for the Baroness Adelina de Cederstrom Patti.

"Lots of them."

"Then give them to me."

"Have you any old letters by which I can identify you?"

"No, I have nothing but my visiting card. Here it is.

"O, that's not enough, madam; any one can yet visiting cards of other people. If you want your mail you will have to give me a better proof of your identity than that."

A brilliant idea then struck Madame Patti. She began to sing. A touching song she chose; the one beginning, "A voice loving and tender," and never did she put more heart into the melody. And marvelous was the change as the brilliant music broke through the intense silence. In a few minutes the quiet post office was filled with people, and hardly had the singer concluded the first few lines of the ballad when an old clerk came forward and said, trembling with excitement: "It's Patti, Patti! There's no one but Adelina Patti who could sing like that."

"Well, are you satisfied now?" asked the singer of the official who had doubted her identity. The only reply which he made was to go to the drawer and hand her the pile of letters.—Christian Endeavor World

IF we know an order is of God and is clear and distinct, obey immediately. Do not wait an hour or a day. Do not try to fathom the consequences. Said a young man to us some years ago, "I would go into the ministry if I thought I would not have to go to the foreign field." Ah, how many of us in surrendering our life to the Master's guidance are attempting to reserve too much for our own gratification or pleasure! We want to see the end from the beginning, and because we cannot, then we hesitate in our immediate compliance with the revealed will of God. The opportunity is gone, and we are left weakened in faith and Christian experience because of our faltering and hesitating.

The Red Box Clew—III.

One evening in early August, Brother Wilton returned to St. Louis from a visit to a distant town, which had occupied three days. Frank Douglas knew when to expect him, and there she stood on the piazza of the lodging house with a welcoming smile and a little bunch of flowers in her hand. That was to be pinned upon his coat, of course. As the old gentleman bent down so she reach the place easily, something shone in his eye. And that was a tear. "Let us go to our corner, Frank," he said, gravely. Now the piazza passed around the front of the house and brought up abruptly under the bedroom window. It was an obscure little nook, just big enough for two chairs, and the homeless girl and the old bachelor often sat there and had sweet, serious talks about life and duties, while the sound of clinking dishes and the odor of frying beefsteak reminded them that there was also fun in the world.

After they were seated, a long silence followed, broken at last by the minister: "Well, Frank, how do I look this evening —gay?"

"I saw a tear," said Frank timidly.

"And you let it go without a question?"

"I thought it might be caused by something in which I had no concern, Brother Wilton."

"It was caused by you, I can tell you that!" said the old gentleman. "I was thinking how lonely I would be when I come back from my appointments and you are not on the porch to greet me with smiles and flowers. That shows how spoiled I am. For what right have I to have a bright, young creature like you, giving me welcomes? It serves me right for you to go away and leave me, I ought to have married in my day, and had a family of my own. Only—" He stopped abruptly, while Frank felt her breath coming faster. Had he found a situation for her? She waited in painful suspense.

"Ah, Frank Douglas," said Brother Wilton, with a tender smile, "do you know what that name means to me? It was the name of my rival. She loved the brave young soldier, the Frank Douglas of many years ago, and she never knew the young Bible student had a thought or her, unless a brotherly thought. Yes, that was your Miss West. After she died, I told Bob."

"Bob," was Frank's late patron, Mr. West. The child looked at him with large, serious eyes, trying to understand some of the things that the other had not spoken. Suddenly the minister said abruptly, "And Frank, I have found you a place."

"A place? Oh, I am so glad, so glad!"

"So glad to get away from a gloomy old man?"

"Not that; oh, Brother Wilton, you know I would like to live with you forever! But—and we have talked that all over so many times. And you know you said, God only depends on those who depend only on him."

"That is true, I think, Frank. If I had saved up a little money, all would be different. But being a bachelor and a preacher, ah, well! I must let you go forth to seek your fortune."

"I'll tell you what I will do," cried the girl. "I will work so hard and be so useful that people will feel like they have to keep me. And so I will save and save, till I have lots of money; and then I will buy a little home somewhere, and you and I will live together all the rest of our lives. Just you and I, the two faithful friends. But tell me about my new work."

"It is in Creekville, about two hundred miles from here," replied Brother Wilton. "There is a very rich family there, in a house that would be considered handsome even here in St. Louis; Mr. Clarmont and his wife, leaders in society; rather a worldly family, all around. I wish they were Christians, but if they do not change you, little one, perhaps you can change them. Don't let them change you, Frank. Well, there is one daughter, about ten years old, three years younger than you, who had a terrible disease last year; and for eleven months she has been stone deaf. She will never hear again. The roar of a cannon would not frighten her, for the organ of hearing is completely destroyed. They want a companion for this unfortunate child; some one to amuse her, and help her bear her affliction, and the long hours. Her name is Vega Clarmont. I am afraid she has been greatly spoiled since her illness, but that is little wonder. And I am afraid it is a hard position for you to fill, and rather sad, too. But at the end of a week you are to come back if you are not suited, or if they are not pleased. There are other children; a young lady who is to graduate this coming year, and a boy a little older than you, I think. They are proud people, and scornful of others who are not as prosperous."

"How they will scorn me!" cried Frank, laughing. "But I am glad it is a place where I shall feel brave to go. I know I shall be afraid of a fine house and of proud people; it makes me shudder just to think of it, but you can't be brave if you are not afraid, can you, Brother Wilton?"

"It will be a blessing to you, my child," said the old man, drawing from his pocket a book he always carried with him. "You know we are told to let our light shine, but sometimes it is hard for us to see just the right way. But listen to this; it seems meant expressly for you: 'And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul, then shall thy light rise in obscurity and thy darkness be as the noonday?' "

"Oh, what a sweet verse!" cried Frank; "and I know it is meant for me. I will get my Bible and mark the place." So she ran away and returned with swift feet, bringing the very Bible Brother Wilton had given her that day when first she began to think about the true life. And there was an oak leaf pressed between the leaves that had come from the very tree under which those two were sitting when the preacher said, "Do you ever think of the happiness you deny yourself by not being a Christian?" Certainly, she had never thought of it, for she had never been told. And now how long ago that seemed! Since then, she had often wondered to find Christians no happier than other people, and often they were very cross and unpromising. Instead of loving their fellowmen they seemed to regard their species as developed or potential rascals. But Frank loved everybody; to be sure she knew nothing about people and their peculiar ways, except she knew she was a person and tried to do right. And were not other people persons, just as she?

Brother Wilton could not go with Frank to Creekville. He wrote to Mr. Clarmont when to expect her, then put her under the care of the conductor. She rode on the train all day. There was something in her face that attracted the conductor, for he brought her popcorn and figs and a book and presented them without price. There was a red-faced, cross-looking man across the aisle, who, however, was not cross at all, for he made her change seats with him when the sun began to glare through her window. And a little girl of three took a fancy to her and insisted on eating some bread and molasses in Frank's lap—such an ugly little girl, with drab-colored stockings that were never up, and sticky hair, but the funniest laugh you ever heard! It did you good to hear it; and all the time the train was saying "Chug-a-chug, chug-a-chug," sometimes fast and sometimes slow. When she thought it noon she ate her lunch, and when it really was noon (about two hours later), a man brought her a hot cup of coffee. Late in the afternoon she saw a newsboy leap upon the platform of a small station house and contract for a buttonhole bouquet from a flower vender. The newsboy looked eight or nine, only he had such a keen, experienced face, as if rubbing against the world had cut some wise lines in his brow, and Frank was pleased to see him buy the flowers. "He is taking them to his mother," she thought, and she sighed—it was almost a sob—as she thought of her own loneliness. But the newsboy's mother never saw those flowers. For what was Frank's amazement when his voice said at her ear, "Say, want 'um?" And they were thrown, rather than placed, in her hand; after which she saw the newsboy no more.

"Crevat!"

Which was the brakeman's manner of announcing their approach to Creekville. Frank tingled all over as the train slowed up, fearing to meet her employer, dreading the fine house and the proud, rich family. And when the train stopped, the tingling reached the pins-and-needles state. But she arose and went out, while all along the aisle she encountered friendly smiles. She was the only one to leave the train, so there could be no mistake about her. The hackdriver said, "I reckon you're the one Mr. Clarmont said to bring up to his house. Git in and I'll see to your trunk." As she sat waiting in the hack she was startled by the silence. She missed the song of the train and the noise of St. Louis. But when the hack started, its bumping and rattling made up for other sounds. And so she reached the Clarmont home, and the memory of how hands had waved to her from the departing train only made her feel the lonelier; as if the snorting, iron-hearted engine had spirited away from all her friends, and she would never find any more.

THE ZEAL OF THE REFORMER.*

The period at which Ezra organized his expedition to Jerusalem is somewhat uncertain, owing to the fact that Artaxerxes, who is mentioned in Ezra 7:1, may be either Artaxerxes I., who reigned from 464 to 436 B. C., or Artaxerxes II., who reigned from 404 to 358 B. C. It has been usually supposed that Ezra's work lay in the reign of the former king, but there are many indications in the narrative which led biblical scholars to reconsider the question and to regard the year 397 or thereabouts in the reign of the second king named as more probably the true date. In the latter case the work of Ezra follows rather than precedes the work of Nehemiah, and a careful comparison of the different narratives contained in the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah lends color to this supposition. The question is one of minor importance, and is interesting perhaps, rather to the student of the history of Judaism than to the one who studies the religious aspect of the case; for under either supposition the work of Ezra, like that of Nehemiah, stands in clear outline.

It is evident that Ezra was one of that somewhat numerous class of men among the Jews in Babylon who had not felt it their duty or perhaps within the the reach of possibility to return to Jerusalem, and yet who were deeply interested in the welfare of the community which was slowly regaining strength at the site of Israel's former glory. The practices of the people in Judah, made up as they were so largely of those who had remained at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadrezzar, and the few who had come at different times from Babylon, even though the temple service was carried on and other elements of religious character were apparent, did not satisfy the more zealous adherents of the law who lived in the east. They felt that Judah could never prosper until it rose to the ideal of a community separated entirely from ceremonial impurities by the imposition of much more strict rules of life than had been yet applied. Within this group of priests, Levites and scribes in Babylon, whose attention since the beginning of the Exile had been directed more than ever to the demands or the law and to such interpretations of it as were fitted to meet the needs of the Jews since the destruction of the kingdom, it was felt that the only safeguard and promise of prosperity for Jerusalem lay in a new impulse toward holiness to be secured alone by the diligent teaching of the law. It has already been noticed that the earlier movements in Judah following the edict of Cyrus had partaken in no small measure of a political character and that it was the hope of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, and no doubt the ambition of the entire community, that the house of David should be restored to an earthly throne with Zerubbabel the prince as its occupant. This hope had long since faded at the period of which we are studying, probably because any incipient movement toward an independent kingship in Judah was speedily detected by the Persian officials and impossible by the quiet removal of Zerubbabel from even the semblance of his princely power. At all events, Zerubbabel, and with him the entire royal line, disappears from political significance.

It is to another hope, therefore, that appeal is made by the expedition of Ezra, and the efforts which he made in this direction are worthy of all praise. Ezra has been too frequently considered the type of the narrow-minded and iconoclastic reformer whose intolerance produced many of the unfavorable features of later Judaism; but one may be permitted to question whether if Ezra had not come with the new regulations for the life of the community and set on foot that movement which strictly separated the Jews from all other nations, the whole impulse of the chosen people would not have been lost in the dark days of the Greek period. Judaism owed whatever of life it possessed in the period preceding the coming of Jesus to the intense zeal and earnestness of those men who had received their impulse toward even ceremonial righteousness at the hands of Ezra. Nor must it be forgotten that even Phariseeism, which was the natural outgrowth of this movement, was the highest type of religion which the world knew before Christianity appeared. Such devotion to the ideals of religion, even if they tended to become ceremonial and external, was a supremely interesting object-lesson to the world, and it is not strange that many of the best minds of other nations were turning their attention to Judaism as the refuge of those who sought freedom from heathen vanities and foolish speculations. Even that Judaism which in contrast with the teachings of Jesus seems pedantic and mechanical, produced within its circle many notable examples of intense earnestness and devotion to the highest ideals of truth and righteousness.

All this lay in germ in Ezra's mission to Jerusalem. Fired with such a purpose he gathered a company of men who were devoted to the law and were willing to become teachers in the homeland and thus equipped, prepared to undertake the long journey. His and theirs was the zeal of missionaries who bear the truth to the far regions of the earth. Ezra was an older Carey or Judson, going with the Word of God in his hand. He discovered, however, after the company was assembled at their first rendezvous, at the river Ahava, that there were no Levites among them, and as the law which he was taking in his hand and which is thus twice referred to in the royal decree of permission given him by Artanerxes (Ezra 7:14-25), required Levites for its services, he waited until a sufficient number could be secured to satisfy the necessities of the case. Then they paused for another brief period at the encampment in order to invoke the divine protection for the journey, in which they would incur the danger of robbery from the roving bands of marauders which always infest the desert, especially since the caravan was known to have in charge costly vessels of gold and silver for the temple service. Ezra in his request for permission to make the journey had said so much concerning the power of Jehovah, his God, that he was ashamed to ask for a military guard, which would no doubt have been cheerfully granted him; but, as it turned out, this was unnecessary. He committed the offerings which had been made by the wealthier Jews to the hands of chosen priests and Levites with the injunction that they should keep them in charge until they arrived in Jerusalem at the temple. The journey was then begun on the twelfth day of the first month, which was in the spring, and they arrived in Jerusalem in the fifth month of the same year (Ezra 7:8), where after a short rest of three days they presented their gifts at the temple to the proper authorities and celebrated their arrival by sacrifices. At the same time they delivered the commission they had received from the king into the hands of his representatives in the province and began their work of reorganizing the community upon the lines of the legal regulations which they brought with them from Babylon, and which they believed to be essential to the true prosperity of the community.

Cure Drunkards.

Eloquent Words from a Wife Who Rescued Her Husband From a Terrible Habit.

Secretly Gave Him a Remedy in His Coffee and He Now Rejoices With Her.

Who can doubt that there is a cure for drunkenness when we have such an eloquent and emphatic statement from Mrs. Katie Lynch, 329 Ellis St., San Francisco, Cal.? She says:—My husband was a hard drinker. There never was a doubt in my mind but what liquor had so worked upon his nerves as to actually control his appetite. Like most men who drink he was kind and generous when sober, but the rum demon usually had the better of him and his wife had to suffer. One day I concluded to try a remedy called Golden Specific, which it was said would cure the liquor habit secretly. So I mixed some of it with Mr. Lynch's food for a few days and put a little in his coffee. I could scarcely conceal my agitation and fear lest he should suspicion me, for he had suddenly taken a dislike to liquor, said he despised the stuff, and was the most remarkably changed man you ever saw. I kept bravely at it, determined to not waver in my attempt to cure him, and I soon found out that my mission was a complete success and that Golden Specific had wrought almost a miracle for me. I want other women to profit by my example and am glad to learn that Dr. Haines, who discovered Golden Specific, will generously send a free trial package to every woman who writes for it.

Send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Haines, 870 Glenn Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, and if you wish you are at liberty to refer to me as having told you about this marvelous remedy.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 22.

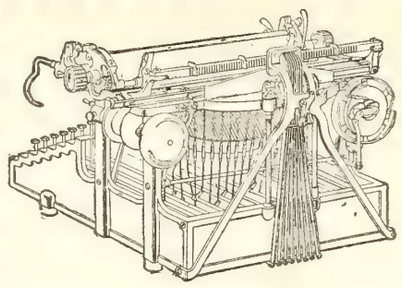
"AN OLD-TIME MISSIONARY."

(A Missionary Meeting.)

It has sometimes been said that Jonah was the earliest missionary that was ever sent out. Whether this is true or not, he was one of the most human of missionaries. Jonah did as most of us would have done in his place. He was hesitating and fearful about beginning his work; and when, at last, he began it, and the Lord showed himself merciful, Jonah was angry because his own personal dignity seemed to have suffered. It is an encouragement to many of us who feel our weaknesses to find that God uses an imperfect instrument so gloriously. Jonah's life as a missionary has helped many another.

It is doubtful which was more overpowering to Jonah's mind, the darkness of his burial alive, in which it seemed to him that surely he was in the depths of hades, discouraged, conscience-smitten, afraid; or the greatness of the wealthy and powerful city that he was commanded to enter and preach to. A whole day he journeyed into it, with all its teeming thousands about him. How small he must have seemed to himself! So, is it not true that we also, coming up out of the depths of despondency, sometimes, are confronted with a herculean task that immediately seems to plunge us again into hopeless discouragement. Well for us, then, if we come out of our dark trial no weaker, but only stronger, as Jonah did, for the great work before us!

It must have seemed to Jonah very hopeless to preach to all these godless people, but the results were immediate and amazing. The people in hovels and palaces, and the king himself, upon his throne, were melted into penitence. How quick and powerful is the Word of the Lord, and sharper than a two edged sword! If only, then, we are absolutely sure we are right, and use our utmost endeavors, we need have no fears for the result. Undoubtedly God guards the right.



A precious lesson comes to us in the experience of those Ninevites, and that is the infinite mercy and forgiveness of God. They were wicked to the verge of destruction, but they repented, then God repented of his resolve. It seems to us sometimes that surely our sin is the blackest ever known, and God can have no leniency toward it; but if God forgave Nineveh, he will forgive us. "If we are faithful to confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

But it is not without suffering that we pass into this cleansing. No thought is clearer in the life of Jonah than that "the way of the transgressor is hard." Is there any one of us that has sinned? Does he not realize—O with what intensity!—that the way of the transgressor is hard? There is no rest while the sin is there, any more than when a thorn is in the hand. It is only when the sin—the foreign substance—is out that peace comes. It was only when rebellion disappeared from the heart of Jonah that he again saw the light of life and the peace of God.

All these lessons are missionary lessons, are they not?

Curing the Little Ones. Mrs. O. Rosberg, 1104 State St., Indianapolis, Ind., writes: "My family and I can highly recommend your Blood Vitalizer. We have used it about six months, and find that it does all you claim for it. My little child's face was covered with pimples and eruptions, but by the use of a bottle of the Blood Vitalizer her face is now entirely clear. I would never be without it on account of myself and children."

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer brings sunshine into the home, by relieving suffering and restoring health. It stands pre-eminently above other household remedies. A comfort to every mother. Not a drug store medicine. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 So. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

The North American Review for October is the largest issue of that periodical which has been published since it became a monthly magazine, the editor's broad and generous plan having necessitated a material increase in the number of pages. It is a number, moreover, of extraordinary excellence, bearing upon its title-page an array of names famous throughout the world, and a list of subjects of surprising diversity and timeliness.

The Review of Reviews for October contains the first complete account of the remarkable Hearst architectural competition for the University of California, which came to an end September 7 with a reward of a first prize of $10,000 to the eminent French architect, E. Benard, and of four other prizes amounting to an equal sum to American competitors. The article in the Review, which was written by Mr. H. S. Allen, of San Francisco, is illustrated with perspective views of the prize plans, a portrait of Mrs. Phebe Hearst, whose munificence made the competition possible, and portraits of the distinguished architects who served on the jury of award.

QUEEN ESTHER, by M. M. Davis, is a timely contribution to our Old Testament Historical Literature just now when a new interest is being awakened in the extension of Sunday-school and Endeavor Societies. The sketch is written in a charming style, and gives information that can be relied on. Price, 75 cents. Christian Pub. Co., St. Louis.

YOUR dealer in lamp-chimneys — what does he get for you?

You can't be an expert in chimneys; but this you can do. Insist on Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass" whichever shape you require. They are right in all those ways; and they do not break from heat, not one in a hundred. Be willing to pay a nickel more for them.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

KERNAN.

Died at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kernan, in Mexico, Mo., on the night of October 3rd, Miss Lida H. Kernan. Wafted away, as on angels' wings, her sweet Christian spirit took its flight to the tearless realm where the redeemed millions receive the Father's welcome. Her life was one of intelligent Christian influence, highly educated and refined; it was a blessing to the world, and especially to the young, to whom she devoted ten years of her life. She was a teacher in the true sense of the term, in both example and precept, graduating with honor. The schoolroom, church and home was where her useful life was spent. Hundreds of little children today, as the autumn leaves are falling, have their happy hearts saddened with the sorrow of her departure. At the age of 15 years she united with the Mexico Christian Church under the pastorage of the lamented John A. Brooks, and for fifteen years lived a sweet Christian life. This was death's first entrance into the happy home of three sisters and doting parents. Long and patiently she waited with her lingering disease, and finally, with one hand in her father's and the other seemingly in her Savior's, she left us with a sweet smile upon her fair face as she saw the last of earth and the first of heaven's happiness. Beautiful flowers, the tribute of many loving hearts, covered her casket, and a very long procession of devoted friends followed her to the city of the dead. Her life leaves sweet memories of purity and love and her death lasting evidence of faith and consecration. A FRIEND.

WELCH.

Gilbert Welch was born in Rush County, Indiana, December 22, 1823. Moved with his parents to Louisa County, Iowa, in 1845. Married Miss Sarah E Hicklin in June, 1847. Came to Clay Center, Kansas, in 1874, and has resided here ever since. He died August 16, 1899, aged 75 years, and has been a member of the Christian Church for over 50 years. A wife, two daughters and two sons survive him. The funeral services were conducted by the writer. J. C. IRVIN.

Clay Center, Kan.

WILEY.

Maria Metteer Wiley was born in Broom Co., New York, Dec 30, 1822 and died at her home near Mitchellville, Ia., Oct. 2, 1899, being over 76 years of age. Her mother is living, over 95 years of age. Five sisters, her husband and seven children survive her. Mrs. Wiley united with the Church of Christ in 1876 and lived like her Master. For years she has been a great sufferer. Death was a welcome visitor. The writer conducted funeral services at the home near Mitchellville, Ia.

J. M. LOWE.

Des Moines, Ia.

SANDERS.

Another father in Israel has fallen. At the ripe age of 72 years, at his home in Worthington, Ind., Sept. 23, Bro. Preston G. Sanders entered into rest. He united with the Church of Christ before the war, and was a helper in building the first house of worship for Disciples here. He served his Master faithfully and well, and leaves to the world the record of a glorious life with Christ. He leaves a wife and son to mourn their loss. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, Sept. 24th.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

ORGANIC EVOLUTION CONSIDERED

By ALFRED FAIRHURST,

Professor of Natural Science in Kentucky University.

21 Chapters, 386 Pages, $1.50

This work is a very thorough and scholarly discussion of evolution by one who has had many years' experience as a teacher of science in Kentucky University at Lexington, Ky.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Introduction, Matter, Force, Method of Creation, Spontaneous Generation, Natural Selection, Paleontology, Embryology, Special Objections to the Theory of Evolution, Rudimentary Organs, Secondary Sexual Differences, Instinct, The Origin of Man, A Future Life, Design in Nature, Evil and Altruism in Nature, Agnosticism, Recapitulation, Genesis and Geology, Appendix.

Having been for many years a teacher of various branches of natural science, it has been my duty to discuss the subject of organic evolution. This volume contains some of the objections which I have from time to time presented againt the acceptance of that theory, together with several chapters on other subjects.—Author's Preface.

It seems to me that any candid person who reads the book must close it with the conviction that the hypothesis of the origin of organic species by the process of evolution is not only an unproved hypothesis, as its ablest advocates admit, but one that is essentially false. In addition to what the author says on the subject of evolution, he furnishes the unscientific reader with a large amount of information about matter in its various forms and about organized beings that is both interesting and valuable.—J. W. McGarvey, Lexington, Ky.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The long-threatened war between the Transvaal Republic and Great Britain has at last broken loose in spite of all efforts to avert the same. On the 13th inst. an armored train from Mefeking was wrecked and fired upon by the Boers, killing fifteen British soldiers and capturing almost the entire crew. The ultimatum of the diplomatic state came from President Kruger, giving England forty-eight hours in which to reply favorably to the four following demands:

"1. That all poinis of mutual difference be regulated by friendly recourse to arbitration or by whatever amicable way may be agreed upon by this government and her majesty's government.

"2. That all troops on the border of this republic shall be instantly withdrawn.

"3. That all re-enforcements of troops which have arrived in South Africa since June 1, 1899, shall be removed from South Africa within a reasonable time, to be agreed upon with this government, and with the mutual assurance and guaranty on the part of this government that no attack upon or hostilities against any portion of the possessions of the British Government shall be made by this republic during the further negotiations within a period of time to be subsequently agreed upon between the governments, and this government will, on compliance therewith, be prepared to withdraw the armed burghers of this republic from the borders.

"4. That her majesty's troops which are now on the high seas shall not be landed in any part of South Africa."

Within the allotted time President Kruger through the usual diplomatic channels received the following reply:

LONDON, October 11.—The Right Honorable William St. John Broderick, Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, announced in a speech at Guildford to-night that the government had made the only possible reply to the Transvaal, namely, that "We are not prepared to discuss such terms."

Thus ended the efforts at peace and a state of war followed. The formal declaration of war by the Transvaal Government was made at ten o'clock, October 12, and aggressive movements began at once upon the British strongholds. The first conflict of forces was at Mafeking, with result stated. The Cape Colony Railroad is now also in possession of the Boers at Vryburg, and they seem to be preparing for a simultaneous invasion of British territory at five different points. The Transvaal strength now in the field is estimated to be 21,000 men, and that of the Orange Free State 10,000. The British as yet have but 8,000 soldiers in the field, but are rapidly re-enforcing their army in South Africa. Where and how this war will end depends largely upon the position of other nations. Without interference it seems to mean the supremacy of British authority in Southern Africa at no distant day.

Latest word from the Transvaal war indicates that the Boers are preparing to strike a heavy blow at British supremacy in South Africa at an early date. Kimberley, the seat of the famous diamond mines, has been besieged and completely isolated by the cutting of all railroad and telegraphic communication with other points. The isolation of Mafeking last week has also been confirmed. It is now subject to an attack at any time of 8,000 Boers, with only 600 British soldiers to defend the city. An attack on Dundee by the Boers is also daily expected, and the British are preparing for a retreat to Ladysmith, where they expect to make a firm stand against the Boers. President Steyn, of the Free State, is said to be in telephonic communication with President Kruger, and it is thought that their armies will form a junction at Ladysmith. It is expected that martial law will be proclaimed in Ladysmith to-day. The capture of Cecil Rhodes is said to be one of the special objects of the attack upon Kimberley. Great fears are felt upon the part of the British that the success of the Boers likely to be achieved before the arrival of British re-enforcements will cause a general uprising of the Dutch in the British colonies now in sympathy with the Free State. Refugees by the hundred are still pouring into the Cape, and are being cared for by the government in sheds. The English fund for their relief has reached almost $300,000. Food supplies are reported scarce in the Transvaal, although a large quantity is stored at Pretoria, while the British troops are said to be supplied with 10,000 head of cattle. Dundee and Ladysmith, points about which the Boers are concentrating, are defended with 9,000 troops at the latter and 4,000 at the former-named place. As the hope of the Boers for success depends largely upon rapid aggressive work, we may expect to hear of severe fighting and bloody battles within a few days.

In the President's tour of last and the present week a number of important events were programed. At Peoria, Ill., Oct. 6th, the beautiful bronze and granite monument erected by the Ladies' Memorial Day Association at a cost of $35,000 was dedicated by the President. To accomplish this tribute to the heroes of the Civil War, a number of Peoria's prominent women have worked incessantly for six years and now see the work of their hands and the purpose of their hearts established. The monument stands in the courthouse square. At Evansville, Ind., on Tuesday, October 10th, the President and his party attended the reunion of the blue and the gray which, it is said, was the greatest public entertainment ever given in Southern Indiana. The presence of the President at this meeting and his address as well as the entertainment itself had the tendency, if possible, of strengthening the bonds of peace between the states once divided by war. The breach has long since been healed, but the continual application of the ointment of loving words to the old scars cannot fail of heathful results. The festive season in Chicago with its crowded streets and the noted guests of the city from Canada and Mexico marked another noted period of the tour. Then came the enthusiastic welcome to extended to the 13th Minnesota volunteers at Minneapolis on their return from the Philippine Islands in which President McKinley participated. If the nation were in need of events to awaken its patriotism more potent events than these for such a purpose could scarcely be named, and yet, without these the national barometer stands at high pressure on this score so that we need only remark that these were occasions of great outpourings of the people and of unbounded enthusiasm.

From the statistics of cities of over 30,000, recently issued by the Department of Labor, Washington, D. C., we present in part those given of Missouri's four cities which come in that class. In the figures given there is food for reflection. "Estimated population January 1, 1899: St. Louis, 623,000; Kansas City, 200,000; St. Joseph, 75,000; Springfield, 30,000. Area in acres: St. Louis, 40,000; Kansas City, 16,640; St. Joseph, 4,503; Springfield, 3,680. Policemen: St. Louis, 976; Kansas City, 175; St. Joseph, 52; Springfield, 11. Licensed retail liquor saloons: St. Louis, 2,032; Kansas City, 430; St. Joseph, 122; Springfield, 20. Drunkenness: St. Louis, 3,649 arrests; Kansas City, 1,114 arrests; St. Joseph, 731 arrests; Springfield, 490 arrests. Disturbing the peace: St. Louis, 6,999 arrests; Kansas City, 2,436 arrests; St. Joseph, 428 arrests; Springfield, 7 arrests. Assault and battery: St. Louis, 523 arrests; Kansas City, 196 arrests; St. Joseph, 20 arrests; Springfield, 10 arrests. Homicide: St. Lous, 36 arrests; Kansas City, 18; St. Joseph, 2; Springfield, 2. Total number of arrests for all causes: St. Louis, 26,314; Kansas City, 13,336; St. Joseph, 2,979; Springfield, 1,086. The number of fires in the four cities and the property loss during the past year was as follows: St. Louis, 1797 fires, with a property loss of $907,090; Kansas City, 950 fires, with a property loss of $530,888.17; St. Joseph, 225 fires with a property loss of $38,947; Springfield, 130 fires, with a property loss of $17,605. The death rate in St. Louis was 14.13 per 1,000 of population; Kansas City, 10.73; St. Joseph, 8.83.

IN JUBILEE CONVENTION ASSEMBLED.

The greatest convention in the history of the Disciples of Christ is now in progress. The "Queen City" is thronged with such a religious convocation as never before pressed through her streets and crowded her halls and churches. The far East and the more distant West, the states by the gulf, and those by the Northern lakes, Canada and England, are all represented in this Jubilee Convention. The aged veterans are here, the representatives of a former generation. A mighty host of younger men and women are here, drinking in inspiration for their future work. Already the delegates here are numbered by thousands.

C. W. B. M.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions convened in the splendid edifice of the Central Christian Church on Friday morning, Mrs. O. A. Burgess in the chair. The church building has proved too small to accommodate the crowds. The report of the board was more than satisfactory; it was inspiring. It showed the total results of the year to be $101,343.54. The increase in membership, however, was not equal to the increase in receipts. They started out a year ago with the motto for their silver anniversary, "Ninety thousand dollars and ninety thousand members in ninety-nine." They more than realized the desired amount of money, but strange to say, fell short in membership; strange, because it ought to be considered a privilege and an honor to belong to such a great and successful organization of Christian women.

The society sends out two lady missionaries to India soon—Miss Rawson and Miss Dr. Longdon, who were introduced to the convention. Besides, two of our well-known preachers, N. M. Ragland and W. M. Forrest, are under appointment to go to Calcutta soon to take charge of Bible instruction in the university in that Indian metropolis. This is practically an extension of the Bible Chair work into India. Miss Lois White, who has rendered eight years of faithful service as corresponding secretary of the board, resigned her work and Mrs. Helen E. Moses was appoinied to succeed her.

A TRAGIC EVENT.

On Saturday evening at 8 o'clock there was a business men's meeting in one of the large rooms of the Grand Hotel, where a number of the delegates are stopping. Ex-Gov. Drake, of Iowa, presided. He had called out four or five speakers who had made brief speeches on the general topic of the relation of business men to the kingdom of God. The last of these speakers was A. M. Atkinson, of Wabash, Ind., a man who is known throughout the brotherhood for his liberality to the cause, and in recent years for his efforts in behalf of the Ministerial Relief Fund, of which he was the founder. He made a brief but beautiful and most effective appeal for a deeper interest in the things of the kingdom on the part of business men. He had begun his life work as a preacher, but soon, he said, he discovered that he could serve God more effectively by doing business for Him and consecrating his money to religious uses. Making money honestly, he said, was as holy a calling as preaching the gospel, if the money was used to advance the kingdom of God. He told the business men how much joy and blessedness they deprived themselves of by not attending these conventions more regularly and devoting themselves more fully to the great enterprises of the church. Suddenly he dropped his voice, put one hand to his heart and said, "I must stop, as my heart is going pit-a-pat. I shall not speak to you many times more. Be warned. Quit you like men." With this he sat down in his chair. He raised his hand and beckoned towards the chairman. Seeing this, we hastened to him and, as we reached him, we saw his head falling backward and supported it with our arm. A physician in the room administered the usual restoratives, but in a few minutes, without a struggle and with a few deep breathings, life had departed and his spirit had gone to God. It is impossible to describe the sensation. The men in the room were standing and watching with painful suspense the outcome, when the physicians, two or three of whom had come into the room, pronounced life extinct. The body was straightened out on the table in front of the chairman's seat on the platform. Gen. Drake pronounced the meeting adjourned and called on one of the brethren to close with prayer. It was a tremendously solemn moment. We seemed to be standing on the borders of the invisible world. It was a prayer of consecration, and that room full of business men with bowed heads and with suppressed sobs, pledged themselves to henceforth heed the admonition of our departed brother and live for things that are eternal. Never in our experience did we ever witness such a scene, and we probably shall never witness another like it. That it will be productive of far-reaching results can scarcely be doubted.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

There was a great outpouring of the people on Lord's day at all the churches, nearly all of which were supplied by our ministers, both morning and evening. At three in the afternoon the communion service was observed in Music Hall, Odeon Hall and the Central Christian Church, all of which were filled to overflowing. The Music Hall contained between five and six thousand people, and the service, presided over by A. M. Harvuot, was not only orderly, but exceedingly impressive. The great choir on the platform of several hundred voices rendered many of the sweet old hymns during the forty minutes consumed in waiting on the vast concourse of people. After reading of the Scriptures and prayer, the editor of this paper made an announcement of Bro. Atkinson's departure, gave his dying message to his brethren, which the speaker interpreted to be God's message to this Jubilee Convention, and suggested an "Atkinson Memorial Ministerial Relief Fund" as the best way to honor and perpetuate his memory. Bro. Mark Collis spoke most appropriately and impressively ont he meaning of the Lord's Supper, and the brethren who prayed lifted all hearts to God. No one present at the communion service will ever forget it. Francis E. Clark, of Christian Endeavor fame, who was present, having addressed the great gathering in connection with Prof. Edward S. Ames in the same hall on Saturday evening, pronounced it the greatest and most impressive communion service he had ever attended. So said hundreds of others.

The weather is lovely, only rather warm for comfort. Great meetings are yet ahead of us, not the least important of which will be the Jubilee Session, on next Tuesday afternoon. The daily parpers are giving quite full reports. The local committees have performed their duty with great wisdom and perfection of detail, and we are having the most memorable convention in our history so far.

A PLEA FOR MORE RELIGIOUS THINKING.

It is no doubt true that there is a widespread revival of interest in Bible study. Never has that much-abused, oft-neglected and sometimes derided Book had a deeper hold on the human mind than it has to-day. This is true because no other book deals so satisfactorily with the great problems which so deeply affect our present and future well-being. The new and better translations, the better form in which the sacred Scriptures are being printed to-day, the "introductions," setting forth the character and places of the various books in the sacred Canon, the new light that is being thrown upon ancient history by discoveries in archæology, the general advance of knowledge along all lines of study—all this has tended to bring the study of the sacred Scriptures into new prominence. There remains, however, much to be done, yet, in this direction, to enlist the membership of our various churches in the systematic study of God's Word.

It will be impossible, however, to make much headway in Bible study unless we inculcate and foster the duty of each individual, thinking for himself in a free and unhampered way, on all the questions that come before him in Bible study. We are persuaded that there is a great lack here, and a great hindrance to individual growth, both in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Every one who has given any attention to this subject knows the vast difference between thinking out a question for one's self and accepting a ready-made view, second-hand, no matter how correct the latter may be. It is the process of thinking that imparts strength to the mind and enthusiasm for research. Of course, the inevitable result of this individual thinking will be difference of opinions, and we are aware that this alarms some people. There is, however, much greater reason for alarm at the state of intellectual stagnation that prevails among many professing Christians. We never could quite understand why some people are so troubled over differences of judgment among brethren on some subject that does not involve any matter of vital importance.

A writer in The Outlook of October 7th, in an article on "Christian Liberty," says:

"Nor is it a menace to the church if its members hold different opinions. The apostles themselves did this. Even on so vital a question as the resurrection of Christ they were not agreed at first. . . . . Thomas openly declared his unbelief on the subject and said, 'Except I shall see in his hand the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.' And yet no harm was done the church—perhaps because he was not expelled from among their number, nor abused by the rest, but was still their brother in Christ and fellow-apostle. Let, then, the members differ as widely as need be. So long as one and the self-same spirit worketh in all, it will not hurt the church. On the contrary, it would be death to it if there were no difference—death from stagnation. Surely, no one would maintain that it already possesses all truth, and that there are no deeper, larger views to be obtained. There must be. But how is it to be done unless we are free to confess that—

'Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of Thee,
And Thou, O Lord, art more than they.'"

So long as the idea prevails that it is dangerous for brethren to differ from each other in opinion, there is no encouragement to individual thinking, for the exercise of our individual judgments, in an honest effort to know the truth for ourselves on every subject that comes before us, is certain to result in differences of opinion. It soon comes to be, therefore, that thinking for one's self is regarded as a dangerous experiment, and we begin to look around for the most commonly accepetd view, and we take that second-hand. There is, of course, many things that most of us are compelled to accept second-hand, because only a few specialists have entered these fields of investigation and are competent to express an opinion upon them. But as soon as the facts they furnish us come within our possession we are to exercise our individual judgment as to the bearing upon the particular question in hand, and he who does not do this is doing grave injustice to his own moral and intellectual nature. In the Roman Catholic Church all questions are settled by the hierarchy, and the people are saved the trouble of thinking for themselves, but the result of it we all know. The chief distinction between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism has been and is the greater freedom of thought which the latter inculcates; but all Protestants do not act consistently with this distinction.

We have long been of the opinion that there is more intellectual than physical laziness. There is a constitutional indisposition to mental exertion as well as an inherent reluctance in expending physical energy, and it, perhaps, is more widespread than the latter.

In the same article referred to above the writer asks, and we think with great reason, "Is not perchance this the very reason why so much coldness and indifference exist in the church to-day, because so many of us pretend to believe a great deal more than we really do? We pretend to believe every particle of every Protestant creed and every proposition of every orthodox work on theology. We are not willfully nor consciously hypocrites in doing this. We ourselves believe that we believe them all, simply because we imagine that not to disbelieve is the same as to believe. After all, is not this all that the complacent orthodoxy of the multitude amounts to? They do not disbelieve! But neither do they believe with anything like positive faith, a real personal conviction, even some of the simplest and most vital truths of the religion they profess. If they did, they could not be the self-satisfied creatures they are, the cold, disinterested men and women we find in our churches by thousands. No wonder their professions have so little relation to their lives and their Christianity to their characters. What we do not disbelieve does not affect us, but what we believe does. I had rather have them disbelieve a great deal they profess if they would also honestly believe a very little."

That these sentences strike at a widespread evil among professed Christians, we cannot for a moment doubt. There is a lack of reality in our religious profession, that is the chief hindrance to the spread of the gospel. Let us have more thinking—real, personal, hand-to-hand intellectual encounters with the problems that confront us, and we will probably profess less, believe more and live a great deal better.

Hour of Prayer.

NOTHING BUT LEAVES.

(Matt. 21:17-22; John 15:5-8.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Oct. 25th.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Christ expects His disciples to bear fruit, and the law of fruitfulness is union with Himself.

It was after a night spent in Bethany when Jesus was returning to the city without having even tarried, as it seems, for the morning meal, that He approached a fig tree by the wayside, being hungry and desiring something to eat. The fig tree, it seems, had signs of life, being clothed with leaves, but it was fruitless, and Jesus said unto it: "Let there be no frnit from thee henceforth forever," and the tree immediately whithered. This was a parable in action—in a deed.

It was not simply to manifest His power before His disciples that He caused the barren fig tree to wither, but His purpose on doubt was to teach a deep spiritual lesson—that the end of a barren or fruitless life was condemnation. At this season, appropriately termed "the fall of the year," when the whithered leaves are falling to the earth and we are treading upon them, it is a good time to reflect upon the meaning of this parable. Leaves may well stand for outward profession of religion. A tree that bears leaves, even, is not dead, but its life is not directed to the highest purpose. The tree which is intended for fruit, but bears only leaves, is a failure. The writer has a beautiful, vigorous, rapidly-growing pear tree in his yard, which bears a rich crop of leaves each year and its branches are graceful and full of sap, but it has one fatal defect—it produces no pears. "Nothing but leaves" is the record which it makes every year. There are professed Christians who are orthodox in their beliefs, correct in their theories, faultless in their outward morality, but, nevertheless, fail in the one essential quality of fruitfulness, but this is a fatal defect.

What a glorious revolution it would bring about in the church if all of its members who have confessed the name of Christ should manifest the fruit of the Spirit in their lives! This is what God wishes to bring about. "In this is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." It is not enough that we bear some fruit. We should bear all the fruit that we are capable of bearing. We should not be contented with doing good in the world, but should strive to do all the good within our power. It is for this reason that the Father, who is the husbandman, pruneth us, that we bear more fruit.

We need hardly say that the fruit which Christ expects His disciples to bear is the fruit of pure lives, good deeds, kind words. It is the fruit of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, temperence, meekness and patience. It is easy, therefore, for us to test our own lives and know whether there is anything in them but leaves or not.

The passage cited from John teaches us how this fruitfulness is to be secured. "He that abideth in me and I in him, the same beareth much fruit; for apart from me ye can do nothing." Here is the secret of a fruitful life—union with Christ. A branch can not bear fruit of itself except it be united with the vine. Jesus Christ is the "true vine" and all the branches that bear fruit must be united with Him. But to be united with Christ means that we are not only to believe in Him, but to walk in Him and maintain close fellowship with Him.

Let us see to it, then, that our lives possess something more than mere profession, if we would escape the condemnation of Christ. Let us ask ourselves what fruit we are bearing that will glorify God in the eyes of our fellowmen; so shall we be Disciples of Christ indeed.

PRAYER.

O Lord, Thou art the true vine and we trust we are branches in Thee, and bearing some fruit to the praise of Thy name and the good of our fellowmen. And yet we confess, as we review our lives, that we have not borne as much fruit as we should have done in view of all Thou has done for us. Forgive our barrenness, we pray Thee, and draw us into closer union with Thyself, that our lives may be more fruitful. Forbid that the verdict upon our lives should be, "Nothing but leaves!" But may we abound in good works, growing out of a renewed life, and so glorify our Father here and enjoy Him forever. For Thy name's sake. Amen!

IT is so much easier to raise your hand at a revival meeting to signify that you are a Christian, than it is to lift the same hand to do a good deed after the meeting is over.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE FIRST MISSIONS.

A. MCLEAN.

The Foreign Society was organized to preach the gospel where Christ was not already named, that it might not build upon other men's foundations. Nevertheless, the first work was done in Europe. For seven years no worker was sent to any heathen field. This was owing in part to the fact that there was no volunteers for service in the regions beyond. Within a month after the society was organized Enos Campbell was asked to go to Japan. Calvin S. Blackwell, who had offered himself for any field where his services might be needed, was told to hold himself in readiness to accompany Mr. Campbell to Japan. Neither was willing to go. J. H. Hardin offered to go to India. His family physician informed him that the health of his children required him to remain in America. At that time there was little zeal for missions in the churches, and none at all in the colleges. The Student Volunteer Movement had not been born. Young men of culture and ability gave their lives to work in other fields. Good men offered to labor in Europe; the society had to accept their services or none.

It was owing in part to this fact that Timothy Coop, a wealthy and philanthropic Englishman, appeared on the scene and promised to contribute handsomely to the support of work in his own country. He offered to give $10,000 provided the churches in the United States gave an equal amount. A little later he promised $5,000 if three new men were sent over. It was felt at the time that his offer contemplated a departure or a deflection from the original purpose of the society. It was no part of the plan of the society to do missionary work in England. Still, as the greater portion of the expense was borne by Mr. Coop, it was decided to accept his offer.

The first work done by a representative of the society was done in Southampton, England. Henry S. Earl was going to that city at his own charges in any event. It was thought by him and by others that it would be well for him to go in connection with the society. He was promised no definite support. For a time he received only a nominal sum. The society gradually increased its grant to him till it paid him a full salary. In three years he spent $5,000 of his own funds in establishing a church in Southampton. His preaching captured the city. He reported that many captains, ship officers and crews of ships from India, China, Japan, Africa, the West Indies, France, Italy, Spain, Norway and America, when in port, attended the services, and thus the truth was spread abroad and, no doubt, in many cases bore fruit after many days. Mr. Earl's services began in February, 1876. M. D. Todd began a work in Chester in 1878. The same year W. T. Moore went to Southport. Henry Exley went to Tranmere in 1879. His expenses were borne by a brother living in Mollington. The annual report for 1879 stated that the English mission had been planted to focalize, not to monopolize our energies. It was believed that having been sustained by the society from one to four years, that mission should and soon would be self-sustaining. "While we appreciate highly the advantages of the fields now occupied and favor a most tenacious hold on them, we deem it just and proper to urge upon our evangelists in England to give attention, as they have not yet done, to providing a support for their labors at home, so that being rapidly relieved of our obligations toward them, we may the more promptly and extensively devote our means, according to our original purpose, to the needy fields of Africa and Asia." The officers of the society felt that the time had come when we ought to have missionaries along the course of the Nile and in the crowded cities and villages of China and Japan.

While this was the feeling of the society the force in England was steadily increased. Thus, when W. T. Moore left Southport for Liverpool, J. L. Richardson was sent to fill the vacancy. M. D. Todd took the work in Liverpool, W. T. Moore having gone to London. J. M. Van Horn was sent to Chester to take the place left vacant by the transfer of Mr. Todd to Liverpool. The following have been employed since: A. Martin, to work in Birkenhead; W. H. C. Newington, to labor in Liverpool; B. H. Hayden, for Ingleton and Bishopsfield; A. J. L. Glidden, for Cheltenham; W. Durban, for Fulham; George Brooks, for Brixton; Samuel McBride, as general evangelist; T. R. Hodkinson, for Rotherhithe; J. E. Powell, for Southampton, H. S. Earl having gone from that point first to Cheltenham and afterward to Liverpool; F. W. Troy, first for Cheltenham and then Gloucester, and last for Liverpool, H. S. Earl having returned home; J. J. Haley, for Birkenhead, J. M. Van Horn having resigned to come to America; T. S. Buckingham, for Cheltenham. On the resignation of Mr. Buckingham, E. H. Spring and W. E. Hogg were employed to take the work at Cheltenham and Gloucester. In the year 1892 George T. Walden, of Melbourne, Australia, succeeded W. T. Moore at the West London Tabernacle, Mr. Moore having resigned to give his entire time to the Christian Commonwealth. The next year J. E. Powell left Southampton for America. Later on, Eli Brearley succeeded W. E. Hogg at Cheltenham, and afterwards took charge at Birkenhead when J. J. Haley resigned. The increase in the force in England was owing chiefly to the appeals and to the generosity of Timothy Coop and his two sons. They contributed largely to the society directly, and still more largely indirectly. It was their desire that the society should select the men and direct their labors. In a conference with Mr. Coop in 1884 he stated that the property owned by the society in England was worth $83,000, and that that was more than the society had spent in England up to that time. The work having been begun it could not be abandoned. It had to be vigorously prosecuted. At the present time work is carried on at fifteen different points. The workers are now as follows: W. Durban, Hornsey; H. A. McKenzie, Tasso; E. M. Todd, West London Tabernacle; Eli Brearley, Birkenhead; M. A. Collins, Chester; J. H. Bicknell, Liverpool; Alfred Johnson, Southport; T. H. Bates, Cheltenham; E. H. Spring, Gloucester; J. H. Versey, Lancaster, and George Rapkin, Margate. The membership is 2,412. The men sent to England and the men employed there have labored faithfully. They did what they could. The expectation that the churches planted would be self-supporting in four years has not been realized. Of those sent to England, J. L. Richardson and M. D. Todd and Mary Bishop Moore have gone to their long home. Since 1893 the work in England has been managed by an English committee. The society makes an annual grant and the English committee distributes it.

The Danish mission was opened in June, 1876. Dr. Holck, the pioneer, was born and educated in Jutland. He came to America and practiced medicine in Cincinnati. After uniting with the Central Christian Church, he asked to be sent to Denmark as a missionary. The committee recognized in him a man of great faith, earnest piety and one endowed with superior intellectual attainments, and appointed him. He gave up a growing and lucrative practice and went. He found many difficulties in the way. The chief among these was the want of faith on the part of the people in the Word of God. He found that the plea for "the Bible and the Bible alone" was about the most difficult that could be made, since the people seemed to be willing to accept almost any other kind of religion rather than that taught in the Scriptures. Dr. Holck has done a good work in Copenhagen. The congregation numbers nearly two hundred. The building there cost $22,000 and is worth more than it cost. It is the best Dissenting house of worship in the city. It is well located and arranged. Dr. Holck has also done a fine work in Norway. There are in Norway twenty congregations. Ten of these have their own houses. These are neither large nor splendid, but they are comfortable and convenient. A little over a year ago a church was organized at Malmo, Sweden. In 1885 O. C. Mikkelsen was sent from this country to aid in the mission. Mr. Mikkelsen is a Dane. He attended Oskaloosa College for two terms, and the College of the Bible for two years. He has charge of the Second Church in Copenhagen. Julius Cramer preaches in Malmo. He was born in Schleswig. He took the English Bible course in Drake University and returned to preach the gospel to his kindred and countrymen. For two years R. P. Andersen has been the minister in charge of the First Church in Copenhagen. In Scandinavia there are about 1,200 church members in all. Their great need is that of competent men to preach to them. They have five evangelists; they need men of culture and consecration, who can serve them acceptably as settled ministers. For ten years Dr. Holck has received no salary.

Not only so, but he gives no less than $1,000 a year to assist the mission. He is of the opinion that with $10,000 a year he could take all Scandinavia for New Testament Christianity.

A mission was opened in Paris, France, in February, 1878. Jules De Launay and wife were the founders. Monsieur De Launay was a Parisian by birth. He was educated for the priesthood of the Roman Catholic Church. He spent several years in study in Rome, giving particular attention to the catacombs. Renouncing Catholicism, he came to America. He was baptized by a Baptist minister near Providence, R. I. Subsequently he moved to Cincinnati. While there he united with the Central Christian Church. Madame De Launay was an English woman and belonged at one time to the Church of England. She united with the Central Christian Church at the same time as her husband. They volunteered for a mission to France. The society did not ask them to go. They said, "Send us, and by the grace of God we will carry the primitive gospel to the perishing millions of France." The committee became deeply interested in the proposed mission; they thought they saw in their offer a providential opening for a grand work. They knew that France was just then passing through a transition state, both politically and religiously, and they knew, furthermore, that such a time was highly propitious for the introduction of our plea. Monsieur and Madame De Launay made a tour through several states in the interests of the new mission. In some churches they were received with enthusiasm, in others with indifference, and in others still with extreme coldness. The most the society could promise them was $300 in cash and whatever might be sent to the treasury especially for the French mission. It was not believed that these terms would be accepted. They were promptly and gladly accepted, and the missionaries were soon on their way to Paris. A hall was rented and public preaching began. In 1880 Miss Annie C. Crease was engaged to teach a school. The Woman's Christian Board of Missions paid her salary. E. Roque was employed for a season, but his services not being satisfactory he was dismissed. In 1886 the society resolved to discontinue the French mission on the ground that it could not be made a success, because of existing obstacles, without incurring more expense than the society could meet. Jules De Launay was a good man, but a poor financier. No matter how much was paid him he was always in debt. The committee searched for years for a suitable man to be associated with him; the search was in vain. The society decided to abandon the field.

In November, 1878, J W. McGarvey called attention to the Turkish field and to a man who would faithfully and willingly occupy it. In company with several leading men in Kentucky Professor McGarvey issued a call to those who desired the promotion of the gospel, and who honored the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, especially those of his own state, to send money and pledges to the treasurer of the Foreign Society to insure the support of G. N. Shishmanian for a term of five years. Subsequently Mr. Shishmanian made a brief tour through portions of Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York, and spoke of the providential openings in Constantinople, and excited deep interest in his struggling, worthy and beloved kinsmen. Mr. Shishmanian was born in Asia Minor of Armenian parents. He took a course of study in Dr. Hamlin's Academy on the Bosporus. After spending some time in Egypt as an interpreter he came to America. He united with the Disciples of Christ in Dallas, Texas. Soon after he entered the College of the Bible to prepare for the ministry. Mrs. Shishmanian was born in Lexington, Kentucky. Because of the growing interest in the proposed Turkish mission and because of the funds that reached the treasury in answer to the appeals made on its behalf, Mr. and Mrs. Shishmanian were appointed missionaries to Constantinople. They reached that city in the year 1879. The gospel was preached publicly and from house to house. Schools were opened and children taught. Tracts were written and carried far and near. The converts are scattered throughout the empire. Work is carried on under Mr. Shishmanian's supervision at the following places: Constantinople, Bardezag, Giol Dahl, Sevas, Zara, Antioch, Biridjek and Aleppo. Four unordained men are engaged as evangelists. There are two male and three female teachers. In the seventeen organized churches there are 434 members. In the day schools there are 567 boys and 79 girls. Mr. Shishmanian has evangelized as far east as Bitlis on the Lake of Van. He has traveled extensively throughout the empire.

In the year 1884 Dr. Garabed Kevorkian was sent to Tocat. In addition to his work at that point he superintends the stations at Haji Keni, Capou Kara, Marsivan, Checharshambeh and Aza Bajhee. In his evangelistic tours he has been in perils from robbers more than once. His labors have been seriously hindered by the civil authorities. One governor has been his steadfast friend from the first, and has done much to encourage and assist him. Later on Hohannes Karagiozian was sent to Marash, in Cilicia. He labored at that and some other points in that part of Turkey in Asia. He has not been connected with the society for several years. The Isaac Errett Memorial Chapel was erected in Smyrna. Mr. and Mrs. John Johnson have been at work there for two years. The last year Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Chapman were sent to Constantinople to be associated with Mr. and Mrs. Shishmanian. Thus far they have been giving most of their time to the study of the language. Mr. Chapman has conducted one service in English each week. He has preached and taught a Bible class through an interpreter. Mrs. Chapman teaches in the school. She is preparing to start a kindergarten.

The conversions in Turkey from the beginning number over 1,000. Of the missionaries in this field General Wallace said, "They are men who live and die in their work; it is a work of the kind that is productive of the greatest good."

The year the society was organized J. S. Lamar was invited to go to Italy, but declined. An unknown friend offered five thousand dollars for a German mission in case the society would raise four thousand. Charles Louis Loos was invited to go to Germany; for sufficient reasons he could not accept the invitation. Urgent calls came from England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland. The following were urged to go to England: B B. Tyler, Alanson Wilcox, O. A. Burgess, Thomas Munnell and Enos Campbell. W. H. Hopson was invited to go to Scotland. Francisco de Capdevilla was appointed to labor in Mexico. All he asked was for sufficient funds to pay his passage to the city of Acapulco, on the Pacific Coast. He believed that he could by teaching not only lay a broad and firm foundation for his future progress, but also immediately provide for himself the necessaries of life and sustain the preaching of the gospel. Unfortunately, it soon appeared that he had not adequately measured the extent and violence of the opposition to the preaching of the gospel in Acapulco or the difficulty of a stranger to obtain a self-supporting school there. Notwithstanding, seven baptisms soon followed and he obtained for awhile a tolerant attitude by teaching the English language and some other branches not elsewhere taught there, but being greatly disappointed in his purpose, and assured of the society's inability to furnish him even a partial support, he resigned his labors.

Through these years there was much dissatisfaction that no work was begun on heathen soil. It was felt by many that Timothy Coop and W. T. Moore had sidetracked the society, so to speak. Their appeals for the work in England were numerous and importunate. On this account the committee on new missions, in the convention of 1881, thought it necessary to set forth the true aim and work of the society. The substance of their report is as follows: We think it very important that correct and right ideas as to the true nature, character and limitations of foreign missionary work be stated, entertained and adhered to in the prosecution of the work. What is that idea? With what end in view, and for what purpose, should foreign missionary societies be established and sustained? Not to change one believer from one Protestant faith to another, but to Christianize the heathen; to make known the Christ in his saving power to those who have never heard of him, and to whom he has not been preached. It is to plant congregations of Christian believers in lands distinctively and admittedly pagan, idolatrous and heathen, and our work is foreign in the true sense only in so far as we keep this prominently in view and labor for its realization. Our great King says, "Go ye and disciple all nations." The "nations" meant then, as the word means now, the great unevangelized heathen world; the pagan races, one and all. The church's mission is the proclamation of the gospel "to every creature," preach the gospel in the regions beyond; make known the Son of God as the only Redeemer of the world, and in the greatness of his salvation to those who sit in darkness and in the region and shadow of death. It is someting, indeed, and it is well to lead to a clearer knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, those already instructed to some extent, and evangelized and committed to the Christ; but it is not strictly foreign missionary work, and should not be so termed.

The committee continued: "The work we are doing, most of it, at least, is not strictly foreign missionary work; it is not done for the Christianization of the heathen; its end is not the salvation of men and women from idolatry, with all its abominations. It is largely changing one people from one Protestant faith to another; not attacking the strongholds of Satan in heathen and idolatrous countries, which is the one object for which foreign missionary societies should exist. We seem not to have had hitherto the true idea of foreign work, or, if we had, to have departed from it largely in practice. England gives more money every year for the support of Foreign Missions than any other country on the globe. Millions of money go out of the pockets of wealthy Englishmen annually into the treasuries for the propagation of the gospel in foreign lands. To her credit be this spoken. Yet we, with but a few thousand dollars for the maintenance each year of foreign missionary work, give the greater part of that to support men in England. How absurd! Sending men to England to preach the gospel is no more foreign missionary work than would be the sending of men to Boston, or Providence, or San Francisco."

The day so long and so eagerly looked for was at hand.

ACTUAL AND FORMAL REMISSION OF SINS.

A. B. JONES.

Religion has its divine and human side. God created man, created him in his own image, placed upon him the stamp of royalty in his intellectual, moral and spiritual nature. God loves his creature man, so loved him that he gave his only begotten Son to die for him; so loved him that he sent his Son to seek and save him. God was in Christ, in his mediation and atonement, seeking to reconcile the world unto himself. God makes overtures, seeks, invites, calls, pleads, begs that man may be saved. Man on his side has sinned—all have sinned. Fallen and bankrupted, he is from a moral and spiritual point of view dependent and helpless. Hence, he can only receive, appropriate and enjoy what God offers him.

Christianity has its personal and its governmental phase. God is a person and man is a person, and they are personally related. Each has his own personal thoughts, affections and volitions. God feels personally wounded and offended over the waywardness of man, and man, when convicted, feels humiliated and abandoned, conscience-stricken and grieved; while God, by the inherent force of his moral nature, "will not despise the broken and contrite heart;" while, in his personal feeling, the penitent believer "is not condemned," "shall not be ashamed," because he is forgiven, yet God desires to guide and govern man as well as forgive him. Had there been but one man I suppose there would be no established church, with appointments and ordinances for his government. Men in the aggregate must be governed by an organized effort, hence the church and its ordinances. Hence, while on the personal side of Christianity God actually forgives on the ground of faith, yet, on the governmental side, he formally forgives on the ground of baptism. Submission to this act of obedience was not intended to have and in the nature of the case cannot have any influence on God, but was designed to be helpful to the man receiving it, and to those witnessing it, and in a general way to influence and benefit the world at large.

The Word of God presents to us also a moral and a legal view of our religious life. There are matters pertaining to the inner life and the heart, and matters pertaining to the outer life and conduct. Faith and repentance are moral forces, and co-ordinate factors working together in the human understanding and affections. They involve each other. Where there is gospel repentance there is gospel faith, and where there is gospel faith there is gospel repentance. But neither one, nor both together, involve baptism. Baptism belongs to a different category. It is an outward act, performed by one man on another. It is a matter of law, a legal appointment, a formal thing.

The faith of the gospel puts a man in his normal moral relations with God, while baptism puts him in proper legal relations with him. This faith secures the actual, personal forgiveness of God, while baptism secures the legal, formal forgiveness.

The New Testament opens to us likewise a parental and a filial aspect of our holy religion. God is represented to us as a tender, loving, sympathizing, forbearing and forgiving Father. We are represented as erring, wandering, willful children, whom he seeks to win back to filial affection. Our Father loves us in spite of our sins, and when his "goodness leads us to repentance" our Father forgives us. Whether it be our earthly or our heavenly father, this is true.

I have said these things at the expense of some repetition.

Alexander Campbell wrote very extensively. In his day a condition of things obtained in religious society that he felt needed rebuke and reformation. His excoriations of existing evils have confused some people and disabled them to distinguish between his condemnation of the abuse of a thing and the thing itself. Consequently, Mr. Campbell has been quoted pro and con on almost every religious subject that he discussed. Different schools of religious thought have sprung up in our ranks from time to time, all confidently quoting Mr. Campbell as advocating their views. He has been quoted against missionary societies because he criticised the methods of the societies of his day. He has been quoted as against a supported ministry of the church because he criticised men that were seeking the fleece rather than the flock. He has been quoted as a "Word-alone" man because he sought to honor the Word of God by putting it in its proper place in the administration of religion. He has been quoted as a legalist because he condemned the neglect of the positive institutions of the church, and sought to restore the ordinances of religion to their scriptural position in the kingdom of heaven. Nor can it be denied that he uttered things all along these lines which, taken apart from the general body of his writings and considered without reference to the circumstances that called forth his utterances, will bear the interpretations placed on them. But Mr. Campbell was no anti-missionary man, nor anti-society man; nor was he opposed to a pure ministry properly appreciated and properly supported by the church. He was no "Word-alone" man, nor was he a legalist. The breadth and compass of his mind and nature and culture and spiritual insight were too great and too grand for crotchets like these. But more of these matters as we proceed.

REPLY TO BRO. BRINEY.

In answering Bro. Briney's article in CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Sept. 21 I will say:

1. That while I "attempted to muster Mr. Campbell's influence," he attempted to "muster" Alexander Campbell, John Smith, D. W. Pritchett, J. T. Johnson, S. E. Jones, D. R. Lucas, J. S. Sweeney—seven to one!

2. He says that in Mr. Campbell's debate with Rice in 1847 "there is no hint" that he held to the distinction between actual and formal remission, which he advocated in his debate with McCalla in 1823. Let us see about this. On page 439 in speaking of Paul's sins being "washed away" in baptism he says, "Neither Paul's faith nor his repentance had washed away his sins, in the sense of the precept of the Messiah." Now I claim that here is the "hint" that Bro. B. denies. In his debate with McCalla Mr. Campbell says, "When Paul was baptized, he must have believed that his sins were washed away in some sense that they were not before. For, if his sins had been already, in every sense washed away, Ananias' address would have led him into a mistaken view," etc. In his debates on the subject did Bro. B. ever take the precaution to say we receive remission of sins in baptism "in a sense?" I venture to say no. He swallows the baptismal remission "worm" whole, without batting his eye. And herein lies a difference between Bro. B. and Mr. Campbell, and a difference between Bro. B. and Christ and the apostles as well.

Another "hint" in his debate with Mr. Rice on this subject is found in the fact that Mr. Campbell throughout claimed that he stood side by side, in regard to this matter, with the great leaders and fathers and creeds of Christendom, and that the American churches had, through undue influences, retrograded and degenerated in the direction of the non-essentiality of baptism. Hear him. Page 471 he says:

"Let it be remembered, then, that in addition to the arguments offered from the Scriptures we have all the Greek and Latin fathers, without an exception, the two great founders of Protestantism, the Westminster divines and the Scotch Confession of Faith, down to the present century. The present century is really retrograding in the understanding and veneration of the ordinances, both of the communion and of the right of initiation. America is behind the age, behind Christendom, on this subject."

Now here Mr. Campbell claims to stand with those who hold to this distinction between actual and formal remission, and this is certainly a "hint" that he stands there himself.

But some men can't "take a hint" unless it punches them right between the eyes. So I will now give one of this sort. Page 473 Mr. Campbell says:

"Some twenty years ago, when preparing for a debate with Mr. McCalla, I put myself under special instruction of four evangelists, and one Paul, of distinguished apostolic rank and dignity. I had for some time before that discussion been often impressed with such passages as Acts 2:38; and that providential call to discuss the subject with Mr. McCalla compelled me to decide the matter to my entire satisfaction. . . . I came to a conclusion, alleged in that debate, and proved only by the Bible,'' etc.

Here Mr. Campbell reaffirms his position in the McCalla debate.

And then, on page 505, he announces boldly that he has not changed his mind on the subject. He says:

''The gentleman has sought to entangle this subject by making out inconsistencies between my present views and my former writings. . . . One thing I can say, in all conscience, that I feel myself prepared to sustain every prominent view that I ever published on the subject of the Christian religion.''

Other "hints" will be forthcoming when needed.

3. Bro. B. gives several quotations from Mr. Campbell's writings on this subject, as Mr. Rice did, with a view, as Mr. Campbell alleged, to "entangle the subject."

I will examine the two strongest of these as samples. Speaking of the eunuch's baptism he says, "His sins had been actually forgiven in the act of immersion." Well, I say the same thing now—actually forgiven in the act of immersion, by which I mean that God actually granted to the eunuch in his baptism, the formal remission of his sins. Mr. Campbell was showing that the Scriptures teach that baptism is for the remission of sins, as he was in his debate with Rice, and didn't choose at that time to make the distinction between what he called "real and formal remission."

Again, Bro. B. quotes Mr. Campbell as saying that Peter "made repentance or reformation and immersion equally necessary to forgiveness." And I say the same thing. Repentance brings a man into satisfactory moral relations with God and secures actual remission, and baptism brings him into satisfactory legal relations and secures formal remission in its full and complete scriptural sense. The other quotations given by Bro. B. from Mr. Campbell are more easily disposed of than these.

4. Bro. B. says, "In the McCalla debate Mr. Campbell was merely in the twilight of the knowledge of the plan of salvation, . . . a rudimentary condition, out of which some brethren seem not to have been led yet."

Bro. B.'s views on remission of sins are very familiar to me. I held to them in the earlier years of my ministry; but with increasing years, and, as I think with increasing wisdom from the study of divine truth, I grew away from that "rudimentary condition" out of which "some brethren seem not to have" vitality enough to grow. I showed in my former article by quotations from Mr. Campbell's writings up to within a few years of his death that he still held to baptism for the formal remission of sins. And I show in this article that he declares not to have changed his views.

5. Bro. B. says again, "I do object to establishing a system of philosophy upon one's idea of the fitness of things, and then bending the Scriptures and drawing out fine-spun distinctions to suit such philosophy." So do I. But suppose a man builds an argument jointly on philosophy and Scripture an—argument imbedded in human nature as revealed in the Word of God, an argument interlaced and supported by scriptural proofs sanctioned "by the consensus of Christian scholarship"—what then? This is what I claim to have done; and I claim furthermore that Bro. B. has not even attempted a reply to the argument. And I claim still further that neither he nor any other man will ever answer the argument in my first article on "Actual and Formal Remission of Sins."

6. Bro. B.'s effort to extricate himself from the "entanglement" of his unphilosophical reasoning on cause and effect only draws the cord tighter around him. I stated in my first article that repentance in the sinner is a "moral cause" that produces compassion and forgiveness in the Father's heart. Bro. B. says this robs God of all "choice" in the matter, and puts him under an "inexorable law of necessity." Now had I said without qualification that repentance is a cause that produces the effect of forgiveness I would still be sustained by the best usage and authorities on the subject. Cause and effect have a meaning in physics and other meanings in metaphysics. And the average man knows from the nature of the subject you are discussing in what sense you use the terms, and in which case the "law of necestity" applies. But in this case Bro. B. is without excuse. I was careful to say "moral cause." Everybody knows there can be no moral element in anything without "choice" and freedom. And this knocks all that he has said of cause and effect into "smithereens." Will some of Bro. B.'s friends please wake him up? "Homer sometimes nods."

7. Bro. B. inquires, "If the remission of sins is an act of the mind of God, how can it be a psychological fact, involving psychological experience in the mind of man." Remission of sins implies and involves repentance as a necessary condition, and repentance is an experience in the mind of man. I have never said that remission of sins is a "psychological experience in the mind of man." The "scrap doctor" practice here is unwarranted and might be appropriately suspended.

8. The declaration of Peter to Cornelius is again referred to by Bro. B. Here it is: "To him give all the prophets witness that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." Bro. B. insists that the phrase "through his name" here includes baptism, or it is "superfluous" and "meaningless." Well, suppose it is superfluous and gives no additional meaning to the statement of Peter. There are many superfluities in the Bible and out of it, many in Bro. B.'s writings and in mine. Every person has his own style of saying things. When the Savior says, "Verily, verily I say unto you"—that is superfluous, and adds no meaning to what follows. But the critical scholarship of the world repudiates Bro. B.'s "chimerical" notion that this phrase is either "superfluous" or a vest pocket in Peter's speech for baptism.

"Through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins"—through Christ, through his atoning love and sacrificial death, through his name, Jesus, Savior, whosoever believeth in him, trusteth in him (which implies repentance as a cognate moral experience, but does not thus imply baptism), shall receive from the Father forgiveness of sins.

Bro. B. says, "Acts 10:43 simply teaches that remission of sins depends wholly upon the gospel, and not upon any part of the law of Moses." But Peter was here preaching to the Gentiles and there was no point in his talking to them about the "law of Moses." Talk about "bending the Scriptures" to support your theories!

A similar declaration to the above of Peter is made by Paul in Acts 13:38: "Through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins, and by him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." Here we have the phrase "through this man" instead of "through his name" as Peter puts it. Is that a "meaningless appendage," too, or is it "superfluous?"

Then hear the words of Christ: "He that believeth not is condemned already because he hath nor believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God"—because he hath not trusted in his name as Christ Jesus, the anointed Savior, believed in him, in his official capacity as Redeemer. But the same passage (John 3:18) says, "He that believeth on him is not condemned." If he is not condemned, then he is justified, forgiven. "Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed." Why not ashamed? Because he is forgiven. Why forgiven? Because he believeth on the name of Jesus. Thus the subject is presented to us both from a negative and positive view, and both views teach that God grants actual remission on the ground of faith in his Son.

The principle of "inductive reasoning" is wise and right, if wisely and rightly applied; otherwise it is otherwise. You must apply it to the same category of things. If you apply it to belief or faith and then group all the passages together in which the subject is mentioned you will become confused.

"Many believed on him, yet they would not confess him for fear of the Pharisees, for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." This is not the same kind of faith of which Paul speaks when he says, "I know whom I have believed." So we must distinguish between actual and formal remission. Then make our induction of passages relating to actual and another induction of those referring to formal remission, and we will find the former to require the internal, moral conditions of faith and repentance; and, when only one of these moral conditions are given as necessary to the moral result of actual remission, the other is "implied." When we make our induction of the passages referring to formal remission, we will find the outward, legal act of baptism to appear. Now we can only establish these categories by the use of a "sound philosophy." In conclusion on this point I reaffirm that B. W. Johnson's notes on Acts 10:43 and the highest critical authorities of the world are with me on this subject and against Bro. B.

9. In the next place we have a gun fired at long range from Morro Castle (Acts 2:38): "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." Yes, they are both to the "same end," remission of sins. As Peter commanded them to "repent," evidently they had not received actual remission; and as he commanded them to be baptized, they had not received formal remission. Hence he commanded them to repent and be baptized that they might receive both, that they might be forgiven in a full and complete sense. The "rules of grammar and the principles of exegesis" remain intact, and nothing is "broken into smithereens" but Bro. B.'s mechanical ideas of religion.

Bro. B. asks, "If the people addressed received actual remission before baptism, why was the gift of the Holy Spirit deferred till after baptism?"

In reply I will ask, If Cornelius did not receive actual remission before baptism, why was the Holy Spirit given to him before his baptism? My ideas of rpligion are not mechanical. I think God enters into sympathy and fellowship, through the Holy Spirit, with every soul when he is in the proper moral condition to receive and enjoy that fellowship without regard to baptism.

10. We dispose of John 3:5 in the same way. "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." This is substantially the same thing as "repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." The man born of water and the Spirit enters normally and fully, actually and formally, "into the kingdom of God," "into Christ," into the church, "into remission of sins." When truly converted he is actually in the kingdom, and the kingdom is actually in him. "The kingdom of God is within you." He is where all the godly people are who have not been immersed. When he is born of water—baptized—he is fully and formally in the kingdom. Bro. B.'s suggestion about an "actual and formal kingdom" is not a bad one. And all this is "sound philosophy."

11. Now listen to Bro. B.'s conclusion:

"If this philosophy is to be accepted we should make a polite bow to the sectarian world, offer a profound apology for our former conduct, take it all back and be good! Then, when another modern philosophy concerning the work of the Holy Spirit is accepted there will not be much left of the Reformation but the dry bones of a lifeless skeleton."

What an idea some men have of the "Reformation"—baptism for the actual remission of sins and the Word alone; no Holy Spirit in the church since the apostolic age! Without these legalistic dogmas, "we have been simply beating the air," and "there will not be much left of the Reformation but the dry bones of a lifeless skeleton!!" With these two items for cardinal principles, and their logical allies, no divine providence and no efficacy in prayer, we would have nothing more than "the dry bones of a lifeless skeleton"—a theological system with religion left out!

Liberty, Mo.

A TRUE DISCIPLESHIP.

J. M. LOWE.

A Christian life rests upon a heart condition, and must be interpreted in terms of motive. This may be termed the subjective side of a spiritual life—the inner side. So far as the outward life reflects the inner motive, so far is religion genuine. If motive is not related to deed as cause to effect, that is, if motive leads one way and action moves in the opposite direction the man is a hypocrite. True life flows outward from within.

As the material universe is the expression of the thought of God, and the world of art, science, literature and mechanics are expressions of the thought of man, so is religion the outflow, the upward striving of the human heart. Religion and Christianity complement and supplement each other; religion looks upward from the earth Christianity looks down from heaven. Religion is the universal prayer of humanity, Christianity is the answer to that prayer. All people are religious, for religion is purely human. Religion consists of aspirations, reflections and meditations concerning the divine. When Christianity fills these longings and supplies food for these meditations, religion becomes Christian.

Religion and Christianity are united in this text: "Then said Jesus to those Jews which had believed him, If ye abide in my word, then are ye truly my disciples" (Jno. 8:31, R. V.). This suggests the fixed relation between Jesus and his disciples. The branch is assured of its life only by abiding in the vine. The word abide is happily used in this connection. It suggests a natural, willing and fruitful relation. It is also noteworthy that the vine is fruitful only through the branches. Jesus cannot save the world without the assistance of his disciples. "Jesus alone can save the world, but Jesus cannot save the world alone." The branch my be physically joined to the vine and not partake of its life. It is cast forth and burned. It is as natural for the dead branch to fall away from the vine as for the living branch to cling to it. Nothing but life can unite vine and branch, disciple and Lord. Say what you please about forms and ceremonies and ordinances, if they express not this life they are nothing. Would that this text were written across the sky in letters of flaming fire: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

As the abiding branch possesses the vine life, so he that abides in Christ is a disciple indeed. This must be so, for there is but one life, and that is the Christ-life. He who is not in Christ does not live; he exists merely. If he does nothing but eat, sleep and keep himself comfortable, he has purely and only an animal existence. Animals do these things, and do them well—better than some men, comparing animal things with animal. This is not meant to compliment sub-human creation nor to insult man, the prince of animals. It is the statement of a simple fact. Man is identified, as to his body, with the animal kingdom. If he lives to satisfy his body only, therefore, what is he but an animal? He may use his mind to gratify his bodily wants; so does the animal. He may dwell in a palace, dine upon luxurious diet, and clothe himself elegantly, yet he has but a magnificent animal existence. He may parade about the world, see all that is to be seen, and revel in every pleasure that flesh is heir to; he is still but a well-fed, well-satisfied animal. Bear in mind that he who has to roam about the world, seek the table of feasting and linger in scenes of meaningless mirth to enjoy himself has never drank at the fountain of life. How fleeting are the pleasures of the body! Eat and drink, and soon you must eat and drink again. Listen to a strain of music, and you long to hear a sweeter. Drink deep of the cup of pleasure, and soon you are thirsty again. "But whoso drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but it shall be in him a well of water springing up in everlasting life." In the Christian's life a fountain of living water is playing. With the Christian, life is a blissful, blessed consciousness which never dies. With the non-Christian, life is a succession of pleasures, between which he is in the desert of discontent.

One stays, the other abides. One exists, the other lives. One remains the same, the other grows into a more wonderful life. One goes from pleasure to pleasure, and dies in satiety and disgust, the other increases from victory to victory, and blooms into immortal beauty. I think it is clear that the Christ-life is the only life, and that life and existence are two vastly different things. Life is internal; existence is external. Life draws its being from within; existence depends upon outward things. One grows, the other decays. One lives, the other dies.

Is it, therefore, not the supreme end of our being to strive after this higher life? Is it not a charming thought, and is not the outlook delightful? Looking out from this view-point life is resplendent with a beauty "fairer than morning and lovelier than daylight." The clouds depart, the mists lift, and there rises upon the vision a prospect almost too good to be true; and yet too glorious to be false. As we travel on into this paradise of promise, we hear the last echoe of the last wail of woe. The graves are left behind, empty now, for they who slept therein have heard his voice and are with us in the way. The sighs and moans and tears and groans of earth are gone with its griefs and sorrows. Doubt and despair, with all their train, are behind us. Before us there is nothing but beauty and wonder and glory and God.

Des Moines, Ia.

Montaigue used to say: "As for me, if my neighbor did something remarkable, I would cite him as willingly as I would one of the Seven Wise Men of Greece. It is only the little geniuses who need great names in order to admire the virtue. If an action is not fine of itself, neither the name of Epaminondas or of Alexander or of Cæsar will make it pass for fine; if a thought is false, the name of Seneca or Plato will not render it just." We miss a great deal of the charm and pleasure of life by not recognizing this. Those who think everything valuable or authoritative was in the past do not understand how God is in the world to-day, and they mistake the shell for the substance.

The rush for an empty pulpit that pays well is a disgrace. In some cases it is worse than men scuffling for a political job. It has been said for a long time that no longer in politics does the place seek the man, and it is getting to be the same thing in the church. A secular paper says: "The pulpit of the First Baptist Church, of Phœnixville, Pa., became vacant about three months ago, and since the last pastor resigned eighty preachers from all parts of the United States have made application for the vacant pastorate. The church pays a salary of $1,000 a year, with a house." This is an alarming condition and fearful in its consequences. Until the ministry is characterized by self denial and a large sacrifice there is little hope of advancing the religion of Jesus, which was laid in poverty and sacrifice. Jesus looked for the hard places. We have had but little of this pulpit-seeking among our own brethren, and may God always keep us free from it. We have the best ministry in the world to-day, and may it always be such.—Christian Tribune.

Our Budget.

—God is with his people.

—The emotional power of the Jubilee Convention is inexpressible.

—The returning delegates from the Jubilee Convention will be as firebrands scattered throughout the country.

—New impulses, new life and larger outpourings of wealth for Christian uses wil be some of the results of the Jubilee Convention.

—The assistant editor of this paper preached to an intelligent, attentive audience at West End Christian Church, this city, on last Sunday morning.

—Twenty-four Mormon missionaries have established headquarters in this city for a religious campaign in the interest of Mormonism. They will preach, scatter literature and do house-to-house work. They are at their own expense and intend to remain all winter or a year if necessary. The press reports them non-committal on polygamy.

—If criticism upon co-operative efforts to extend Christ's kingdom in the world in press or pulpit were even occasionally accompanied by a suggestion whereby the work might otherwise be accomplished and an exhortation to see that it was otherwise accomplished, there would be much less margin left for suspecting the spirit and purpose of the critic.

—The Chicago Israelite, in commenting upon the railroad already in existence from Joppa to Jerusalem, terminating in or near the valley of Gehenna, and the newly proposed railroad through the Euphrates Valley to the Persian Gulf, running through the reputed site of the Garden of Eden, facetiously says: "So we now have heaven and hell on earth, all accessible by the same locomotive." We are somewhat surprised that a city editor, especially of Chicago, should think a railroad to hell either a new or strange thing.

—The statistical report of G. A. Hoffmann for the year ending Oct. 1, 1899, afford food for reflection. The report presents our present status thus: Value of church property, $18,256,761; given for missions for the year ending Oct. 1, $555,401; educational and benevolences, $126,050; total for all purposee for the year, $5,456,451; present membership, 1,118,398. The total amount of money raised by the national societies for the year 1898 was $431,386.67. Gain this year over last on the whole amount, $124,014.33. The gain in the value of church property is placed at $1,059,264. The total membership in the United States last year was given as 1,078,558, or a gain of 39,840. We do not know whether the above number includes the colored churches; if not, then the gain this year has been 111,838. More light, however, is needed before we shall know that we have had the desired 100,000 souls for Christ this year.

—Probably at no time in the world's history has the kaleidoscope of time thrown up sensational events in more rapid succession than during the past few years. If we begin at the destruction of the Maine in Havana Harbor, we may mention the victory of Dewey in Manila Bay, the battle of San Juan in Cuba, the destruction of Cervera's fleet off Santiago, Cuba, the Aguinaldo insurrection, the peace commission in Paris, the return of Captain Dreyfus to France and his second trial in Rennes, the riots of Paris, the Fashoda incident in Africa, the return of Marchand and Kitchener, the heroes of France and England, to their respective national capitals, and now the Transvaal war with British troops in South Africa. These events have been a continual feast for the sensational papers, and a constant agitation of the public mind. Hardly has one event disappeared until another happened, so that the world to-day is in a state of intellectual unrest. Everybody is wondering what is to happen next.

—President McKinley has shown a particular interest in children in his presidential tours and on frequent occasions he has addressed them. There is something beautiful and significant in the sight of the chief magistrate of a nation talking to children.

—A Roman Catholic bishop lecturing in a Protestant university is an unusual thing, at least in Protestant America; and yet such an event recently occurred in this country. On the occasion of the 30th quarterly convocation of the University of Chicago Bishop Spauiding, of Peoria, Ill., by invitation, delivered the address. This is the first event of this kind in the history of the Chicago University and will have the influence to at least add to President Harper's reputation for catholicity and liberality in the religious affairs of the university. Bishop Spauldlng's topic was "The University and the Teacher," and it is said to have been an eloquent address, and yet such an address from a man who is part and parcel of a system that opposes popular education delivered from the platform of a Protestant university is something of an anomaly, from which neither President Harper nor Bishop Spaulding will hardly escape criticism from their respective theological guardians.

—Dr. De Costa, a prominent clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, under the diocese of Bishop Potter, of New York, seems to have become offended at the acceptance of Dr. Briggs into the fellowship of the church and has resigned and Bishop Potter has met the resignation with a prompt acceptance. There is a hint in the public reports to the effect that Dr. De Costa contemplates a home in the Roman Catholic faith, and that he is already under the instruction of Jesuit fathers. If so it is more probable that the cause of his resignation lies in this latter statement, that he is more of a Roman Catholic than a Protestant in his religious convictions.

—The Sunday question occupied the attention of the Protestant Episcopal Congress in St. Paul last week on its second day's sessions, in which the opinion was expressed that "so-called Sunday legislation should not be enacted or enforced on religious grounds any more than legislation concerning theft or murder. We give up our strength when we strive to make men religious by force." This seems ta be the attitude that all religious bodies must take on this question. Sunday legislation must rest upon moral rather than religious grounds—especially sectarian grounds. But that is no reason why we should not have both a legal and a truly religious Sunday in America. The morals of the country and the spirituality of the churches demand it.

—Mrs. M. H. Younkin, of this city, departed this life on last Friday. This news will bring sadness to many hearts, not of this city only, but in many states. Sister Younkin was known by almost the entire brotherhood because of her long and faithful work in behalf of the Christian Orphans' Home in this city. She was with the small company of women of this city upon whose hearts God moved in the conception and founding of this Christly home for the orphan. Sister Younkin was a woman who ever sympathized deeply with the unfortunate in this world, and spent years of anxious toil in her effort to bring relief to as many as possible. For several years she traveled as the representative of the Orphans' Home, pressing its claims upon the hearts of individuals, of families, of churches and of our conventions. But her health failed under the heavy burden she was carrying, and for years she has been a patient, hopeful sufferer. But rest, sweet rest, has come at last, and on few graves will sweeter tributes of memory dwell than upon that of our beloved Sister Younkin. To Dr. Younkin and the bereaved family and friends we extend our deepest sympathy. A suitable tribute to her memory will appear later.

—The contents of Christian Quarterly, new series, No. 12, out this month, are "A New Vocation," Dr. H. L. Willett; "Education and Missions," W. P. Aylsworth; "Ethical Significance of the New Commandment," W. T. Moore; "Theory or Evidence—Which?" F. M. Bruner; "Ministerial Associations of the Disciples of Christ," F. M. Green; "The Strength and Weakness of Protestantism," J. M. Lowe; William Kimbrough Pendleton," W. T. Moore; "Introductory—The Proverbs of Solomon," W. T. Moore; "Childhood and Manhood: or, The Law of Physical and Spiritual Development," W. T. Moore. Also Exegetical, Literary Reviews and Table Talks. This is a good number of the Quarterly. The articles embrace a wide range of stimulating thought.

—Business and Christianity for July-August is devoted largely to the testimonials of the good accomplished through Church Extension. With sufficient funds the same relief could be extended to every houseless church in the United States.

—The Ann Arbor Bible Chair offers to nonresidents a course of twelve studies in the life of Christ, based on the four gospels and Farrar's Life of Christ. The course may begin on the first of any month and costs but one dollar, including a copy of Farrar's Life of Christ, which alone would be an ornament to any library. For full particulars address H. D. Williams, secretary extension department.

—The funeral of Sister Younkin, of this city, was from the Central Christian Church, Sunday, at 2:30 P. M. The services were conducted by the pastor, Baxter Waters, F. O. Fannon and Dr. Dungan. The beautiful tribute to her memory was delivered by Dr. Dungan. The music was rendered by the choir of the Central Church. A special song was sung by the children of the Orphans' Home. There was a large attendance of friends, all of whom greatly esteemed Sister Younkin for her work's sake.

—J. L. Morin, Montreal, Canada, announces that he is having published a book which Dr. Chiniquy had in mind prior to his death and for which he had collected much material. The book is to be called "Forty Years in the Church of Christ." It will be a history of Dr. Chiniquy's remarkable life, bear the impress of its authority, and the thrilling events of his life. Mr. Morin is a son-in-law of Dr. Chiniquy and in a position to complete the book in a way that will be most gratifying to the hosts who have seen and heard the Doctor in his lectures.

—A wave of suicide and murder seems to have swept over the country last week. Who says that crime is not contagious? If not, there is something terribly wrong in the social and industrial domain. Perhaps both statements are true. There is certainly need for more preaching on the need of regeneration.

—We are glad to report that our police commissioners are making a successful crusade against the winerooms, poolrooms and other places of dangerous and immoral influence in this city. A morally clean city is not an impossibility, and yet it is not one of probably near future events; at least not so hopefully near as the Christian element could wish.

—Bishop Potter, of New York, who is on his way to Honolulu and probably to the Philippine Islands, went by way of St. Paul, Minn., where he attended the 19th Congress of the Protestant Episcopal Church. A unique feature of this congress was a public discussion of the question, "Does National Expansion Involve Imperialism?" in which Dr. Potter led on the affirmative side of the question. He was followed on the negative side by Dr. Clark, of Detroit, Mich. This may not be bringing politics into the pulpit, but it is dangerously near the precipice, much more so than the temperance question, which has never yet had such a hearing in so pronounced a body of ecclesiastics.

—A neatly appearing pamphlet entitled "Illinois Yearbook of the Churches of Christ" has appeared containing the minutes of the Illinois Christian Missionary, Y. P. S. C. E. and Bible-school conventions, list of Illinois churches and list of Illinois preachers. The book is prepared by J. Fred Jones, secretary, Stanford, Ill., and will be a great convenience to many persons.

—The following bit of sensible advice in the editorial columns of the Gospel Messenger, Elgin, Ill., will bear frequent repetition in this age of the world and state of grace:

A minister in Buckingham County, Va., is said to be driving some people mad by his preaching. He is setting forth a new doctrine cencerning sanctification, and has gone so far as to say that a son was taken away from his fond father because the parent had not embraced the new sanctification doctrine. The father is in jail a raving maniac. Why does not this minister preach the Word? Why does he not point the sinners to Jesus, who came to save them, and can and will cleanse them from all their sins? There is nothing in the gospel to drive people mad, but there is something in the blessed promises of God to fill their hearts with joy. There are too many preachers going around preaching misleading doctrine. They not only "lead captive silly women laden with sin," but they are making some men silly, and lead them captive too. This evil work must be counteracted by a more vigorous preaching of the gospel. We certainly ought to pray the Lord to send us more men who will preach the whole gospel.

—Let us hope that the present convention indicates the high-growth mark rather than the high-water mark of our prosperity. There should be no receding as in the case of a river from its high-water mark, but permanency as in the strength and greatness of the oak from year to year.

—On account of certain criticisms which seem to have come to the editorial ears of the Standard (Baptist) on some of its editorial and contributed articles, it in reply gives utterance to the following declaration which may be of interest to others than editors.

When a man who sets himself up as a judge of other men's orthodoxy and prides himself on stern, uncompromising condemnation of all doubtful doctrines allows himself to be abusive and sarcastic, he unconsciously displays the imperfections of his own creed. A devotion to the Bible which shows itself in attacks upon the motives and intellectual ability and moral character of those who hold differing views is a hollow mockery.

—The Interior, Oct. 5, concludes an interesting editorial on needed reforms in evangelistic methods with the following sensible advice to evangelists and churches:

Evangelism seems likely to break down by its own weight unless some reforms are promptly inaugurated by those interested. The movement needs to be stripped of its spectacular features. There might well be less thought of the Grand Stand and more of the Great White Throne. The conditions demanded before entering upon such a work ought to be much more simple than they are, involving less of machinery and more of devotion. The services of an acceptable evangelist ought to be within the reach of any average church, and not possible only by the formation of a revival syndicate. Such a movement should be marked by simplicity and self-denial throughout, and until the revival is freed from some of its present meretricious accessories its visitations are likely to be far apart and its converts scattered almost before they are numbered.

—The Herald, Columbia, Mo., published the following interesting information in relation to the religious status of the students of the University of Missouri:

Of the first 700 students enrollad church preferences were indicated by 615. The church preferences indicate church membership in most instances. Tho different churches were thus represented: Christian, 157; Methodist, 124; Presbyterian, 114; Baptist, 92; Episcopal, 30; Congregational, 13; Catholic, 12; Lutheran, 9; Jewish, 6; Church of Christ, 3; United Brethren, German Protestant, Christian Scientists, Disciples, Unitarian, Universalist, Evangelical, I. A. H. Circle, 1 each. No church preference, 85. The Herald also prints a census of the church attendance in Columbia. These are seven white churches in the city. At these on Sunday morning were present 1,190 persons. Of these 493 were men and boys and 697 women and girls. Of the university students and college girls 360 attended church Sunday morning.

—The following letter is a sample of the appreciation we are receiving on CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST editorials from many sources:

DEAR EDITORS:—I wish to say that the more I read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the more I am interested in it. Of all the good things I have seen in its columns lately one of the best is your editorial in the issue of Oct. 5 entitled, "By the Same Rule." It strikes a keynote in Christian living that should be sounded by our whole brotherhood. Let us have more such as that. It will do much for Christian living and world-wide missions.

Fraternally yours,
HORACE SIBERELL.

Pickering, Mo.

—Christian Worker, which contains a full report of the convention recently held in Lock Haven, Pa., which it claims was the best in their history, in speaking of the experiment of the pro rata division of all missionary funds in that district, says:

The result of the past year's trial of the pro rata division of all missionary offerings was so satisfactory that it was decided to continue it for another year. There is no injustice in this plan to any interest, but it is a decided gain to the work in the district and home field. Furthermore, it is a plan that is being adopted in other states and districts, and it is honorable and just to all alike. The immediate home field needs and is entitled to one-half of the missionary offerings of our churches. We recognize the needs of the American field as of equal importance with any other field, and recommend the appropriation in equal shares of 20 per cent. to each of the general societies having charge of the work in home and foreign fields, and we also recognize the importance of the Church Extension interest by giving 10 per cent. of the whole amount of the offerings of churches to that work.

—One of the things that aroused the suspicion of the people of Chicago concerning John Alexander Dowie was his peculiar financial methods. No public account seems to have ever been rendered as to funds publicly gathered for the institution. And now comes similar complaints against Rev. Dr. Simpson, the controlling factor of the Christian Alliance. On this subject Christian Work says:

By the published statements made by the Alliance, they have actually used $640,000 in mission work. Where? To whom have the payments been made? What other sums have been raised? And how have they been expended? But how have those handling these enormous funds expended them? is the question that should be answered, and answered by thorough investigation. . . . We do deprecate and condemn the utter lack of financial accountability and the secrecy observed in the expending of the enormous sums of money contributed to the Alliance. Nor will it do to invite A or B to make an investigation, although a formal investigation should be made by competent men of financial standing, representing the leading denominations. Until this is done the Alliance will have itself to blame that its financial methods are the subject of wide distrust.

—We frequently receive literature at this office bearing upon the life and character of Mr. Roberts, congressman-elect from Utah, and find that the evidence of his polygamous life is of the most abundant and convincing character. In a recent letter from Rev. Wm. R. Campbell, secretary of the Ministerial Alliance, of Salt Lake City, it is stated Mr. Roberts married all of his wives long after the law against polygamy had gone into effect, and in willful defiance of the same, and that he still defiantly recognizes his plural wives. Mr. Campbell says:

There will be abundant evidence presented to Congress to prove that Mr. Roberts has persistently defied those laws ever since he was imprisoned for this offense in 1889, and that his case has become very much aggravated since his imprisonment, because he has since that time taken an additional "wife," and because of his continued, willful violation of the solemn pledges which were made by him and the other Mormon leaders in order that they might regain what they had lost by their past defiance of the laws of the land.

Active measures should be taken in every community to prevent the seating of this man in the next assembly of our Congress. Here is the situation as told by Mr. Campbell:

If Mr. Roberts is not expelled it will not be the fault of Congress, for Congress stands ready to do the bidding of the American people, if they will only make known their wishes so that Congress may understand what they want done in this grave crisis. If Mr. Roberts is permitted to remain in Congress it will be because the moral sense of the American people has become so dull during the past few years that they no longer resent the insult offered them by the proposition to "force polygamy down the throats of the American Congress," the very body which once in response to the moral sentiment of the nation so nobly stood for the monogamous home, which is the nursery of liberty and the corner stone of our republican institutions. If Mr. Roberts is permitted to remain in Congress, and we fail to get a constitutional amendment prohibiting the practice of polygamy, this anti-American institution will fasten itself upon this intermountain region, whence it will ultimately spread throughout the country, until some day the American people will have to rise in their might and crush it in order to prevent this nation from crumbling into dust. In the meantime, thousands of hearts will be broken and multitudes of souls will be sacrifieed to the demon of deified lust, while the very name of this fair land will come very near becoming a reproach in the eyes of the civilized world. The developments in the Dreyfus case have demonstrated that no nation in this day can afford to run counter to the moral conscience of Christendom.

A public discussion will begin at 10 A. M., Tuesday, Nov. 7, in Alma, Ill., between Clark Braden, President of Southern Illinois Christian College, and I. N. White, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—the Josephite wing of Mormonism. Issues: "Was Joseph Smith a Prophet of God?" "Are the Churches of Christ Scriptural Churches?"

Homer T. Wilson's lecture on "America's Uncrowned Queen," at the Second Christian Church, this city, on last Wednesday evening is pronounced one of the most entertaining and eloquent lectures heard in this city. It was a grand plea for or in behalf of the noble women of America. The lecture was a model of pathos, wit, eloquence and information. There is no question about Bro. Wilson's ability to entertain any audience in America on this theme, and there can be no mistake on the part of any community securing this lecture.

From the Christian Worker we learn that J. S. Myers, pastor of the First Christian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., after returning home from the Lock Haven convention, met with a serious and painful accident—the fracture of a bone in his right arm and tearing loose of the ligaments. Bro. Myers has our sympathy in this accident, which aside from the pain and disability to work, for a season, may keep him from the Jubilee Convention, to which he was an elected messenger by the Lock Haven convention. He was also elected president of the Eastern Pennsylvania Co-operation in said convention.

H. Jas. Crockett, Mankato, Minn., writes that he will be compelled to seek a milder climate before the rigid weather sets in; consequently, the First Church of Christ of that city will be in need of a pastor soon. They wish to hold a series of meetings, beginning the third week in November, and would like the assistance of a preacher who would remain in the work as the permanent pastor. Mankato is a beautiful city of 12,000 people. Our brethren here number about 150. They are noble and consecrated and well-equipped with a beautiful building centrally located. The city has a state normal school and a popular business college. There is no better opening in the state than is offered in that field. The congregation would like a man who is willing to labor for $600 the first year. He may be sure of an increase the second. A single man is preferred. Those wishing to apply can write to H. Jas. Crockett, the present pastor.

"A Good Name At Home

Is a Tower of Strength Abroad." This truth has been perfectly verified by the history of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which effected its first cures in Lowell, Mass., where it is made and where it still has a larger sale than all other blood purifiers. Its fame and cures and sales have spread abroad all over the world, and it is universally recognized as the best blood medicine money can buy.

C. W. B. M. Convention of Missouri.

The twentieth annaul convention of the C. W. B. M. of Missouri met in Jefferson City the 4th of October in connection with our state convention. There was present quite a representative gathering of our sisters from the different parts of the state, who enjoyed together a pleasant and profitable season. Our state president, Mrs. Alice Williams, who has been ill for several months, was given strength to be with us and to preside at the opening and closing sessions of our convention, but was not able to be out at our evening session.

We were tendered a most cordial and hearty welcome by Sister J. P. Pinkerton, and Miss Ella Lowe, of Kansas City, responded in our behalf. Our president had not been able to prepare an address, nor had she the strength to deliver one, but we enjoyed the few words she was able to speak to us. We all missed more than we can tell the faces of Sisters Johnson and Hedges, our faithful corresponding secretary and treasurer. It scarcely seemed like our Missouri convention without these two sisters, who have been serving us these past years. They were both kept away on accout of ill health, and while they both sent messages, we missed their presence and their words.

Sister Clay, who has so ably taken the work of the corresponding secretary for the past six months, presented her report which shows that we have not gained any in our contributions over last year. Sister Clay was new to our convention, but not new to the C. W. B. M. work. We all regret that she is not to remain a resident of our state that we might further profit by her labors, but she leaves us to go with her husband to another field; she will be a gain to Kentucky while a loss to us. Sister Jones presented the treasurer's report in the absence of Sister Johnson.

Miss Mollie Hughes, who is our faithful superintendent of the juniors and mission bands, gave us her report, and for the benefit of those auxiliaries who were not represented at the convention I will say that she feels that they are not giving the care and attention to the juniors that mothers should to their children. While they are supposed to be under the care and direction of the auxiliaries and we (the auxiliaries) count their money as ours, we neglect to give them the oversight and assistance that we should. Sisters, let us neglect them no longer. Mrs. Harrison followed this report with a paper on Junior Work.

Wednesday evening Miss Mattie Burgess gave us a report of her work in India. Mrs. Louise Kelley discoursed to us on The White Woman's Burden, and Bro. Errett read a paper on The Lack of Interest in Missions and Why. This paper was prepared by Sister Errett, but as she could not be present she sent it by her husband and he presented it for her.

Thursday morning we listened to the report of our state organizer, Mrs. Gilliam, talks from Mrs. M. M. Goode and Mrs. Emma Longan on the topics, The Auxiliary as the Pastor's Helper and the Pastor as a Helper to the Auxiliary. Mrs. Bantz then conducted a Model Auxiliary, showing us how to conduct our meetings, a thing in which I think many of us are quite deficient. This model auxiliary showed us that thorough preparation had been made for the meeting and that every one was ready to respond when called upon, with the part that had been assigned to her. The committees also presented their reports at the close of this session. The nominating committee found their work all the more difficult because, through illness, our president, corresponding secretary and treasurer were all unable to serve us any longer. This was greatly regretted by us all, and as our sisters are not seeking office, we were quite troubled to know just what to do; but of one thing we felt sure: the work must go on, some one would rise up to take the places of those who had served us so long and so well, and in this we were not disappointed. These sisters whom we selected to serve us during the coming year said they would rather not, but if their sisters thought they ought to accept and were willing to trust the work in their hands, they would do their best. The officers are as follows: President, Mrs. J. M. Lowe, Kansas City; vice-president, Mrs. M. M. Goode, St. Joseph; corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. G. Bantz, St. Louis; treasurer, Miss Mattie Burgess, St. Joseph; recording secretary, Mrs. Emma Longan, Kansas City.

After these officers were elected our outgoing president, Mrs. Alice Williams, called them to the platform, presented them to the audience and we joined with her in asking our Father's blessing and guidance on them in their work this coming year. Sisters, let us hold up their hands in this work. It is our work and we dare not shirk it, for we are responsible according to our ability, and they cannot bring our state to the front in this work without the hearty co-operation of each one of us.

Let us begin at once to plan for increased contributions and new auxiliary members and keep it up all through the year, and go up to Moberly next year with a large increase of both money and membership over the year just closed.

Wheeling Through Europe.—XI.

FROM VENICE THROUGH THE TYROL TO MUNICH.

The group of islands upon which Venice is built lies three miles or more from the mainland. There is a long, low railroad bridge across the intervening sound, but travelers who shun the railroad must take a boat. After a sojourn of a few days in Venice, stepping into a boat seems such a natural and expected thing, just like putting on your hat when you go out-of-doors, that I wonder that any one ever cares to leave the city by bridge and rail. The redeeming feature of that method is that this one has to have a gondola to take him to the station. Still, we preferred the boat. When one has crossed over to the mainland by the little steamer, which starts from the Rialto, and looks back from the marshy shore on the city in the sea, it is a strange sight—a hazy-gray morning with a bluish-gray sky and a pearl-gray sea and, lying close to the horizon, a darker gray silhouette of towers and domes. The long, low sky line suggests Holland, but Venetian sea, sky and architecture could never be mistaken for Dutch, even in a fog. The corner of Italy next to Venice is utterly flat and the road runs inland along a sort of dike, which again suggests Holland.

After thirty miles, the plain suddenly ends where the Venetian Alps rise abruptly like a wall, apparently barring further progress toward the north and we are again reminded forcibly of the fact, highly important in the historical geography of Europe, that one cannot pass from Italy to Germany or the reverse without climbing this Alpine wall. But there are gates in the wall, and we found one of them at Bassano, where a stream comes down into the plain. Following this valley as our clue we enter again into the heart of the Alps. It is a narrow, winding valley which threatens at every turn to lose itself among the mountains, but mile after mile it finds its tortuous way. The cliffs and peaks have a certain picturesqueness of outline which reminds one rather remotely of our Colorado Garden of the Gods. This is, I believe, a general characteristic of the Tyrol which we are approaching, but we are still in Italy. It was nearing evening when we passed the Italian customs house, and a little later crossed the boundary line from Italy into the Empire of Austria-Hungary. So here we left fair Italy—land of sunshine and blackberries, of fair women and lazy men, of beautiful and impertinent children, of long-robed priests and sandaled monks, of importunate guides and shameless beggars, of cheap cab fares and dickering tradesmen, of old walled towns and hilly roads, the home of romance, the very cradle of art, and, in short, the best theatre in Central Europe for the exploits of an ambititious wheelman.

Before leaving Italy I have a word or two to say in grateful recognition of the courtesy of the Italian people. It is not the hearty good-fellowship of the Germans, with their cheerful greeting to every passer-by and their ceremonious etiquette whenever strangers are thrown together in a hotel, at a dinner table or in a railway carriage. It is not the deferential gravity with which the Dutchman salutes every traveler. In general, no Italian ever addresses a stranger, either in city or country, except on business, but in all those situations which call for definite dealings between man and man they can conduct themselves with charming suavity and grace. When a man goes into a post office he lifts his hat, bids the postal clerk good morning, prefers his request, receives and pays for the stamp, lifts his hat again, says "thank you" and departs, and the strange part of it is that the man behind the window responds appropriately to all these greetings. At Florence one day I was crossing the Arno by a bridge which I had never used before. It was a toll bridge but, not knowing that fact, I was passing on when the toll taker called after me in a soft and apologetic tone, "Pardon, Signor." It was no less effective and much more pleasant than a gruff "Hi, there, you!"

A few observations on the "tipping system" may also be in place here, for, though found in all parts of Europe, it is especially prevalent in Italy. Stated simply for the benefit of those who have never had experience of it, the tipping system means that you have to pay directly for every service that is rendered to you, by giving "gratuities." This is the system at its best. At its worst it means that your footsteps are dogged by a group of pertinacious hangers-on who get in your way at every turn, who intrude themselves most annoyingly when you most want to be alone, who do those things which they ought not to have done and leave undone those things which they ought to have done, and then expect payment for their imaginary services. But these are abuses which flow less from the system than from the character of the people, the Italian proletariat being composed chiefly of born beggars. Take the system at its best, say at a good hotel. The American, accustomed to paying an inclusive per diem rate for his hotel accommodations, naturally considers it an imposition when he is expected to "remember" the waiter, chambermaid, porter and boots. He thinks the hotel ought to pay its own servants. But the theory is that the hotel bill includes no charge for service, unless specifically stated, and that the relation between the guests and the servants is a private matter with which the landlord has nothing to do. This has the advantage of making the servants directly responsible to the guests. If the latter is not pleased the former is not paid. From the standpoint of the traveler the tipping system seems to me to have more merits than are usually credited to it, but from the standpoint of the servants no arrangement could be worse. It makes their livelihood uncertain and dependent upon the whims and fancies of the guests and, worse yet, it forces the honest toiler into the attitude of a beggar. Honest work, even though it be a servant's work, deserves to be paid in a more honorable and reliable way than by gratuities.

At the boundary between Italy and Austria, the cyclist is forcibly reminded that boundaries are not imaginary lines, but very real. Sometimes they are harder to cross than a line of hills. A barrier across the road proclaims the entrance to the dominions of Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria-Hungary. Apparently Francis Joseph does not like to have cyclists come to see him. He is afraid they will sell their bicycles in his empire without having paid the import duty on them. So he requires every wheelman on entering the country to deposit a sum equal to about ten dollars in Austrian gold as security that the wheel is not for sale, and this amount is refunded when the machine is taken out of the country. This is something of a nuisance, especially when the wheelman does not happen to have any Austrian gold and has to stop over night to get his Italian money changed, but patriotism forbids us to protest, for foreign cyclists entering our country are subjected to the same inconvenience. So we paid down the money, received another portentous looking document and had leaden seals placed on our wheels. After taking our gold and giving us lead therefor the official applied for a gratuity ("trinkgeld"). He didn't get it.

The ride through the Austrian Tyrol exhibited but few "points of interest" (in the technical tourist sense) and not a great variety of scenery; but the long, deep valleys, which we followed for more than a hundred miles from the Austrian frontier through the old city of Trent, famous for its Catholic Council of four centuries ago, through Brenner Pass, were a constant delight and every hamlet and village was a point of interest. The mountains are genuine Alps, the valleys are nearly level and the roads are good. Altogether the Tyrol is decidedly alluring to the cyclist, and our only regret was that for the present we must treat it merely as a link between Italy and Germany rather than as a touring ground for its own sake.

The Brenner Pass is the lowest road over the principal chain of the Alps and it seemed easy after riding the St. Gotthard, the Furka and the Tete Noir. Still, it is high enough to give an almost unbroken coast for twenty-five miles from the top of it down to Innsbruck, the most important town in Northern Tyrol. Like Innterlaken and Lucerne, Innsbruck is infested with a multitude of tourists gotten up in Alpine costumes and trying their best to look like hardy mountaineers. This sort especially affect the Tyrolean hat, a diminutive affair of green felt about the size and shape of a well-rounded dish of ice cream, with a narrow brim corresponding to the projecting edge of the saucer and a little bunch of feathers in the band. Brawny Englishmen and corpulent Germans and, I fear, some Americans, go about the streets of Innsbruck with this coquettish headgear, and seem to imagine that they look like genuine chamois hunters. The town is really a great center for mountaineering excursions, lying as it does in a beautiful valley surrounded by snow-covered peaks.

One more chain of Alps still lay between us and the comparatively level country of Northern Europe. Several highly picturesque passes cross the mountainous frontier from the Austrian Tyrol to Bavaria, and of these we chose the most direct, which did not happen to be the easiest. The climb out of the valley of the river Inn was perhaps the stiffest hill we found in all Europe. It was only three or four miles long, but the grade was something appalling. A sign warned cyclists under penalty of the law not to ride in either direction, but the sign did not stop us. It was the hill. From the summit of this range there was a rapturous and illegal coast down the other side of this prohibited hill. Night was coming on and there was just time enough, by riding where the law said to walk, to get to the boundary, collect our deposit from the customs office and reach Mittenwald, the nearest town on the Bavarian side. So we rode.

We had been taken for Germans so often in Italy and elsewhere by those densely ignorant of German, that it seemed like getting back home to be once more in Germany. And besides, there is cordiality and warmth about these people which makes the returning traveler glad to be among them again. Again we are hailed with the familiar "All' Heil," and more than once greeted with the pious "Gruss' Gott." That night at Mittenwald the inn at which we first applied was full (having perhaps two other guests) and we lodged at the house of a hospitable dyer, whose sign proclaimed him to the world as a "Farbenmeister," and who asked, as many apparently intelligent people have done, whether we came all the way from America on our bicycles. It rained that night and next morning the clouds hung below the mountain tops and filled the valley. But at ten o'clock we started through the mist and mud for Munich, sixty-five miles away. A "blowout" of one of my tires made some delay, and a five-course dinner served on a hotel veranda overlooking the beautiful little mountain lake, Walchsee, was also the occasion of a slight pause, but at half past five in the afternoon we pulled into Munich, famous the world over for its pictures and its beer.

THE GREAT YACHT CRAZE.

I have come to the conclusion that both the British and American peoples are alike subject to periodical manias. When I was leaving England for this American tour I perceived that my country was plunging into a craze over the prospective performances of the Columbia and the Shamrock. By the time I landed at New York the fever was at its height there. Two continents are now in a condition of almost suspended animation concerning all other topics but this supreme competition between two pretty little ocean butterflies. Some of my congregation in London, with playful irony, made believe that I was choosing to come to New York just at this juncture because I wanted to see Dewey and the yacht race? Had I been a sporting sort of human being I could not have struck a more favorable opportunity for indulging in a survey of New York in gala dress and in a mood of excitability. It is almost impossible to look in any direction in New York or Brooklyn without seeing Dewey great or Dewey small; Dewey somewhere up near the sky or Dewey filling some window; Dewey smiling or Dewey scowling; Dewey on the breasts of his countrymen, and Dewey in clouds of stars or lashed with red and white stripes. The only objects that vary the prospect of Dewey's countless effigies are the almost equally numerous representations of the Columbia and the Shamrock. These two yachts seem to be sailing over every spot on earth and heaven that comes to view. There they are directly I open a New York daily paper, covering the sheet together with the everlasting Dewey. The New York Herald and Journal and World look like literary crazy quilts, with their frenzied headlines in enormous capitals, red, black and blue. To the eyes of an Englishman these papers at this time look as if their editors had been attacked with violent convulsions. But I must frankly say that New York and Brooklyn look gloriously beautiful under decoration, and I shall always be thankful that I happened to arrive when they presented such an aspect of gayety. Having seen many cities in many lands, I am bound to say that these two interest me beyond all. But I perceive that human nature is much the same in the average American and the average Englishman. I am glad that this is so. This delight in honoring a truly great man like Admiral Dewey is creditable to his countrymen. My compatriots similarly treated Lord Kitchener the other day. Real heroes are not plentiful. As for the yacht race, that has also an excellent side. It accentuates the love of Anglo-Saxons for the sea. We Englishmen all want to see America become a great naval power. For this wish we have manifold reasons for our own welfare as well as yours. Into these I may enter another time.

THE DARK SIDE OF THE CRAZE.

I know nothing at all about the owner of the Columbia, but I have something to say about Sir Thomas Lipton. He is an extraordinary man. The son of a penniless laborer, as he is never ashamed to say, he has become a millionaire in England entirely through his genius for business, backed by a combination of qualities in character which ensured success such as only a few men can achieve in one generation. His industry, punctuality, enterprising courage and cosmopolitan comprehensiveness of commercial aim have all helped to make him the emperor of English commerce. He is a bachelor, so that he has had no family distractions or delights to divert his attention from the needed concentration. His character is of high moral and social standard. Such a man must grow wealthy, unless some special decree of Providence is interposed. Providence does very often come in to deny prosperity to men as deserving as Lipton; none can tell why. For a few chosen ones a temporal election seems to apportion the lot of victory. But when we look below the surface we discover some things which surely cannot be approved either by God or man. I happen to live in the same London suburb as Sir Thomas Lipton. A local weekly organ published in that suburb has, in a recent issue, published some simple yet severe strictures on the way in which the vast Lipton stores, ramifying through the country, and even into other countries, are conducted. "Of course," says the editor of the Sentinel, "Lipton's workers have to contribute to the extravagant cost of the Shamrock and the parties of distinguished guests who watch the race from the Erin." Of course they do. How are these unfortunate toilers paid? The Sentinel tells a little about this. The wages of the men employed in the tea department, coopers, porters, mixers, blenders, etc., vary from $5 to $5.50 a week. The wages of the girls average about 7 shillings, or $1.75 a week. In the cocoa and chocolate department the wages of the men vary from $4 to $6 per week. Some weeks since large quantities of fruit ordered by the Lipton firm were seized by the London authorities. This happened on more than one occasion during the recent fruit season. The fruit was all condemned as unfit for use. It was ordered for the purpose of making jam in Sir T. Lipton's factories. At the trial the plea was set up that the fault was with the senders of the article; but at the adjourned trial just settled, during Sir Thomas' absence for the race, it was disclosed that for this immense consignment of strawberries less than half the value of good fruit was the contract price. As these items of intelligence become known in England the reputation of this millionaire will sink down to zero. The British people execrate all sweaters, though they are compelled to remain their victims. I am of opinion that the yacht race will presently be found giving a more powerful impetus to Socialism than anything that has happened during recent years. The jam case has ended in a conviction, with a fine for Sir Thomas Lipton of $250 or two months' imprisonment. Of course, a small fine like that is a contemptible trifle for a mighty firm to pay, and of course, Sir T. Lipton himself would not be actually cognizant of the fruit incident. But his managers were only conducting the affairs of the great company on the traditionary sweating lines. The editor of the Sentinal sarcastically exclaims, "What a pity that Sir Lipton's attention is so much occupied just now with the America Cup and the entertainment of distinguished visitors from Southgate! Because it is just possible that he will not know anything about the jam case. But some of our neighbors who are getting ready to cheer him ought to know that it ended on Saturday in a conviction and a fine with the alternative of imprisonment!"

THE ENGLISH DISCIPLES.

I left England in order to attend the Jubilee Convention, at Cincinnati, immediately after our convention in England. The Conference of the Christian Association of Great Britain was this year held at Gloucester, that beautiful Cathederal City in the West of England, in which F. W. Troy started the work carried on by E. H. Spring. I have written so much and so often about the work in England that on this occasion I only need add that we have during the past year been gaining our greatest encouragements. Only one church failed to show an increase of membership. As a people, known as the English Disciples of Christ, we are slowly but surely growing. Now that I am visiting in America I am impressed with the similarity in certain respects between the conditions of the work in New England and in Old England. It is at once evident to me, even as a fresh and inxperienced observer, that there are reasons for slow growth in this older portion of the United States, analogous to those which affect our new work in Great Britain. I wish that all our American brethren could really apprehend the philosophy of the situation. They cannot all come to see us in England. Even those who can are at a disadvantage through being antecedently impressed with the magnificent facility of the work of the Disciples in the new fallow ground of the Western states. Every time I attend our annual conferences in England I see some fresh proofs of the stability of the work already accomplished. It is a sample for the English people which some day they will earnestly heed. Truth can afford to wait. The outcome of the Gloucester conference was the conclusion all round that our English work was never so promising, and that it never so fully deserved the sympathy of the American churches which founded it, and have not faild to manifest their interest in its development. All established religions in England are tumbling into chaos from which no amount of new creed-mongering will extricate them. The time approaches when many will gladly turn to churches such as these of the Disciples of Christ for light and leading.

A SORRY SIGHT

It is, to see a strong man shaken like a reed by a paroxysm of coughing, which leaves him gasping for breath. People have suffered with bronchial affections for years, with obstinate, stubborn cough, and growing weakness. They have tried doctors and medicines in vain. At last they have been induced to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with the general result experienced by all who put this wonderful medicine to the test—help at once, and a speedy cure.

For coughs, bronchial affections, weak lungs, spitting of blood, and other diseases of the organs of respiration, "Golden Medical Discovery" is practically a specific. It always helps; it almost always cures.

"I had been troubled with bronchitis and catarrh of the head for eight years; had severe cough, and at times great difficulty in breathing," writes J. W. Howerton, Esq., of Bigfall, Hancock Co., Tenn. "A portion of the time my appetite was poor and part of the time I was unable to do anything. I had been treated by our best country physicians for several years but with little benefit. I had been reading about your medicine for a long time but hadn't much faith in it. Last spring concluded I would try it, and before I had taken one-third of a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I began to mend. I continued taking it until I had taken several bottles. Took Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets also. Now I feel like a new man, and can do as hard a day's work as any one."

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for paper covered, or 31 stamps for cloth binding, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

Care of Lamps.

Many housekeepers think there is nothing to learn about the care of lamps; but if the little details here mentioned are adhered to, there will be a great difference in the light.

First, a lamp must be cleaned and filled every morning; the burners should be cleaned once a week, and the best way is to boil them in water in which Gold Dust Washing Powder has been added. Put a teaspoonful into a quart of water, and boil ten minutes. The flues should be put in a pan of cold water, and heated slowly until they boil, then take off and let them cool gradually—this toughens the glass.

Letter from Walter Scott.

[The followinng letter, written, not by the Scotch novelist, but by the eloquent preacher and co-laborer with Alexander Campbell, to J. O. Carson, of this city, soon after his return home from a visit to Missouri, during which time he had been a guest at Bro. Carson's home, will be read with interest by our readers. Missourians will appreciate its encomium upon the state, and all will admire the unaffected spirit of piety that pervades the letter. It will not be deemed out of place in connection with our Jubilee reminiscences.—EDITOR.]

MAYSLICK, July 15, 1856.

BRO. CARSON—Dear Sir: The Lord bless you; the Lord make you a blessing to many people. These few lines go, I trust, to find you and your jewels in good health. As for Sister Scott and myself, the Lord has dealt bountifully with us and restored us to our sweet home in health and perfect safety—thanks be to his holy name for this mercy. Our journey from the time we were constrained to say "adieu"—through Illinois, Indiana and Ohio—was a very pleasant one indeed. We were surprised at the vitalizing nature of the railroad. We passed through villages of all sizes and all ages, from six weeks to twenty years. The neighing of the iron horse arouses everything.

My heart, I fear, is in the West—the Great West. Certainly no other country presents to the eye a landscape of more celestial beauty. I felt enraptured when the beautiful scene spread out into absolute sublimity far as the sensible horizon allowed the vision to extend. The country wore the appearance of the highest state of civilization—studded with forests, groves and thickets, and watered by rivers, brooks and springs rising out of the gently sloping lands. Altogether it seemed a world greater and lovelier than I had conceived of before—fitted to be the abode of kings and princes—the dominations of the earth; in fertility equal to any other; in beauty and loveliness excelling all. It is not till one narrowly seeks for farms and family mansions that he discovers that he is in a new country, and that these delightful lands are in a state of nature, waiting in their virgin loveliness for the vast population which their broad and fertile acres are able so amply to sustain. Had I been born on a prairie, I never could have forsaken its own sweet scenes for any other in the republic. And he that has not seen the prairies of Northern Missouri has not yet seen all the world. Till I saw them, although I had taught geography for many years, I had not before dreamt that God had made so great a world. You smile? Very well; smile on, dear brother! Neither had I before conceived of the amplitude and magnificence of those lovely lands over which the God of heaven, according to his promise, is far and wide diffusing the kingdom of his Son, our blessed Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ.

I would go this day to the West, could I obtain the consent of one near and dear to me, but although she cannot consent at present, she bids me say she hopes to see you and our dear Sister Carson, with her precious jewels, some time next spring. The Lord bless her and all her sweet children.

Did I leave a note book in your house? If I did, please put it in a piece of paper, a wrapper, and mail it to my address, Mason County, Ky. Now may God our Father, through Jesus Christ, make you perfect.

In Christ Your Brother,
WALTER SCOTT.

New York Letter.

The annual business meeting of the 169th St. congregation, held on Tuesday evening, Oct. 3rd, showed the past year to have been the best in the history of the church. More than $4,700 was raised and used in the Lord's work by this congregation. All lines of the work is prospering perhaps as never before, and the outlook in our field is full of promise; it was never brighter at any previous period. The meeting itself was more largely representative of the church than any previous meeting had been, and was as delightful socially as it was satisfactory from a business point of view. One new feature that helped to make it so was the tea served by the women of the church in connection with the business meeting. This came instead of dinner at home at 7 to 8 o'clock, and all came from business direct to the church, so that the social tea lasted an hour, and pleasantly prepared the way for the various reports and new business that followed. During the year the mission chapel on the Southern Boulevard was built and paid for, all our general missionary causes were generously assisted and the house obligations all met. As this meeting marked the beginning of my eleventh year's service with this church, they very generously and without my previous knowledge of their purpose, increased their pastor's salary $200—the second time they have added this amount within the ten years of our ministry in New York. The matter was kept secret from me each time until the church had arranged it among themselves, when they simply announced their decision. The willingness of this little church to stand by their pastor, morally, substantially and spiritually, even as they have done for ten years, is one of the highest rewards and chiefest joys of a preacher's life. The congregation also took steps at this meeting looking toward the starting of a church building fund. It is our purpose to build a new house of worship as soon as possible, for it is one of our greatest needs.

Among the recent additions to our 169th St. Church one is especially an interesting case: Eshoo Younan, a native of Oroomih, Persia, 26 years of age and a member of the old Nestorian Church in his native land, declared his faith in Christ and became obedient to him in baptism. This action was the result of several conferences with him on the matter; and now that he has learned somewhat of the simple and beautiful position of the Disciples of Christ, it is his earnest desire to prepare himself for the ministry and return as a missionary to his own people in Persia. Having taken a college course in his own country, he has a fair educational foundation on which to work in the ministry. We hope and pray that a way may be opened for him to attend some one of our Bible colleges to prepare for this blessed work he has upon his heart.

Something was said in one of our recent letters about the desire to start a mission work in the city of Newark, N. J., which is practically a suburban section of New York and which has a population of more than 225,000 souls. A number of Disciples have been found, and it is believed that twenty-five might be brought into affiliation if the work were undertaken. Several of these have held an informal conference to make a general survey of the situation, and within a few days we are to meet again to further the interests of the Disciples in that city. We have been all but criminal in our neglect of these great centers of population on the Atlantic Seaboard. This little band in Newark is one of the many hopeful nuclei that might easily be formed and cultivated under the supervision of a general evangelist, for which we have been pleading so many years. We should lay broad and deep foundations for the cause of primitive Christianity in this the largest and wealthiest city of New Jersey, and do it now. We still insist on the American Christian Missionary Society helping with a liberal hand in the general evangelization of the Eastern cities.

Bro. G. T. Picton has begun work in his new field as pastor of the church at Everett, Mass., succeeding our good Bro. R. H. Bolton, who is evangelizing and editing the New England Messenger. Bro. G. A. Reinl reports the work in a prosperous condition at Brockton. The church at Worcester, Mass., is enjoying continued prosperity under the excellent leadership of pastor Roland A. Nichols, 93 having been added to the saved since Jan 1st. E. Jay Teagarden and his host of helpers at Danbury keep the work on the up grade in that great hot town of New Enggland. Bro. B. S. Gowen, a student in Yale University, is anxious to meet for social worship with any Disciple that may be in New Haven. S. M. Hunt, of Springfield, the ever wide-awake secretary of the New England Christian Missionary Society, has worked hard to have a large representation of their forces at the Jubilee Convention.

The gospel tent work at 56th St. and Broadway closed yesterday, the 8th, after holding 100 successful meetings. The superintendent estimated that 100,000 persons had attended in the 16 weeks of the summer season. The whole United States has been represented at these services, as was shown by the addresses on inquirers' cards. The gospel workers have made 1,566 calls in answer to these inquiry cards, and 275 inquiries had been followed up with call after call. Among the noted speakers Myer, Morgan, Moody, Munhall, MacArthur, Chapman, Dixon, Torry, Burrell, Booth, Pierson and others have spoken with splendid results. The spiritual life of many churches has been quickened and even distant cities have sought to undertake similar tent work. Doubtless tent evangelizing will be renewed in New York next summer, and will extend to other communities.

FIFTH DISTRICT NOTES.

We are pleased to note the interest taken in county organization in this district. Bro. J. H. Stark, of Virginia, engineered the forces in Cass County, which resulted in effecting a good organization at Virginia, Sept. 7th.

A call has been issued to the churches of Montgomery County to attend the Macoupin County convention at Carlinville, Nov. 8 and 9, to consider the question of the two counties entering into one co-operation. Most of the churches in Montgomery County are sadly in need of good preaching and plenty of it. They must have help or perish.

J. W. Knight, of Carlinville, and Guy B. Williamson have just closed a good meeting at Waggoner, Montgomery County. It was a meeting of nineteen days, held mainly for the purpose of reviving the brethren, which seems to have fulfilled its purpose. These brethren, who are now in a meeting at Palmyra, will return to Waggoner later, to preach and sing the gospel to the sinners outside of the church.

Although there are several churches in Greene County, there is but one resident preacher, J. S. Smith, of Carrollton. The churches in Greene County are reported as not being in a very flourishing condition. The work there is in great need of county co-operation. Bro. J. S. Smith has been appointed county correspondent for the state and district. It is the duty of these brethren to have the supervision over state and district work in their respective counties and to keep us informed of the condition of the work and the location of preachers.

Brethren, I know, and am glad to know, that our minds are full of the good things of the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, but remember that this is the jubilee year of the Illinois Christian Missionary Convention and we must go to our next meeting with large collections and a great harvest of souls for the Master. Do not forget Illinois Day, Nov. 5th. Prepare to raise your apportionment. If you have no preacher, that will be no reason for not raising your apportionment. We are making arrangements for every preacherless church to be visited by some neighboring preacher or the county correspondent in the interest of the state and district collection. Prepare ye the way of his coming. Suffer him to come unto you and forbid him not. PAUL H. CASTLE, District Secretary.

Virden, Ill.

SANGAMON COUNTY.

The Y. P. S. C. E. Union of Sangamon County held its annual convention here Oct. 7th. Many persons told the writer it was the best convention yet held by the Union. Fifteen societies were represented by over 75 delegates. Other visitors increased the attendance from outside of Buffalo to more than 100. The entertainment afforded by our local society was highly commended.

We overreached our apportionment for church extension, as we have that of every call this year. Every offering this year has been larger than the corresponding one last year, which was the best, all things considered, in the history of the church. Without any large gifts the offerings of those who contribute will exceed $10 on an average per member. I know of no church that more heartily supports our organized work. There will be no work presented at the Jubilee Convention to which the Buffalo church will not be entitled to representation.

Oct. 22d, R. A. Omer will begin a series of revival services here. This will be the second meeting of Bro. Omer with this church and we are looking forward to a grand meeting. We hope to be able to send a splendid report. We hope the brethren from neighboring churches will visit us during the meeting.

R. B. Havener, th e faithful pastor at Mechanicsburg, is holding a meeting at a country schoolhouse near by where a good interest is being manifested. Bro. Havener has received a call from that church to remain another year.

State Mission Notes.

The State Convention has come and gone, and is on record as one of the great conventions of the brotherhood in the state.

1. It was great in attendance. There were fully 600 people there, and at times the audiences ran over a thousand. Then it was a representative body, those in attendance being among the best of our people in the state, and their deliberations and actions resulting must command the respect of all. They are the sentiments and judgment of the best people in the state.

2. It was great in the determination to do the largest possible things for the building up of the church in our beloved state. There was no half-heartedness, no hesitancy; the largest possible thing was the one that must be done. The figures were set for not less than $10,000 for state work this year. Is this too much? It is only about 16 cents per member, and it will be to our shame if we do not bring report that this has been more than done. We must not be content with anything that is possible. This is possible. Let us do it.

3. It was great in the sermons and addresses. Beginning with the one by D. R. Dungan, Monday night, then came E. B. Redd, H. A. Denton and M. M. Goode, Tuesday. We missed the one F. O. Fannon was to give us Wednesday morning, he being absent, but two of the very strongest came Thursday by W. N. Briney and D. W. Moore. These were the chief speakers, and they were great in their themes and in their thoughts. A letter from there since the convention closed says the strong addresses would do the church at Jefferson City a world of good.

4. It was great in its management. From the time when the gavel of President of the Board T. P. Haley fell on the first night—in the absence of W. H. McClain—till the closing benediction there was that strict attention to business which makes a convention happy and useful. Bro. McClain is a model presiding officer, and has the happy faculty of keeping everybody busy and dispatching a large amount of work in a very short while. There was no hitch, no delay. If there was an emergency he met it promptly and in the very best way. The wisdom of his selection was fully vindicated in his superb management.

The little church at Jefferson City did nobly, only one hundred strong. To entertain a convention of six hundred people was an herculean task, but they did it; did it handsomely and well. Bro. Pinkerton and his assistants deserve unstinted praise for their great efforts to make every one comfortable and happy. There were but few complaints, and these arose on account of the mistakes so natural on such occasions, which were soon rectified and all was well.

The C. W. B. M. part, also, was great from beginning to end. The reports made showed splendid work done. The work of all deserves large praise, but especial mention should be made of that of Mrs. B. F. Clay. Right in the midst of the year every state officer of the society was stricken down with illness, and she was called to the rescue. She was a comparative stranger in the state, but with a devotion that was noteworthy, with a zeal that could only come from a heart full of love for the cause, she wrought so efficiently that the report of the year is in all respects, I believe, better than ever before. This achievement was worthy of a special and most hearty vote of thanks, at least.

One action of the convention calls for special mention, that was the change of time for holding future conventions. The constitution was so amended that we will meet on Monday after the third Sunday in September, 1900, and every other year thereafter. This was well. It has been a hindrance for years that our convention came at the same time as the great St. Louis Fair and the Wild Carnival in Kansas City. This gives us only eleven months in this year. Let us fill them full to the brim with work for our blessed Lord. T. A. ABBOTT.

A Statement Questioned.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—In looking over the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 27, under "Current Events," my attention was called to the paragraph on the death of Robt. G. Ingersoll. Speaking of his death the writer says: "He has gone from the earth, and that, too, in a way that indicates that the kind and loving God whom he blasphemed in his lectures after all, heard and answered the prayer of this professionally prayerless man, and permitted him an unwarned, instantaneous, painless death."

Upon what Scripture can these words be justified? If there is no Scripture to justify them, upon what grounds can they be justified? If God hears and answers such a prayer, if it be a prayer, of such a man, why does he not hear and answer the prayers of his children who pray for such a painless death? Is it possible that our God will grant the wish of a man who has blasphemed him and turn a deaf ear to one who loves him and has long been faithful to him? What could God gain for himself or what would be the gain to Ingersoll or to the world by the answering of such a prayer? If I could believe that my God has done such a thing I would not love him. Such expressions would cause doubt if not infidelity in me. One who would do such a thing could not be my idea of the Father of whom I read in the New Testament. If there be no grounds upon which such statements can be justified, it seems to me it would be better not to make them. Yours fraternally,
W. H. APPLEGATE.

McComb, O., Oct. 9, 1899.

[In answer to the above we reply that our words are justified by both the facts cited and the Scripture which declares God's love for the world. God is answering the prayers of the wicked, rebellious unbelievers every day, but not as to their salvation independent of Christ, and of this we said nothing in the paragraph referred to. To call the prayer and the painless death a coincidence does not remove the writer's trouble. It is not good to be jealous of God's love toward his erring earthly creatures.—EDITOR.]

Elder David P. Henderson.

REMINISCENCES.

The leading purpose of the Reformation inaugurated by the Campbells, B. W. Stone, Walter Scott and others, was the restoration of New Testament Christianity in letter and spirit, in faith and practice.

This must ever be the great plea of the Disciples of Christ. Very much could be here said which must be omitted. This plea, soon after its promulgation, was advocated by many men of distinguished ability.

Among these was David P. Henderson. He was born near Lexington, Ky., in 1810, educated in Cain Run Seminary, Fayette County, Ky., under John Ellis, Pres. Taught school in 1830 in Fayette County, Ky. In 1831 removed to Jacksonville, Ill., was immersed 4th July, 1832, by B. W. Stone, near Georgetown, Ky., and united with the church in Georgetown.

He began to exhort in November, 1832, and soon afterward entered the ministry, which closed with his laborious and eventful life.

January 19, 1837, Bro. Henderson was married to Miss Eliza Smedley, Jacksonville, Ill. Studied law eight years; in clerk's office four years; was probate judge, preaching all the time, never inclined to give up preaching. Took a regular course of medical instruction in Illinois Medical College, 1847-8. About this time he spent the summer with wife and daughter in Missouri, numbers being added to the church through his labors. He founded Christian Female College, Columbia, Mo. He also founded Christian University, Canton, Mo.; raised several hundred thousand dollars' endowment fund. He secured one milion dollars in Southern Pacific, Texas Railroad, and twenty-five thousand dollars in lands in Arkansas. The civil war swept all away.

Providentially he was called to Louisville, Ky., where he labored during twelve years. I think it was in 1855, in company with the valiant evangelist, John T. Sohnson, he began a meeting in the city of Louisville, Ky., proposing to remain only a short time. But it was otherwise ordered. John T. Johnson leaving, Bro. Henderson continued the meeting, from the fact that hundreds came to hear and many hearing, believed and were baptized. Daily and nightly the meeting increased in numbers, in interest, in power for good. Over three hundred became obedient to the faith; among these some of the most intelligent people of the city.

There had never been a meeting in our ranks of such proportions, characteristics or splendid results.

The city was so deeply stirred that not only the members of the various churches crowded to hear, but the ministers themselves could not keep away. Some of these grave ministers failing to secure seats would stand up inside or outside of the meeting house. The meeting closed because our brother's strength failed him. The physical man was not able to bear up longer.

I had the pleasure of hearing Bro. Henderson preach many times in 4th and Walnut Streets Church, and of a truth he was one of the most extraordinary evangelists I have ever been permitted to hear. John T. Johnson, Raccoon John Smith, Lard, Hopson and others I have listened to with profound interest; but there was an attraction, a magnetism, an indefinable something that rivited attention in the preaching of D. P. Henderson.

He was over six feet in height, straight as an Indian, stood erect in the pulpit, moving but little; using his long arms, hands and fingers very much. He had been accustomed to converse with the deaf and dumb, and it seemed could say many things merely with his fingers. Now and then he extended his right or left arm, his hands and fingers trembling as if by magic. His person was fine, his voice full of melody, and that smile I can never forforget, while he preached Jesus and urged sinners to obey. Never loud, never boisterous, no ranting, no attempt at display, no attempt at emphasis, only plain, clear, earnest, yes, deeply earnest—irresistibly so. In his prime he was a mighty power in the pulpit and out of it. He used to say he had only one sermon in all his preaching—the gospel—that and nothing more. He had a good English education. Of books he knew but little; of men and things in general very much; never had time for much continuous thought; was first and all the time a hard worker.

I have seen him meet men of mark, and always thought he disarmed every Sir Knight he encountered. He said to me once that when he approached Alexander Bullett (at one time editor of the New Orleans Picayune) on the subject of religion, Bullett waded into the depths of metaphysics, he following until he got chin deep. Then he turned back, Bullett now following him, and when they both stood on shore he used the Lord's power to save—Christ and him crucified. When Bullett confessed Christ and was baptized he looked up into the face of Bro. Henderson and remarked, "I have too many friends on the other side—must get ready to meet them."

D. P. Henderson, I am sure, gloried in the cross of Christ, the Word of God, the gospel of Christ, the love of the Father in the gift of his only Son to save the world.

As to the philosophy of the gospel, the philosophy of the plan of salvation, the philosophy of conversion, sanctification or redemption, he knew nothing—cared nothing. The world was in darkness, was perishing, thousands were piteously begging to know what to do in order to be saved from their sins. That vital question he felt he must answer and that question he did answer—answered it scripturally, unmixed with human theory or human dogma, and all without the le st apology and in the spirit of the Master.

Learned men in the city of Louisville were amazed and said: "We are unable to see wherein consists the power of this man," and "he is no scholar, no deep thinker, not to be called eloquent, but he is certainly a man of immense power." Many were deceived then, as now, in not recognizing the fact that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all who believe and obey.

D. P. Henderson was full of the gospel of Christ; it permeated the whole man; with it his soul was fired, and no wonder his hearers were thrilled with the love of God as this master of assemblies stood behind the cross and exalted the Redeemer of the world.

The following letter from our beloved L. B. Wilkes, Stockton, California, will be read with interest. It is a beautiful and truthful tribute to our departed brother:

STOCKTON, CAL., Sept. 16, 1899.

W. C. Rogers:

DEAR BROTHER—Your letter asking something from me in regard to Bro. D. P. Henderson, deceased, is received. The poor health of myself and the dangerous illness of my brother, Col. P. S. Wilkes, have prevented me from giving you a prompt reply. I have time and the means now of saying only very few words.

I made the acquaintance of Bro. Henderson in 1850, at Fayette state meeting. I thought him then a charming man and a great preacher. He certainly had as great magnetic influence over an audience as any man of those times that I knew. His personal appearance, his voice and his gestures were a magnificent outfit for calling sinful men and women to Jesus Christ. He seldom established his headquarters in a community and laid his plans for aggressive work that he did not report a great victory for the Master.

Bro. H. took me in his buggy from Fayette to Columbia, Mo., in 1850, where I went to enter the university, then presided over by the beloved, but now departed President, James Shannon. Bro. Henderson was our preacher at Columbia then and for some time after that. If he had faults I have but dim recollection of them. I loved him then and I love and cherish his memory now as one of the dearest, sweetest of all my past life. I have it in my heart to say much more of the subject of these words. But I must leaue the work to your own more gifted pen. Your brother,

L. B. WILKES.

For our brother it seemed there could be no rest. When appointed agent for the Christian Standard he at once hied away to Washington City and began organizing the scattered fragments of the church. He remained six months and was very successful in his efforts in the capital. Spent three years at his own charges as missionary in the city of Chicago, infusing more life into the cause of the Master than it had ever had. Afterward he came back home to Canton, Mo., where he was permitted to remain only a short time. Must now go to St. Louis, where he organized the Central Christian Church in a small hall on 14th and St. Charles Streets, preaching for this church about two years, then turning it over to Enos Campbell, numbering one hundred and twenty members.

The pioneer preachers fifty years ago were of necessity aggressive. They preached the gospel of Christ in its facts, commands and promises; and this was new to the people. The like they had never heard.

While laboring in Louisville, soon after his great meeting, he was called upon to deliver a sermon on the subject, "Action and Design of Baptism." Dr. T. S. Bell, of the Christian Church, furnished books of reference, sitting in the pulpit and handing the books to the preacher as he called for them. The discourse was to be published in pamphlet form. But whose discourse was it—D. P. Henderson's, or Dr. T. S. Bell's? Some things cannot be readily decided.

"The difference 'twixt you and me
Is tweedledum and tweedledee."

Bro. Henderson had delivered the discourse—all of it—first and last. Dr. Bell had furnished the books—all that was quoted from critics, commentators, paraphrasts and historians. After a few sharp words they both parted with high spirits—metal up; Dr. Bell saying to me: "I will have nothing more to do with that discourse or Bro. Henderson." I only looked for trouble. Young and inexperienced I knew not the tact or resources of the preacher. In the afternoon next Lord's day a large audience had assembled for communion service. In this large audience sat Dr. Bell, in bad plight, apparently ill-humored and very surly. To my astonishment Bro. Henderson, in his usual pleasant manner, approached the Doctor and whispering something, induced him to go down into the basement with him and assist in preparing to baptize some one. Peace and good will were now fully and forever restored. He knew men; understood human nature to a marvelous extent; knew when, where, how and what to do. But he had his faults; and who is free? The "best of men are men at best." These let us bury with our brother, and forget.

January 7, 1875, his beloved wife died and was buried in Jacksonville, Ill. The loss was so great he was not the same man afterward. Still, he must labor in the Master's vineyard. We now find him holding meetings in the towns of Columbus and Greensburg, Ind., also in Harristown, Pittsfield, Illiopolis, Petersburg, Farmer City and many other places in Illinois.

There were three themes that occupied his attention and called forth his happiest utterances, namely, the gospel, Christian union and Christian education, or education of both sexes, in academy, college, or university in which Christianity was taught.

The dissensions in the Christian world grieved him at heart, and hence lifelong he plead tenderly and faithfully for the union and communion of all the people of God on the one divine foundation.

In the pulpit, as stated above, he had only one theme—the gospel of Christ. He never turned aside for anything better adapted to the wants and woes of a lost world. This was and is and must ever be the only panacea for all the sinful ills to which poor humanity is heir. In this faith he lived, labored, suffered and died. Lyman Beecher once said, "We must educate, or we must perish,'' meaning that this great republic must go down unless the people were educated. Bro. Henderson realized that unless we educated both sexes we must perish; that is, we must fail as the great Reformation of the 19th century. In this view he was right. He was first and last in favor of education. Hence he founded Christian University, which was the idol of his heart. He desired that the youth of the West should have an opportunity to become thoroughly educated, physically, morally and intellectually, that they might act their part well in all the walks and ways of life. His aspirations as to what Christian University ought to be and could be, ought to do and could do, were noble and unselfish. It has done much good, is now doing good, and can still do greater good. Many incidents could be offered showing his great kindness to young persons seeking an education.

I know a distinguished preacher in our ranks, aided by our brother in preparing for the ministry. His parents were poor and unable to assist him. He went in rags and wore moccasins for shoes until he was 16 years of age. Bro. Henderson found him in this condition, and seeing great promise in him, at once gave him such assistance that to-day he is a mighty power in the pulpit. Not until the parchment of eternity is unrolled and the destiny of all determined will be told the great good our brother accomplished in his long and eventful life. How much good one consecrated soul can do in this world! Cheer up, my brother preachers, and go forward in your life work. ''There remains yet very much to be done.''

We come now to the closing chapters in our brother's life. A few years before his death he penned the following: ''My membership is in Jacksonville, Ill., where my loved ones sleep in Diamond Grove Cemetery. Blessed be the Lord for all his mercies to me!''—D. P. H.

The following letter from his daughter speaks for itself and will touch many hearts. I give it in full:

CANTON, MO., Aug. 18, 1899.

DEAR BRO. ROGERS:—There are so many things that I would like to tell you about my father that I scarcely know how to commence.

His work in Louisville is worthy of mention, as you well know. That beautiful church on the corner of 4th and Walnut Streets, as well as Christian University, stand as monuments to his memory. I found a scrapbook containing clippings from many of the Southern papers concerning the work he and Pres. Shannon were doing in behalf of Christian University. Never a moment had he for idleness. Even when the days came when he thought himself not at home, he was wanting to be useful in some way. He never failed to read his morning lesson in the Word of God up to the time when he could no longer find glasses to fit his eyes. And in the feebleness of old age, his limbs weak and tottering, he would kneel and I would hear him in prayer every night. The last few years of his life he lived a very spiritual life. He seemed to lose sight of this life and all of its surroundings. His mind wandered back to the past and he loved to dwell in it, and his companions were the friends and associates of his active and public life. Many a sermon has been preached to an imaginary audience. One night in particular, I remember, he preached until three o'clock in the morning. He was holding a union meeting with the Baptists, and I said to my husband, he ought to have an audience, for that was one of his strong points—Christian union. He had in his days of health and strength a dread of death—just the sundering of soul and body—but that all passed away. He said to me one day: ''Mary, the Lord has chased away much of the dread of death that I used to have. Blessed be his great and holy name. Now if it will please him to give me an easy passage into eternity I am ready.'' And I believe the Lord answered his prayer. The 11th of February, 1897, he awoke about five in the morning with a severe pain in the region of the heart. We gave him some medicine and it relieved him. He went to sleep and rested quietly until about seven. Then he would be dressed and ate his breakfast with the family as usual. I fed him as I had done for eight months. He failed to eat with his usual relish. Still, he ate a fair breakfast. When finished he went and sat in his large rocker in front of the stove. I sat down to my breakfast close beside him. He sat, quietly smoking, probably five minutes, when I heard him give a loud exclamation—Oh! I turned quickly and knew the summons had come. In a few moments, without any movement or sound, it was all over, and I realized that my father was no more. The physician came and said, Paralysis of the heart.

Now, Bro. Rogers, I thank you for your kindness and hope you will not be discouraged from lack of material.

Yours sincerely,
MARY HENDERSON.

The life work of our brother is ended. Rest and peace have come at last, and now all is well. I knew him long and well, and loved him much. His memory is very dear to me.

"In the desert a fountain is springing,
In the wide waste there still is a tree,
And a bird in the solitude singing,
Which speaks to my spirit of thee."

And now, dear brother, farewell, until earth and sea give up their dead; then I trust to meet you in that bright and beautiful home, where tears are never shed and farewells are never spoken. W. C. ROGERS.

IN CONSUMPTION'S GRASP.

MRS. JULIA A. DYE TELLS OF HER SON'S MARVELOUS CURE WITH DR. SLOCUM'S TREATMENT.

From Hemorrhage and Rapid Decline the Famous Physician Led Him to Health and Strength. Now Weighs 170 Pounds.

Thousands of Full Course Free Treatments Being Sent to All Sufferers from Lung Weakness and Pulmonary Diseases.

The grand free distribution of thousands of Dr. Slocum's Famous Treatment for consumption, lung weakness and kindred pulmonary diseases is working a revolution throughout the country.

The cures being daily recorded show that the eminent physician has at last discovered an absolute specific for the deadly bacilli, or rather a series of specifics, there being four separate preparations in the full course, which is sent out free of cost to all who apply.

Lung weakness and consumption are so dangerous and rapid that Dr. Slocum realizes the necessity of making as many cures as possible without charge, as an example to others who have long since despaired of relief, let alone a cure.

The case of M. H. Dye, of Gibson, Ky., is one which has astounded everybody in that part of the state, but it is a mere repetition of all the grand work being performed all over the country by the most celebrated lung specialist in the world.

Read the testimony.

Mrs. Julia A. Dye, writing for her son, M. H. Dye, of Gibson, Ky., says:

"My son contracted consumption, which began with a cold in his chest about a year ago. He grew worse rapidly, and finally had hemorrhages, which made him weaker every day. We did not think he could recover, for all treatments we tried had little or no effect. After months of despair I finally read in Pentecostal Herald about Dr. Slocum's far-famed discoveries for curing the most hopeless cases of consumption, and knowing this paper would not publish untruthful news, I sent for one of the Free Treatments, and with little real faith my son began taking it. The effect was wonderful! He began to mend at once; the hemorrhages stopped; then the cough ceased; he began to gain in strength and weight, and is now entirely cured, and weighs 170 pounds. I gladly send you this testimony, and my earnest prayer is that others may know what Dr. Slocum has done for my son. May the blessing of God ever be with you for discovering and introducing this wonderful treatment. Please send this testimony to the Elizabethtown Leader, also the Herald. I shall do all I can to spread the good news of the miracle you have worked."

No matter how utterly hopeless your case may seem, Dr. Slocum's discoveries, which usher in a new era of medical treatment, will cure you as it has thousands of others.

As the candle gave way to oil, and oil to gas and electricity, so also is the old consumptive treatment giving way to Slocum, who is receiving the praises of the greatest medical men of the world.

WRITE THE DOCTOR.

If you have any form of lung trouble, asthma, pulmonary or wasting-away diseases, write to-day, giving express and post office address, for the full course of Free Treatment, and it will be sent promptly. Not a small sample, but four generous size preparations, which will work wonders.

Address Dr. T. A. Slocum, 98 Pine street, New York City, N. Y., stating you saw this in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

When in doubt and in need of expert advice, Dr. Slocum will give it together with accurate diagnosis free of all cost.

General Convention Reports

STATISTICAL REPORT.

The past is the judge of the future. This ancient, hoary-headed judge and prophet, when rightly understood, speaks with the voice of God. The evidence is before him. He has heard all the testimony. The verdict is rendered. Judge and jury have ordered that the Word of God be restored and the Christ of the Scriptures be released from the bondage of human creeds. The Son of God has been set at liberty. He is no longer chained to dogma and the doctrines of men. He has truly become the light of men and is bringing warmth to the soul, light to the mind and joy to the heart. He is the way, the truth and the life. It is this truth that liberates men everywhere, and they flock to the standard of our Lord by the thousands. For this reason the army who accept Jesus only as the Captain of their salvation, who will have no other creed but faith in Him and who hear no other voice but the voice of the Master is steadily and constantly growing.

The past year, as its predecessors, has been full of cheer and encouragement. Commendable gains have been reported from all quarters of our great brotherhood. It is a delight to sit upon the towers and behold the clans forming from afar and see them mustered into the army of the Lord. This host we have tried to number as they gathered from far and near and become identified with the Church of Christ. The results of our efforts indicate that we now have in the United States:

		Gain.

Sittings in churches	1,566,653	50,000
Value of church property	$18,256,761	$1,059,264

These gains indicate that our people are growing twice as fast as the population of the country. If we go back to the beginning of the present decade the reports show that we have gained nearly three times as fast as the population in proportion to our membership. Four per cent. for the last year and nearly six per cent. per annum for the last six years.

Our national missionary societies have made the most rapid perceptible gains of any part of our work. The liberality of our brotherhood has made a leap forward, which is truly commendable. The report for the—

These reports are full of promise. The continuous growth from year to year is a promise of great things in the future. A single year may not show great gains, but when we look back over our short history we see the constant growth that has been made. As near as can be ascertained the membership in the past has been about as follows:

1840	40,000
1850	118,000
1860	225,000
1870	350,000
1880	475,000
1890	641,000
1899	1,118,396

If this growth is maintained, and there is no reason why it should not be, there will be over two million of members before the close of the first decade of the twentieth century. If we shall always be actuated by the one sublime purpose of restoring the Church of God, the one ideal, the highest degree of spirituality possible to the followers of Christ and the one Christly mission of bringing the whole world to the feet of our Master, the church will increase and multiply. The Lord will be with his people and the children of God will become a mighty nation. They shall be as countless as the stars of the heavens and as numerous as the sands of the seashore.

JUBILEE REPORT OF THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

"A Jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you!"

The fiftieth report of the American Christian Missionary Society is one full of facts that should make us jubilant. The society succeeded in securing the full one hundred thousand dollars for the Jubilee, an increase of fifty-nine thousand dollars over last year.

The report recites the beginnings of the work under the presidency of Alexander Campbell and the growth of fifty years. There has been raised and expended through the treasury of the society $860,500.00; supplemental funds raised on the mission field, $2,300,000.00. There has come into being under the care and help of the National Board and auxiliary to that board forty-six state and district boards of missions. The missionaries of the General Board have organized 2,361 churches, and baptized 98,360 persons into the churches. The state boards report 295,158 additions to the churches by their missionaries.

The American Christian Missionary Society has given to the church the various other societies: The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, which has raised $770,000.00 since its organication; the Foreign Society, which has raised and expended $1,141,000.00 for Foreign Missions; the Board of Church Extension, which has raised $236,000.00 for that work; the Board of Negro Evangelization, which had raised $68,000.00 before its offering was united with that of the General Home Board, and the Board of Ministerial Relief, which has raised $29,000.00 for the help of aged and needy ministers. This is the briefest statement of our organized missionary work in its Jubilee Year. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The report for the last year is the record of the most prosperous year in our history. It is already known that the society has increased its income from $41,000.00 to $100,000.00 in one year.

The following is a comparative statement of receipts to the A. C. M. S. from the year ending October 1st, 1899:

It will be equally interesting to know that through the efforts of the missionaries sixty-three churches have been organized through the year and 6,046 persons brought into the churches. The board is maintaining missions in thirty-six different states, and is trying to do work in forty-six cities.

The record shows that we were the first to enter Porto Rico. J. A. Erwin is in San Juan with a promising work; he lives in his hired house and receives daily those who come to hear of the Word of God. He is preaching every Lord's day in English, and hopes soon to be able to speak in Spanish. It is his intention to open a public reading room for the many English-speaking people, soldiers and others, who have no place to go except to the vile saloons. The board solicits contributions of subscriptions to the various magazines and our religious papers for use in this reading room.

Another interesting work is the mission among the Mexicans at San Antonio; they came to George B. Ranshaw and asked baptism at his hands, having read themselves into this belief from their Bibles. A work was begun among them that will develop into a church.

A new work was begun at Rat Portage, Ontario. J. K. Hester was there some weeks and organized a new church, the first in all that vast and rapidly growing region. J. C. Keevil continues in that field.

THE FIELDS THAT WAIT.

Under this head the acting board calls attention to the waiting fields in the great South, the populous East, the growing Northwest and the cities. Special emphasis is laid upon the Pacific Coast. With our entrance upon Pacific Ocean possessions and the early building of the Nicarauguan Canal the Pacific Coast will grow rapidly, and we should enter this field at an early day in a much larger way than we have ever done. The board is helping all these states, but the increased opportunities call for much larger appropriations. The report contains a number of appeals from people in different parts of the country asking for help. These calls are very urgent and show great opportunities. We give some samples, and are told that they might be duplicated many times:

We call for help in North Dakota. Without the help of the board we cannot succeed in planting the primative gospel in this great country. The needs are great and we are very weak; help us all you can. I will gladly go to Fargo if you will support me in doing so.
H. T. MORRISON.

Home Missions will never get to the front until the board does much more for Minnesota. Here is a great and growing state, and we are not doing a tithe of what we ourght to do to win and hold Minnesota for Christ and his gospel.
E. T. GADD.

DEAR BROTHER:—I am a very old woman, eighty-five years old. For fifty-seven years I have lived away from any church with which I could conscientiously worship; my letter is in my trunk. I have been compelled to see my children join the denominational churches. No Christian preachers come to our country; no evangelist has thought us worth saving. I read our church papers. For our dear Master's sake I beg you to send us an evangelist; listen to an old woman on the verge of eternity who has begged for years for the sound of the primitive gospel. Don't waste money paying for salaries and singers, but take the money and pay for the preaching of the gospel.
ANNA M. PEACE.
Attalla County, Miss.

Under the head of "Entered into the Life Everlasting" the report contains the names of some who have died during the year:

First and most prominent is the name of W. K. Pendleton, former president of Bethany College. Among others we note the names of F. M. Bruner, former president of Abingdon College, and a number of preachers—J. H. Bauserman, Kansas; F. D. Pettit, Missouri; J. S. Kendrick, Kentucky; Mrs. Pardee Butler, Kansas; A. McFadden and Fred Paul Williams, of Iowa; J. W. L. VanVorhis, of Ohio, and others.

BOYS' AND GIRLS' RALLY DAY FOR AMERICA.

This new day, the Lord's day before Thanksgiving, is being well received; the exercise, "Columbia's Call," prepared by Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, with music by J. H. Fillmore, is being largely ordered; it is sent free to every one ordering it.

The totals for the year are:

State Boards	$294,065.38
American Christian Misssionary Society	100,550.99
Foreign Christian Missionary Society	152,600.00
Christian Women's Board of Missions	101,343.54
Board of Church Extension	39,647.06
Board of Ministerial Relief	6,682.48
Grand Total for National Boards	$695,016.83

A PLEA FOR EVANGELISM.

The report contains an earnest plea that a special effort at evangelization be made in closing the century, and suggests that a thousand missionary protracted meetings be held during that year under the auspices of the state or national boards in an effort to round out the century wave of evangelistic fervor.

The report is very interesting to all lovers of the work of missions. It does not argue the question of missions, it gives facts and methods and results. "By their fruits ye shall know them" is a test to which it submits willingly.

The report can be had by dropping a postal card to the secretary, Benj. L. Smith, or C. C. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

(Abstract of the Twenty-fourth Annual Report.)

The past year has been the very best in our entire history. There are many indications that we are living in the rich dawn of a better day. There are sure and certain signs of growth, such as we have never witnessed hitherto.

FINANCES.

The receipts for the year amount to $152,727.38; this is a gain of $21,801.68. The contributing churches, as churches, gave $56,781.77, a gain of $11,131.57. The contributing churches number 3,051, a gain of 144. The Sunday-schools gave $39,071.72, a gain of $4,736.75. The contributing Sunday-schools number 3,180, a gain of 7. The Sunday-schools that reached their full apportionment number 1,002. Nearly 12,500 children raised $1.00 or more each, a gain of 5,632. The bequests reached $9,390.71; this amount represents 16 bequests. The society received in the year on the annuity plan, $22,425.

REINFORCEMENTS.

In the year Dr. Royal J. and Mrs. Eva Dye were sent to Africa, Miss Bertha Marshall to India, Miss Carrie E. Goodrich and P. A. Davey to Japan, Miss Effie D. Kellar to China. L. C. McPherson and wife and Melvin Menges and wife have been appointed to Cuba. They will sail immediately after the convention. F. E. Hagin and wife have been appointed to Japan; their departure has been unavoidably postponed until next year. The great need of the society is the need of men to serve as evangelists. Two men are needed at the present time for Japan. The committee has searched far and near and has not succeeded in finding them. There is no lack of young ladies; ten offer where one can be sent. But men of ability and culture to serve as evangelists are very scarce.

THE MISSIONARIES.

When the last convention was in session word was received that Dr. Biddle was dead. He had left Africa hoping to reach home that he might regain his health. C. E. Garst died in December. He had been on the field since 1883. His death was a great loss to the mission. Miss Rioch, Miss Oldham, Dr. James Butchart and W. R. Hunt and family have returned to their fields. G. L. Wharton and family, J. G. McGavran and family Miss Kate Johnson and Miss Emma Lyon came home on a furlough. F. H. Marshall and family were obliged to resign and leave Japan for good. This was owing to the fact that Mrs. Marshall suffered constantly and severely from Japanese headache. It was with the greatest regret that they resigned and came home.

NEW BUILDINGS.

Money was granted for a home for R. L. Pruett and family in Osaka, Japan. The home for M. B. Madden and family in Sendai has been completed. The Sue A. Robinson Memorial School in Hurda, India, has been completed. Since the year began two bungalows have been finished in India; one at Hurda, the other at Damoh. Another building has been erected at Damoh to serve as school and orphanage. Since the year began money was sent to China for two homes in Shanghai and for one in Lu Cheo fu, and for a chapel and dormitory in Nankin. The room in which the church has been meeting was too small to accommodate all who wished to attend. The dormitory is for the boys in the college.

AFRICA, CUBA, THE PHILIPPINES AND HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The first station in Africa is at Bolengi, some 500 miles from the mouth of the Congo, and two degrees north of the equator. The society paid the American Baptist Union $2,500 for its property at that place; this was less than half what the property cost them. At the Chattanooga Convention it was suggested that some one be sent to look over Cuba with a view of establishing a mission there. Cuba was visited; the committee decided to begin work in Havana at the earliest moment practicable. Men have been selected for this field. Herman P. Williams, chaplain of one of the Iowa regiments in the Philippines, urged that some men be sent to preach the gospel in and around Manila. He has consented to be one of the men to do this work. As soon as the war is over the society expects to send some men to begin work in the Philippines. The society expects to begin work in the Hawaiian Islands very soon. Five thousand dollars has been received for the support of a mission among the Japanee there.

REPORTS FROM THE FIELD.

China.—The missionaries number 25; the native helpers, 58. There are 9 churches, with a combined membership of 400. Additions last year number 122. There are in the school 232 boys and girls. Dr. Macklin treated 11,302 patients; owing to the fact that he was sick part of the year the number of patients is smaller than in other years. He conducts public services every day for the out-patients at the dispensaries, and a Bible class for the in-patients. Three afternoons of the week he visits twelve villages outside of the city. On Sunday morning he has a service for the Christians at the South Gate Dispensary. On Sunday afternoons he holds preaching services at Hia-Kwan. He has prepared several tracts. Every patient receives a Gospel and some tracts. F. E. Meigs reports 35 students in the college, all are Christians except nine. These nine are mostly small boys. Twelve of the students keep the morning watch. The tone of the school is decidedly Christian. In addition to his work in the school he preaches regularly. The industrial department is doing well. It now pays its running expenses. Frank Garrett preaches for the church in Nankin, and visits Pukeo two or three times each month. At Nankin there have been 42 baptisms in the year, and two at Pukeo. The future of the work in Nankin and round about is full of promise. Mrs. Ethel B. Garrett taught two classes in the college. Part of the year she kept up the work of Mrs. Saw at South Gate, Hia-kwan and in the dispensary. She has attended the women's prayer-meeting at Miss Lyon's school as regularly as possible, and has taken her turn at leading. Miss Emma Lyon reports that the boarding-school has done well. The Christian girls seem to be as enthusiastic as ever. Four more were baptized a few months ago. The women's prayer-meeting has been well attended; all the Christians take part. The Sunday-school in the morning has had an average attendance of 36; the afternoon Sunday-school has been attended by from 10 to 100. The boarding-school has now 20 girls; the day school 20 boys and girls. She has spoken to thousands of women in the past year, and urged them to become Christians. Mrs. Saw has carried on work regularly at the South Gate, Hia-kwan and Sanpailo; many women of the middle class come in and listen with much interest. At Sanpailo a Chinese has given a room for a school. In this Bible lessons are given every day. Mrs. Saw has visited the Christian homes on different times; on these visits she has held meetings with the Christians and their neighbors. The outlook is very encouraging. Miss Mary Kelly has devoted the year to evangelistic work. She has visited Luhoh, Lu Cheo fu and Pukeo. Part of the year has been devoted to the care of Dr. Daisy Macklin, who has been seriously ill. At Chu Cheo 504 patients have been seen by T. J. Arnold and Dr. E. I. Osgood. Mr. Arnold has itinerated regularly to Luhoh, and occasionally to Hu Ho Tsz. Dispensary work has been carried on three days each week. The Sunday services have been well attended. The Christians in Luhoh are doing something in the direction of self-support. A school and chapel have been rented in Kwan wu wei; there are ten scholars in the school. Dr. and Mrs. E. I. Osgood have given most of the year to the study of the language. Dr. Osgood has ministered to the sick and suffering. The first year's trials have been few, the blessings many and faith in the mission established. C. E. Molland reports 22 additions at Wuhu, and 36 pupils in Sunday-school. The past year has been one of great blessings. It is the most encouraging year he has seen in China. The work of Mrs. Molland among the women has resulted in much good. The meetings have been exceedingly well attended; this has led to a great increase in the number of women at the regular services. James Ware has preached to not less than 41,000 people in Shanghai and in the country chapels in his circuit. The helpers under him have sold not less than 5,000 Gospels, and have made free distributions of large quantities of Christian literature. Much time has been devoted to pastoral work. The people need careful instruction in all that pertains to life and godliness. He has a training class for native helpers. He reports 18 baptisms. In connection with his work there are two day schools, with 43 scholars in them. The curriculum includes the Bible, geography,

Pain Vanquished

No remedy on earth can ever abolish pain as a whole, for pain is the common lot of all living creatures. We can, however, vanquish pain as a tormentor of the individual, either of man or beast, for this has been done triumphantly for many years by arithmetic and general Christian literature, besides the ordinary Chinese schoolbooks. A girls' day school has recently been opened. A room was turned over to the mission by a mandarin for this purpose. Mrs. Li, the Bible woman, has visited the women in their homes in season and out of season. She has visited thousands of them in their homes, and has led several to accept Christ as their Savior. With W. P. Bentley the past year has been by far the most important of any that he has spent in China. The institute has been completed. The night class numbers 50; the pupils in the day school, 30. Regular services have been held on Sunday and through the week. The attendance has increassed from 30 to 75. Mr. Bentley has published a small paper called the Eastern Star. In addition to his other work he has purchased a lot and erected a home. The number of baptisms is 25; this doubles the church membership in two years. At Lu Cheo fu Dr. Welpton has treated 300 patients. It was his purpose to devote his entire time to the study of the language. The great needs of the people caused him to modify his plans. C. B. Titus reports seven added by baptism. The membership now is 16; 10 others are more or less interested. The Christians pay the incidental expenses, and have $30 in the treasury toward buying a church lot. A weekly prayer-meeting and Sunday-school are maintained. Seven hundred and fifty Gospels and other portions of Scripture were sold. Mrs. Titus receives the women daily. She invites her neighbors and friends to call on Saturday afternoons. She visits in the homes of 30 families as opportunity offers. In January she started a women's prayer-meeting, and in March a children's meeting. She is doing her best to teach the women the gospel. She instructs all the women patients as they come and go from the hospital. She has preached to a number by the wayside.

Japan.—Missionaries, 17; native helpers, 25; churches, 14; combined membership, 611; added in the year, 138; in schools, 269. H. H. Guy has spent most of the year in general evangelistic work. He has traveled over several provinces. He has preached to thousands and sold many Gospels. C. E. Garst was with him for the first few months. They met the brethren and confirmed them in the faith. Mr. Guy has done some work in Tokyo. He has assisted the evangelists in holding meetings at two of the churches. Mrs. Guy has had charge of Miss Rioch's day-school, Sunday-school, and women's meeting, during her absence on furlough. She has held three meetings a week for women, and three for children. She has gone with Mr. Guy on some of his evangelistic trips. Miss Kate Johnson reports that this year marks a new era in Japanese history and a new era in evangelistic work in Japan. She and her Bible woman has spent much time in evangelistic work throughout the country. She has held two meetings for women, two Bible classes for young men and women, besides having a large class of young ladies studying English. Miss Johnson reports that there is no other non-Christian country in the world where missionaries are more kindly treated and given fuller liberty to proclaim the gospel of Christ. Miss Lavenia Oldham returned to Japan about the beginning of the year. She found that several of the members had moved from the church at Tanimachi. Frank H. Marshall held a meeting at that point; before the meeting began she visited every house in the neighborhood and invited people to come. Since then the attendance has been good. She has three meetings in the church each week; one at the school and one at her home, and two Sunday-schools. She writes that Japan was never more ready to hear. F. H. Marshall gave the first part of the year to the study of the language. In the hot season he made an extended tour over the country, visiting places where most of our work is carried on. The month before leaving he had charge of one of the church in Tokyo. Miss Loduska Wirick has had two Sunday-schools, a meeting for children every day, one meeting a week for women and a Bible class every night. In May she took the place left vacant by Miss Oldham and Miss Rioch. She had the care of a church, two Sunday-schools, one day school for poor children and two meetings for women, besides the care of the children in the home. She had also a Bible class for young men, and two meetings a week in her house for special training for women. E. S. Stevens reports nine additions at Akita. The membership there is 87; Sunday-school pupils, 130; out-stations, five. The conversatism has lessened a great deal since the report a year ago. The new treaties admit Japan to the circle of Christian nations. The people believe that the Christian religion is indispensable to a higher civilization, and hence Bibles sell easily. Because of the demand bookstores are laying in a supply. Teizo Kawai returned from Drake University. He is preaching with great acceptance. A good harvest has begun. The missionaries have opened a reading room in Akita, and two others at out-stations. Dr. Nina A. Stevens has continued her medical work. She made 500 visits in the year and entertained many women in her home. She has spent some time preparing two books; one is to help mothers in the care of their children. Dr. Stevens has treated 2,000 patients. She has made one evangelistic trip into the country. Miss Bertha Clawson has been in Japan a little over a year. Most of her time has been spent studying Japanese and studying the lives of the people. She has made two evangelistic trips in the year, accompanied by other missionaries. M. B. Madden reports a membership at Sendai and Fukushima of 29; additions during the year, 14; Sunday-school pupils, 25. The number of inquiries have greatly increased. The zeal of the Christians has been aroused. The work has made steady progress. The Sunday-school has kept up remarkably well. The Japanese evangelists have made a large circle of friends. A large stock of Bibles, books and tracts have been sold. Many who go to buy Bibles stop to inquire, and thus they can guide their feet into the way of peace. Regular meetings and a Sunday-school are held each week. Mrs. Madden has had charge of her home and of three children. Weekly meetings are held for the women; she tries to tell them of the love of Christ. R. L. Pruett and family have moved to Osaka, one of the largest cities in the empire. He has held classes three times a week, and had given lectures on important scriptural themes. On his evangelistic trips Gospels have been sold and tracts distributed and the gospel preached. Many heard for the first time. The opening of Osaka is coincident with the coming in of the new treaties. This is a significant fact. Mrs. Pruett has taught many of the women how to care for infants and how to train their children. These two things are indispensable to the practical acceptance of the gospel. She has also managed to look after two Sunday-schools. More than 3,000 Scripture verses were memorized by the children. Cleanliness and tidiness are manifest changes. She has also held meetings for the women. In addition she has given lessons in practical cooking, knitting and sewing. Osaka is a ripe field for the gospel.

Brief of Church Extension Report.

In making its eleventh annual report to this convention, the Board of Church Extension presents its best.

The new receipts this year from all sources are $47,664.35, a gain over last year of $20,106.69. The board asked for $15,000 in September and received $13,268.06, a gain of $4,797.37 over last September. The returns on loans this year are $16,612.34, making our total receipts from all sources $64,276 69, a gain over last year's receipts of $22,952.28. This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes.

OUR OFFERING FROM THE CHURCHES.

Nothing was spared to make this the best offering for Church Extension in our history. Literature was sent to all our preachers from which to prepare sermons on the work; envelopes and literature were sent free to all churches that called for them; and special editions of our religious weeklies were sent broadcast over the land. An apportionment was sent to each church that was known to have the missionary spirit, suggesting the amount to be raised in order to reach $15,000, the amount called for by the board in this offering. The result was that 954 churches sent $10,093.47, again of 285 churches, and $3,651.13 over last year. While this is a good gain it must be apparent to every lover of the cause that our board could not do much if it depended entirely on the offering day. The matter of offerings from churches is one of increasing concern to your board. More emphasis must be placed upon our offering day and less upon the five-year pledge plan.

Ministerial Relief.

When I was a boy there was not a Christian Church in the community where I lived. A good man often came there and preached in my father's house. My father paid him $5 each visit. This was a large contribution for that time, and this is about all he received for his work in that community. A good church afterward sprang up. He did a similar work in many other communities. He was a noble man. He knew the gospel and preached it with power. I have never heard more effective preaching. When this herald of the cross died he left a widow, but no property. The Board of Ministerial Relief is now helping that good woman. Although in need, she never received any help until the Ministerial Relief came to her aid. She is one of the choice spirits of earth, and richly deserves all that the Ministerial Relief has done or is doing for her.

Another example: A preacher went from Illinois to Kansas years ago. There were few Disciples in the new country. They were not able to support him. He preached on, however, and gave his time and property, and his all, that churches might be planted in the new country. After awhile his health broke down, and he is now old and helpless and penniless. Not to provide for this good man would be a crime. The Ministeriai Relief remembered him. No doubt there are many other examples. These I know personally.

The churches must show their love and gratitude to those who gave their all for them. Some one has appropriately sung:

"Have you had a kindness shown?
Pass it on.
'Twas not given for you alone—
Pass it on.
Let it travel down the years,
Let it wipe another's tears,
Till in heaven the deed appears—
Pass it on."

We will not do our duty as a people until we make more generous provisions for our old, worn-out preachers and their widows. Our numbers and wealth rise up in righteous condemnation.

"The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice bless'd;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes."

Let us crown the ofierings of 1899 with the most generous offering for Ministerial Relief in our history. Let us make glad the heart of A. M. Atkinson and members of the Board of Ministerial Relief. Not only will we cheer them, but we will send a ray of sunshise into many homes where there is want and distress.

The Christian-Evangelist at the Front as Usual.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special left St. Louis Thursday morning, Oct. 12, at 9:30 A. M. and when it glided into Grand Central Station, Cincinnati, Thursday evening, the clock indicated the time as 6:45.

Leaving twenty-five minutes after the special on the B. & O. S-W Ry. it arrived forty five minutes earlier, a difference of one hour and ten minutes in the time consumed in making the trip. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST always gives its readers the best of everything, whether that be food for thought or means of travel.

The train consisted of four coaches and a baggage car drawn by one of the Big Four Railway's magnificent engines. No one was crowded, everything was comfortable and everybody delighted. The train was in charge of Messrs. Green and Knettle of the General Passenger department, and great credit is due them for the excellent way in which everything was managed. The track was kept clear for the Special (a special in fact as well as name), and the engineer ran the engine, as they say in Kentucky, "from end to end." That the roadbed and track were in fine condition, that the rolling stock was of the best, were facts well known to us before we invited our friends to go with us. If there had been a better route to Cincinnati than the C. C. C. & St. Louis Ry. we would have selected it. Moral: read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGLLIST, and you will learn, among other things, how to travel.

JUBILEE NOTES.

Cincinnati is all right. This is official.

Attendance? Why, the opening session was a special convention itself and more arriving hourly.

Thus far we have discovered nothing that has been overlooked by the Cincinnati brethren. The arrangements are systematic and complete.

Overflow meetings are held in the Richmond Street Church. That edifice is crowded to the doors in the same manner as Central Church and yet there are very many who are unable to find comfortable room. In point of attendance and enthusiasm this jubilee convention will certainly be a success; whether a corresponding benefit will be derived from its sessions remains to be determined after Music Hall has been occupied. We need more room and greater quiet.

On Saturday the registration had reached 6,000 and delegates arriving by every train. Meetings were held in the Central Church, Richmond St. Church and Plum St. Presbyterian Church, and still room was at a premium.

A large number of the speakers have not been able to make themselves heard all over the audience, but Bros. G. P. Coler, W. M. Forrest, N. E. Atkinson and Mrs. Catherine F. Lindsay were pleasing exceptions. There may have been others who accomplished this feat when we were not present, for of course we could not be in several places at once.

Kansas City wants the convention next year, and "by the same token" so does Pittsburg. From what can be learned from the advocates of these cities, the convention will certainly go to—well, one or the other. Since we have gotten the entertainment question on a sensible basis we are welcomed in all directions. Truly, "we are a great people," and we do move.

The feeling of fraternity and fellowship is evidenced in a high degree by the unmistakable cordiality with which brethren with opposing views greet each other. Here there is neither "higher criticism" nor "traditionalism," neither "progressive" nor "conservative," but all are "one in Christ Jesus." Verily, we are sometimes better in our acts than in our professions.

Notes and News.

Attention, Ministers!

Your attention is especially called to the fact that our official list of Missouri ministers is now in course of preparation. This will be placed in the hands of Mr. Pratt, chairman S. W. Pass. Assn., and will be strong evidence of your right to a clergy permit for 1900. If, therefore, you have any idea that your address is wrong, it will be largely to your interest to communicate with me at once. A word to the wise is sufficient. Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT, Cor. and R. R. Sec.

The State Convention.

Our State Convention at Jefferson City was all in all a success. Five hundred strong—with much work done by the grand, self-denying men in the field—much money secured—the future all aglow with hopeful signs. Our noble secretary, T. A. Abbott, has nobly stood by the work and the men.

Bro. J. P. Pinkerton, pastor of the Jefferson City Church, worked day and night that all might be comfortably housed and cared for. He succeeded beyond expectations, to the entire satisfaction of all. The church is in a healthful condition, increasing in numbers and power for good. Rro. J. P. P. is the right man in the right place. W. C. ROGERS.

Dedication.

The new and beautiful house of worship just completed at Northwood, Ontario, was formally opened and dedicated on Lord's day, Oct. 8th.

It was our privilege to be present on this glad occasion and preach the opening sermon, raise the money to provide for the indebtedness and dedicate the house.

The house is of brick and stone, with steel roof and cathedral glass windows. It is built in modern style with corner entrance and pulpit in opposite corner. It is well lighted and furnished and is a delightful place for worship. Bro. George T. Camp is the hard-working pastor. L. L. CARPENTER.
Wabash, Ind.

Items From New York.

Ministers of the various churches have returned from their vacations and church work is being planned and begun for greater good than ever before.

We greatly enjoyed Bro. Willis' church and Sunday-school at 169th Street two weeks ago. The foundation for larger work has been laid at Bro. Willis' church and their mission. More than seventy bright, interested boys and girls were in their Sunday-school infant class and the general attendance was excellent.

After the morning service two persons confessed Christ, two united by letter and two more were received into the church, having been baptized the Lord's day previous. Bro. Willis is doing a noble work.

On the 15th of September a royal welcome was given Bro. Philputt by our 119th Street congregation, upon his safe return from Europe. This church seems as one person, so united are they in every good work for the furtherance of the gospel. Bro. Philputt's Christian life and labors have endeared him to all who know, him and those who have only been indirectly benefited by his good influence; both value and respect him. October 10th is their C. E. anniversary, and more than one hundred devoted young people will furnish the program.

Last Lord's day our 56th Street Church heartily greeted Bro. Denham as pastor, who comes with a heart of faith, believing God's work will be greatly advanced by each individual of the church and the spirit of Christ's life be felt by the entire community.

We believe every member of our three churches here will join heart and hand in the fall campaign for the Lord's cause in this city.

Organize A Reading Circle at Once.

Every church should be an educational center. It should have a school of higher grade, wider scope and more definite aim than the average Sunday-school. The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses are admirably designed to meet this need. Concise handbooks are provided for Bible study, the study of missions and the study of the plea and history of the Disciples. Two successful years have demonstrated the wisdom of this plan. Every Christian Endeavor Society, every C. W. B. M. Auxiliary and every church ought to investigate the merits of these courses at once. Full and free information will be sent on application to J. Z. Tyler, 798 Republic Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

Heaven.

Say! what is heaven? that land on high,
Beyond the bright and starlit sky.
They tell me of its streets so fair,
Its crystal streams beyond compare;
Where angels dwell in realms of light,
Clad in their garments, spotless white,
Where pain and sorrow ever cease;
If this be heaven, then heaven is peace.

Say! what is heaven? that land on high,
Beyond the beauteous, sunlit sky;
Where parting never more shall be,
When we have crossed the narrow sea,
And casting down each toil and care,
We find a blessed welcome there;
Where pleasure is without alloy;
If this be heaven, then heaven is joy.

Say! what is heaven? that distant land,
Where dwell the sainted, holy band,
Who, suffering toil and trouble here,
With many a heartache, many a tear,
Have gladly laid their crosses down,
And have received their starry crown,
There leaning on their Savior's breast;
If this be heaven, then heaven is rest.

Say! what is heaven? sometimes so near
That, listening, we can almost hear
The chanting of the angel throng,
Who praise with everlasting song
Their dear Redeemer and their God,
Whose name forever more adored;
Around his throne their songs they raise;
If this be heaven, then heaven is praise.

Say! what is heaven? can we tell more
Until we reach the other shore?
Where dear ones wait upon the strand
To welcome us with loving hand;
Where Jesus stands with brightest face
And shows us our appointed place;
There, reunited round his throne;
Yes, this is heaven, for heaven is home.

"Dodge."

MINNIE E. HADLEY.

It was raining heavily the evening that Miriam Ribeaut came out from the first prayer-meeting ever held in the elegant new stone church of the first Methodist congregation in the city of L——.

Miriam was a bright, thoughtful young woman of about twenty years of age, the only child of Pierre Ribeaut, one of the wealthiest manufacturers in the city and one who had made large contributions for the erection of the handsome edifice, in the door of which Miriam was standing on this particular night.

"Father will come for me," she thought as she watched the different members make their various little preparations to meet the drenching storm and then rush bodly out into it.

Now they were all gone and Miriam was left in the great church alone.

Nine o'clock came, ten; the janitor had put out all the lights save one dim one in the vestibule, and from the stertorous breathing which came through the half-open door of the auditorium, Miriam knew that he was indulging in the luxury of a snug little nap in one of the soft, velvety cushioned pews.

"Father is late to-night; I fear there is some trouble at the factory," she thought to herself.

Pierre Ribeaut was a stern, inflexible, shrewd business man, who by his excellent management no less than by his unflinching extortion of employees, had reaped enormous profits from his immense manufacturing establishment.

Just now, however, his men were on a strike. Their poverty-stricken condition had become intolerable and their employer's most liberal contribution of two hundred thousand dollars to the elegant new church of L—— was the last feather that broke the camel's back.

He was not the man to give in to his rebellious employees, and the report was abroad that he had ordered the importation of three thousand working Italians.

The door leading into the church library was just opposite that of the auditorium, and as both were slightly ajar, Miriam noticed a peculiar phenomenon—the snoring of the janitor seemed to produce an echo in the library.

Was it an echo, or somebody? She tiptoed to the door, pushed it gently back and peered into the darkness.

The sounds became louder and more distinct.

Some one was sleeping behind the door.

Who could be prowling about the church at that hour of the night?

Immediately she turned on the incandescent light which was just in front of her.

A ragged urchin of about fifteen years of age sprang to his feet, began rubbing his eyes and looking about in a bewildered sort of fashion.

She recognized the face at once. It was Dodge Devinn, the famous gutter snipe of L——, whose home had always been the streets and whose father was the notorious Paul Devinn, the most radical and desperate of her father's employees.

She had never seen the boy before, but his picture together with a brief sketch of his life had appeared in the Morning Chronicle a few days previous in connection with a famous bank burglary in which he was suspected to have been an accomplice.

"What do you want here?" asked Miriam kindly. "Aren't you Dodge Devinn?"

"Waal now, that's clever!" exclaimed the boy in a tone of surprise as he folded his arms with an air of independence and stared Miriam full in the face.

"Yes, I'm Dodge Devinn an' you're Miriam Ribeaut. Ye see I got ther glint of a squint at yer the evenin' ye were down in yer dad's factory distributin' flowers ter them starvin' cusses es didn't care a piccyune fur all ye give 'em, but ud a much ruther had sumthin' ter fill up their empty breadbaskets. But I guess yer a purty good sort o' gal es rich jades go. Ye see I'm here ter sleep. But your'e been prowlin' about an' playin' ther deuce with my lawful an' rightful slummers. Ain't it 'bout time yer apologizin'?"

With this he placed his arms akimbo, drew himself up to a very majestic height with a semi-dramatic air and a mischievous little twinkle in his eye that forced Miriam to laugh outright.

"How comic you are?" she said.

"But why are you here such a rainy night as this?"

"That's jest it Miss."

"Ye see my reg'lar sleepin' apartments is away down town beside a certain big black woolly dog which kindly tuk me in, all of which dog and blanket you'll find in a very dark and very dirty dog kennel, in a very dark and very damp coal cellar under a very delapidated shack of a house in a very out-of the-way street. But that's no matter, only the rain beat in my face a little too brisk to-night, an' I jes' run down here ter sleep a spell, but what the duece you doin' here this time o' night?"

"Waiting for father?" said Miriam. "I think he must be detained at the factory. It seems cruel of his men to treat him so."

"Snakes alive! gal, what air you talkin' 'bout?" exclaimed Dodge in a tone of amazement as he threw himself upon the floor, propped his head upon his elbow and motioned Miriam to the nearest chair.

"Don't ye know them strikers is a starvin', actually starvin'? You rich uns pens yersels up hyur in yer fine churches like butterflies in a bandbox till yer don't hev no idy the sufferin' an' groanin' an' wailin' es is goin' on right under yer turned-up noses. An' ye call yersels Christyuns!

"Why jeemsus cousins! The old devil never hed a thrivener business than he's got in this hyur high folutin' church o' yourn. An' jes' es sure es that high-minded, close-fisted dad o' yourn give two hundred thousand dollars fur ter build this church, jes that sure it's money made by takin' bread, yes bread, from the mouths o' little sufferin' children an' a takin' the very clothes off thur backs. Is that yer idy o' Jesus Christ an' what yer crack yersels up ter be?"

"I don't know," answered Miriam in a tone of mingled surprise and perplexity—surprise at the boy's unusual precocity, and perplexed to know that the labor question had two sides.

"But are they really so poor?" she asked. "Is it possible that my father's employees haven't even the bare necesiities?"

"Jes step down ter Broad Alley, Miss, an' be yer own witness.

"Ye kin grasp the sityuation in less then an hour an' a little whiff o' them rotten districks 'ill stimulate yer soul.

sister one cold actually freeze ter death cause we had no fire ter warm the room, an' a layin' thar sick?"

"An' arter she's dead an' I see them soft little han's a layin' thar stiff an' cold an' them little cheeks once so purty an' pink, now cold and white like marble, I ses ter myself, 'John James Devinn, yer a fool an' a villyan, you've let the dearest thing o' yer life perish right afore yer eyes, when the world's arunnin' over with stuff that ud a fed an' a clothed her,' an' then I vowed a solemn vow afore God thet es long es John James Devinn was blessed with han's an' legs, the other two little uns ud never want fur nothin' an' that's what's started me inter ther equalizin' business."

"What's that?" asked Miriam curiously.

"Astealin' from ther rich ter give to the poor. Fur instance, see a swellhead a spurtin' down Boulevard with a broadcloth suit, diamond sit watch an' fat pocketbook, I jes says see hyur old codger! yer got more'n yer share ole feller. Jes diffy up with some o' them empty stomachs down hyur on Rag Alley. So like a flash I jes swipes the pocketbook an' uses the proceeds afillin' up empty breadbaskets. Don't you see?"

"Don't you ever feel that you are doing wrong?" asked Miriam.

"Pooh! wrong! What's right in this world? Lazy lummixes a swelterin' in their riches an' honest white folks astarvin'.

"No, Miss, I feel I'm adoin' my Christyun duty an' adoin' it nuff sight better'n any church member yer got in this high an' mighty edifice o' yourn. This unequal dividin' business es the work o' the devil an' I'm proceedin' ter straighten things out es the Lord would hev 'em.

"But I see yer got yer Bible there. Could yer jes kneel down an' offer a' word o' prayer fur a poor devil o' a feller like me?"

Something in his tone told Miriam that he was not sincere.

She wore a beautiful gold necklace set with rubies and emeralds, which he seemed to be studying very intently.

Something occurred to her. Quick as a flash she drew from her chatelaine a small round mirror concealed in the folds of her handkerchief which she held unnoticed by the boy in the palm of her hand directly beneath her eyes as she knelt by the massive oaken chair to pray. It was a simple, touching little prayer, although she was intently watching through the mirror every movement of the boy behind her.

She saw him stealthily approaching her from behind.

He unclasped the necklace, slipped it deftly from her neck and was about to be off with it when Miriam turned with the strength and quickness of a maddened tigress, grabbed the theif by the coat collar and began shaking him soundly.

"How dare you?" she said. "How dare you be so base as to take the advantage of me in that way?"

She kept on shaking with all her strength till she was forced to sink down into the large oaken chair from sheer exhaustion.

"Thunder an' lightenin' an' hail storms an' water spouts!" ejaculated the astonished boy, while his eyes fairly glowed with the admiration they bespoke.

"Well, you beat Jerusalem jumps! If you 'ud a been ther chief perlice my name 'ud a never been Dodge an' that's a fact. I'll be boozled if you ain't a genuine up-ter-date cracker-jack fer pluck an' grit, but what ye gwine ter do with me?"

"Nothing," said Miriam, "only pray for you and ask you to pray for yourself. You may have the necklace. Take it and get yourself food and clothes. Probably I have no right to it any way when there is so much starvation and suffering right at our door. I am sure I shall be the better Christian without it.

"I give along with it this Bible. Read a chapter from it each day and pray God to keep you a good boy. Do not steal any more and if ever you are in need, come to me and I shall help you. Will you promise me?"

Miriam had taken the boy's dirty round face in both of her hands and was gazing kindly and sorrowfully into the bright blue eyes while two large tears were trickling slowly down her cheeks.

"Yer good!" he said in faltering tones as he drew his tattered sleeve slowly across his own wet eyes. "God knows I'd like ter promise yer! But I can't do it, my dear leddy, and be a gutter snipe, too. I've got ter ekalize things. I've got ter watch arter ther poor an' see thet ther rich don't trample 'em down. Why, don't yer know that a lot o' good souls 'ud starve ef I didn't steal from ther rich an' gin it to 'em? But I do want ter please yer, cause yer a good gal an' I like yer, I do thet, an' I'll jest read a little mite f'm it ever day cause you've asked me to, an' I'll pray ter God more'n I do, though I do consid'ble of it now an' sometimes I ask him ter help me in my work o' ekalizing."

Miriam smiled at this seeming absurdity and sincerity. Without knowing how or why, she suddenly drew the little brown, dusty face up to her own and kissed it.

The boy simply stared at her in amazement. Never before had he received a kiss from any woman, and it proved the sacred seal that was to mold his life into a better and purer manhood. For a moment he held the white jeweled hand to his lips as if in silent prayer. Then, taking the Bible and necklace he left the church without another word.

From the church door Miriam watched him slink into one of the dark alleys and disappear.

A few moments later she heard him singing his accustomed night song away down the street, but notwithstanding his seeming levity his voice was sad:

"O, I'm the jolliest of ther jolly,
I sing an' sport but thet ain't allee,
My home is in the filthy gutter,
An' all I want's my bread and butter.
I never had a mam nor dad,
So I'm not very good an' I'm not very bad.

Tah, rah, rah, rah, boom te-a

"Dodge's sleeping-place was with Mike Donnelley's cross bulldog in a secluded corner of a filthy old coal cellar under Donnelley's saloon and in one of the most wretched quarters of the city.

To-night as Dodge took up the iron grating on the sidewalk and swung himself down, as he was wont, the dog gave a low growl.

"What's that?" said a low, rough voice, and Dodge realized that there were other guests in the cellar besides himself. It was but the work of a moment to silence the dog. A few gentle strokes from the one he knew so well and all was quiet. Then Dodge stretched himself out flat between the huge quadruped and the cellar wall to listen.

By the pale glimmer of a dark lantern, he saw in the opposite corner of the cellar seven or eight desperate-looking men, all of whom he immediately recognized as the employes of Pierre Ribeaut. Mike Donnelley, the owner of the saloon and cellar, was one of them, and a more desperate, bloodthirsty villain was not to be found.

The one who had said, "What's that?" when the dog growled, was Paul Devinn, Dodge's own father.

"It's my watchdog," answered Mike gruffly. "I'd like ter see ther man es kin prowl about these premises 'thout him a knowin' it, but I'll jes satisfy ye that they ain't nothin' wrong.

Dodge flattened himself out like a pancake and held his breath, but he could see the wild villainous glare of murder and intoxication in the saloonkeeper's eye, as he got a peep at him from behind the dog's huge body.

"They ain't nothin' ther but ther dog," he said, going over to his companions. "He's hevin' bad dreams, I guess."

Dodge could only gather little scraps of what they were saying, but he was not slow in putting two and two together.

They were planning to blow up Pierre Ribeaut's immense factory with dynamite to kill as many of the foreign workmen as they could along with the employer himself and then skip the country.

It seemed they had already made immense excavations under the building. The dynamite was there, everything was ready and the fuse would be fired the following day before noon. But first they would hold another meeting in the coal cellar the following morning at eight o'clock.

Finally the ruffians disbanded.

Dodge stealthily climbed from his hiding-place, raised the iron grating, jumped out onto the pavement and was again lost in darkness.

He had an idea.

It was about four o'clock the next morning when Miriam Ribeaut was suddenly awakened by some one throwing sand against her bedroom window.

It was Dodge Devinn.

"Lem me in jest a minute," he said excitedly.

Miriam admitted him to the library by a back entrance and pledging herself to secrecy he told her all that he had overheard.

No amount of persuasion could force him to reveal their names. He would not turn traitor to his own kith and kin.

So careful was he to shield the assassins, that Miriam divined his secret and guessed that his father was one of them.

"Ef I hadn't a seen yer in ther church a while ago, they might'a blowed ther hull thing to Jerrycho. It's only fur yer sake, Miss, thet I'm tryin' ter save yer factory an' yer dad; but mind, yer not to blow a word on't till my plans are ripe. Jes you write these here two letters as I tell yer, in big handwritin' like a man's."

The first she wrote at Dodge's dictation upon a blank sheet of paper stamped with the office mark of the Chief of Police, which Dodge had swiped for the special purpose. It read:

"Your plans are detected. Mark Jerome, Chief of Police, knows the whole business. He will meet you with a large force of men when you attempt to blow up the factory this forenoon as you have planned. Take my advice and clear the country at once else you are all dead men."

[Signed] A FRIEND,
From Police Headquarters.

The second letter was addressed to Chief of Police, Mark Jerome himself, and read:

"There is a conspiracy afoot to blow up Pierre Ribeaut's factory with dynamite just before dinner to-day. Look beneath the cellar on the South Side and see the excavations. Be prompt and lose no time, else hundreds of lives may be lost."

[Signed] ONE WHO KNOWS ALL ABOUT IT.

He put the letters into separate envelopes tying strings around each of them,to which he had attached a small pebble.

"Now, remember, mum's the word Miss," he said, going out. "I only come ter yer cause I had ter get some one ter do ther writin' an' I knowed I could trust yer not ter blab arter yer 'ud promised."

When the conspirators assembled at eight o'clock ripe for their bloody work, Dodge's mysterious letter came flying through the iron grating at them like a thunderbolt. Surprise, dismay, panic, flight was the re sult.

Giving the conspirators a little time in which to make good their escape, as he was bound to save his father from death or the prison, he threw the second letter in at the open window of the Chief of Police, hitting Mark Jerome square in the face.

Thus Dodge saved both his own father from punishment and the factory from destruction.

From that day on the friendship between Dodge and Miriam grew apace. The former was given a place to work in the Ribeaut factory, attended night school, gave up his peculiar mode of "ekalizin' " and the Bible, which Miriam had given him, he loved better than anything else on earth save one—the giver herself.

Dodge developed wonderful business capacity, receiving one promotion after another until twelve years later when the firm became known as that of Ribeaut and Devinn.

A few years later on the death of Pierre Ribeaut Miriam transferred her share along with herself to Dodge Devinn.

Strikes are wholly unknown, for Dodge and Miriam are Christians in fact as well as in name, who study the happiness and prosperity of their employes rather than their oppression.

"Dodge's great Christian work of "ekalization" still goes on, but in a somewhat different mode from that of his boyhood days.

The Red Box Clew.—IV.

When the hack stopped, Frank Douglas stared helplessly at the great house with the strange people sitting on the porch, till the hackdriver told her this was the place, and that she had been paid for. So the girl climed out, and passed through the gate, feeling almost as if she were taking a liberty, and the hack drove away; and Frank had a queer feeling that her last friend was deserting her. It was a long walk to the front steps, along a gravel path, with flowers on either side, and beyond them, perfectly kept lawns, that looked more like pictures than real grass where ants and crickets and things live and crawl. By the time she had reached the steps, she had gained a good impression of the mansion. It was of red brick, with a great front porch to which huge stone pillars gave an air of heaviness. This broad porch extended the width of the house, and there was a brick wall about three feet high along the margin, instead of a railing, and over this guard wall heavy vines were trailing. At one end of the house was a covered place in which you drove to get out of your carriage, and not one drop of rain could reach you; and at the opposite end of the house was the very best thing, in Frank's opinion. This was a massive round tower—at least it was round except for the side where it joined to the main building—and, like the house, it was three stories high. Only, the third story was open, just like a covered porch, with doors opening upon it from the real house. Its roof was supported by pretty stone columns, and there was a brick wall around it, just like the front porch, except, of course, there were no vines up there. All this Frank discovered in two or three timid glances, and she thought the family must be very happy to live in such a home. As she reached the end of the walk, she discovered a handsome lady of middle age seated on the porch behind the wall; and this lady had a stern, haughty face, as if the porch were a fort and she had been left to guard it against this very stranger. On the steps sat a young lady and a boy of fourteen. And beside the proud lady was a girl a few years younger than Frank—this must be Vega Clarmont, the deaf girl.

"Who are you, my girl? said Mrs. Clarmont in a tone that implied she took no pleasure in the ownership her words asserted.

Frank was greatly embarrassed. "Bro. Wilton said you would expect me, Mrs. Clarmont. I am the one you engaged to—to wait on your little daughter."

"Well!" said the lady sharply, "I suppose you have a name?"

"Frank Douglas is my name."

"I did not engage you," said the lady, "but my husband did, without having the condescension to inform us. So, I can tell you, your coming is entirely unexpected. But you are here, and there's no way for you to get back, that I know of. Where are you from, child?"

"St. Louis."

"Very well. I dare say that is as good a place to come from as another; there is no occasion for looking so glum, my child. Mercy upon us—she is going to cry!"

But Frank, by a great effort, fought the tears. "Indeed, I am not," she said bravely. "But didn't you advertise for me? Didn't you want a girl to wait on your little daughter?"

Yes, but I expected to see the girl first. Then I could have told how I would like her. But it is possible that you may do after all"—her tone expressed serious doubts—"so cheer up, don't make matters worse by crying over them. I am not going to give two dollars a week to a girl just to come and have her cry for us."

"It is a great deal of money," said Frank earnestly. "I will do my best to deserve it."

"Come, that's better! As to your name being Frank, or Jim, or any other boy's name, its preposterous. So you'll be Fanny to me."

"I like Frank," said the little stranger. "I like to be called Frank."

"Do you? Interesting! I shall call you Fanny—that is, if you stay here long enough to be called anything. And your parents live in St. Louis?"

"I have no parents," said Frank.

"Oh! Now, here is Vega. You have heard she is entirely deaf, I suppose. What I want you to do is to amuse her." All this time Vega had been staring straight before her, as if she had not discovered Frank's existence.

"Can she talk?" Frank asked, instinctively lowering her voice.

"Of course she can talk," returned Mrs. Clarmont. "But she doesn't like to, any more. She has almost entirely ceased speaking—for, you know, she can't hear her own voice."

"Oh!" said Frank, and again her eyes were filled with tears. But this time, Mrs. Clarmont did not seem to object to them.

"Yes," spoke up Clara Clarmont, "and you'll think it is 'oh!' before you are with her long, and she wants something, and you are just crazy to find out what it is, and Vega will not speak out and tell you, but just sulks!"

"Daughter!" said Mrs. Clarmont.

"Oh, I know," returned the irrepressible Clara. "And I'm glad this girl has come, and I hope she'll do, I can say. If she can amuse Vega, and take her off my hands, I'll bless St. Louis for furnishing her to us. Of course I love Vega—isn't she my own sister? Yes, I've been pent up, mother, I've been pent up!"

Mrs. Clarmont put her arm around her afflicted daughter and kissed her, but Vega maintained her statuesque position. The lady turned to the little stranger. "Well, Fanny, perhaps you have come at the right time, perhaps you are the right girl, after all. I shall be surprised if all turns out well, but I shall be thankful, of course. So consider yourself hired. You may as well begin right now. Come up here, and amuse her!"

With very doubtful steps, Frank ascended to the porch. "How is it done, ma'am?" she inquired.

"That's it!" spoke up Clara. "We don't know. That's what you are for—to find out, and then practice it."

"Come!" cried the lady impatiently, "amuse her!"

Frank stared helplessly at the impassive Vega.

Clara spoke; "Frank looks like she needed somebody to amuse her."

"I'll tell you what, "said Ronald, speaking for the first time, "I believe Bob, or whoever she is, is tired out by her trip, and is starving for supper. It stands to reason she hasn't had any supper. It isn't fair to set her at Vega on an empty stomache!"

Frank was so relieved by these words that she turned and gave Ronald a smile. He had saved her from an embarrassing position, for she was placed in the hands of the housekeeper, who seated her to a cold lunch. The housekeeper was stout and short with a comfortable face and a friendly voice. Her name was Mrs. Dew. She helped Frank generously, then looked on with beaming approbation as the ham and egg salad, milk and cake disappeared. The girl stole frequent side glances at the housekeeper. When she had finished, Mrs. Dew startled her by demanding, "Well, what do you think of me?"

Frank blushed and laughed, and then went up to her. "I think you are good," she said, taking one of the hard-working hands in both of hers. "And, oh! won't you be my friend?"

"Of course I will," returned the other, giving her a hug. "And I'm thinking you'll need one in this business." Well, it doesn't take long to find kindness in the world when you are looking for it! And life is full of happy chances. For instance, when Frank went slowly back to the front, she found that Vega had grown sleepy, and was demanding, with imperative gestures, to be put to bed. So Frank, who was heavy in every muscle and idea from her own weariness, escaped to her attic room, in the company of Mrs. Dew. It was above the third story, and consisted of a great unpartitioned space, in which were many strange boxes and objects unknown to the child. Near a dormer window stood Mrs. Dew's bed, and the housekeeper prepared another for Frank. The latter's trunk had come, and her things were disposed in closets. There were no electric lights in the attic, so Mrs. Dew lit her a lamp, then left the child alone. It was very lonely away up there, in what she called "the fourth story," but after she had undressed, she sat beside the table in her nightgown and opened her well-worn Bible. And there she read, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally." That was just what she needed; wisdon in dealing with poor Vega, and in arousing in her gloomy soul an interest in the world about her, and in the world above. So she knelt and asked him with the whole faith of a little child. And after that the attic seemed neither too large nor too lonesome. That night the rare, sweet dream came to her that had visited her at intervals for years. It was the dream of meeting her mother somewhere in a great palace. And her mother loved her—oh, as much as a mother can love. Frank asked, "How did I get lost from you, dear mother?" And then she saw a face—a woman's face, dark and wild; Frank feared that face. But her mother caught her up and bore her away to a deep sleep.

THE JOY OF THE RETURN.*

We have already noticed in connection with the lesson for October 1st the general character of the psalms, those expressions of a religious nature which were produced at various periods through history. We have also noticed the prevalence of the thought of David's relation to the collection as a whole, not in the sense that he composed all of the psalms, but that he is known to have set the type of his particular kind of religious literature. The present studies are representative of two types of psalms: the 85th belongs to those composed by or dedicated to the sons of Korah, a guild of singers organized to assist in the worship at the second temple in Jerusalem; while Psalm 126 belongs to the "songs of ascents," some fifteen in number, which were probably hymns composed for use as pilgrim songs on the way up to Jerusalem to attend the great feasts. They are also in some particulars descriptive of the feelings of those who returned from exile, and it is practically certain that this psalm was one which voiced the joy of the returning captives.

The first section of Psalm 85 is expressive of the joy of those who found Jehovah favorable and the dark days of captivity past. The fact that God had brought deliverance to his people by inclining the heart of the king of Persia to grant them freedom to return to their home was always a ground of grateful meditation to the Jew, both of the captivity and of later days. "The Captivity of Jacob" was a favorite phrase for the period of Babylonian exile. It was recognized that this experience was the result of national sin. All the past had prepared for the catastrophe by adding selfishness and forgetfulness of God to the overt acts of rulers and people; but the deliverance from Babylon was the proof that God had changed his attitude toward his people either because of their repentance or because the majesty of his own name and his reputation as the ruler of nations demanded that Israel after its period of probation and chastisement should be returned to its own land for a further opportunity of service. The second section of this psalm, beginning with the fourth verse, seems to present less favorable conditions and reflects a still later period of the national history, during the days of depression which followed the beginnings of revival at Jerusalem, and which preceded, probably, the advent of Nehemiah and Ezra at Jerusalem. The situation was so depressing and discouraging that many felt that after all the providence of God had only partially manifested itself in the return from exile. It is not necessary to suppose that the two sections of the psalm came from different periods or different authors, though this is possible. It is sufficient to notice that they reflect different states of mind, the first part being the meditation of the psalmist upon the mercy of the past and the second part upon the discouragements of the present. The deliverance from Babylon ought, however, to be the ground of expectation of renewed blessings, even under the most adverse circumstances, but it was characteristic of the Hebrew to find in every period of misfortune the signs of Jehovah's anger against him as an individual or against the nation. Such is the case in this instance. The psalmist wonders if the anger of God is to continue forever; and after his prayer for mercy (vs. 8) he waits to hear what reply will come from the divine voice. The spirit of confidence on the part of Old Testament saints is especially noteworthy. In a time when there was so little to encourage the people of God and when the community of truly pious men was small, it was a great attainment to possess such faith that even in the midst of unfavorable surroundings one could look up in confidence and say: "I will wait for God, because I know that he will do what is right, and that in the end all will be well." The forces of the universe are set toward righteousness and peace. The man, therefore, that has these qualities in his nature is one who from the necessities of the case must succeed, no matter what his present afflictions may be.

In Psalm 126 another phase of the joy of the returned exiles is expressed. These words seem to be the utterance of one who had come from Babylon, or one who living in Jerusalem had heard together with his fellow-Jews of the release of their brethren and of their approach on the return to Judah. It was all like a dream, this favorable outcome of the long period of captivity. Song and laughter alone could express the feelings of the people. Even the nations were astonished and said: "Truly, Jehovah has done great things for his people," and the psalmist adds, "The Lord hath indeed done great things for us." But much yet remained to be done. The promises had not yet been fulfilled in anything like completeness. The conditions in Jerusalem were not all that had been expected, and so the prayer is for the complete restoration of prosperity and the divine favor until, like the freshets of the southland in the spring, the streams of blessing shall flow. The people even in the time of the psalmist seem to be sowing under adverse circumstances and in tears, but they shall reap in joy. He is confident that the one who thus goes forth with the precious seeds of righteousness and the truth of God shall bring back from his reaping a harvest worth all the labor and sorrow of the past.

These psalms, like many others, have the unique value of expressing, not only the emotions of that particular situation, but of every similar one in Christian experience. There are many occasions in which the church comes to a time of great opportunity and blessing and every heart is elated with the satisfactions of success. But afterwards there is a reaction, and depression sets in. It is in just such moments that the soul needs to look in upon itself and take inventory of its real and spiritual possessions, and upward to God, and remember his faithfulness and eternity. The Christian experience that depends upon external circumstances to keep alive its joy has a poor foundation against the time of need. The activity of Christian service is one of the means of producing a kind of exaltation which often seems to be all that one's nature can attain; and yet there are sure to come moments of depression when plans fail and friends misunderstand. It is in such moments that the real foundations of a nature are revealed. One needs to have these fixed abiding-places in communion with God and a soul that is based upon the great verities of the faith, so that it cannot be swept away from its sure foundations. Thus the psalms, saturated as they are with experiences of this and every other kind, are the most helpful of aids to the religious life of to-day, even though they voice many sentiments which do not find place in the Christian catalogue. But their higher and richer utterances have never been surpassed, even in the Christian centuries.

WHY is it that the brands of White Lead made by quick or patent process are almost invariably sold below the price of standard brands?

Because practical painters and consumers generally know that they are inferior to the brands made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion. The brands named in margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 29.

A MEASURE OF LOVE.

(Mark 12:41-44)

(A Meeting to Consider Systematic and Proportionate Giving.)

There is something very impersonal about pouring money into a great treasury box. "It cannot be love for anybody in particular, can it," says some one, "that actuated this poor widow to pour her money into the treasury? How is it a measure of love?" Well, that great temple, with its courts and altars, its treasury and its offerings, were all emblems to her of the God and the nation that she loved. Her heart was stirred at the sight of them, yes, even at the thought of them; and, impersonal as it all was, she wished to make her offering. It has ever been characteristic of the most devoted of the race to make gifts of their most precious things to their God or gods.

In a state of advanced civilization, such as ours, shall we be behind the childhood of the race? "So impersonal the appeals are," are objects. "I am asked to pay into a treasury, to a board, or at the most definite to a nation on the other side of the world." Well, the Lord's treasury, is it not emblem of the Lord? The Lord's people everywhere, are they not emblem of himself? Inasmuch as ye do it unto one of the least of these, inasmuch as ye do it unto all of these distant and unknown ones in the mass, ye do it unto me. He who loves a fellowman or his fellowmen unselfishly, even impersonally, if we can so speak, loves, just in so far, his God.

Furthermore, it is not a false measure of one's love to test it by the proportion of one's giving. The right hand should not know the left hand's gift; and the Pharisees do not know the widow's sacrifice; but Jesus knows what the left hand and the widow do, and both he tests by the proportion of their gift. He who loves much gives and forgives largely. He loves little is niggardly of money and of mercy. After all it is not the gift of the hand so much as the gift of the heart that he considers. Not the size of the gift, but the heart-value of it; not the amount of effort that it costs, but the amount of free will with which it comes. The widow who gave her all was doing more than the Pharisees, who gave a tithe; not because it cost her a greater struggle than their gifts cost, for probably it did not, but because it cost her less, because she gave more freely.

The system of one's giving is also a test. Not the spasmodic effort, not the effervescent enthusiasm wins a battle; but the steady, thoroughgoing organization. Not the impulse of a sentimental moment supports missions, but the cool, calculated, far-sighted and systematic offerings. Let us seek to be, not only systematic, but also proportionate. The larger the proportion and the more rigid the system the better.

A Stomach Out of Order is a poor assistance in furnishing blood and bone. It hinders rather than assists the system in its work. A weak or dyspeptic stomach is the foundation of many ailments. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer, the old Swiss-German remedy, regulates and strengthens the digestive organs while it purifies the blood and invigorates the system. It was discovered by an old German physician and has been in use for over one hundred years, though not extensively advertised. It seldom fails to cure all diseases caused by impoverished or impure blood or from a disordered stomach.

Not a drug store medicine. It is sold by regular Vitalizer agents. Write Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 So. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Perfection of the Holy Scriptures.

By F. D. Power, Director.

We hear the deacon's prayer, "Lord, we thank thee that we live in a land of Bibles!" without realizing its significance. We have only to go back to the reign of Henry V. to find a law decreed by our English ancestors, that whosoever shall read the Scriptures in the mother tongue shall "forfeit land, cattle, life and goods, and shall be condemned as heretics to God, enemies to the crown and most arrant traitors to the land!" Our debt to better laws, to Bible societies that make it possible for every man to own and read the sacred Scriptures and to the Bible itself, which has wrough this marvelous change, we can never fully estimate.

1. The perfection of the Scriptures appears when we consider them with respect to their Author. "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture" is a title that may not attract us, but when we observe the writer is William E. Gladstone, we are at once interested. In the Bible God has spoken. As the child bears the image of the parent, this has the marks of his authorship. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." "Holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." "God, who at sundry times and in divers positions spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these days spoken unto us by a Son."

There are but two possible ways of acquiring a knowledge of the mind of God—by reason and by revelation. Reason is a noble faculty of the soul, but with this alone man has neither been fully acquainted with the perfection of the true God nor the acceptable manner of worshiping him, as appears from the history of nations and ages without the advantage of revelation. Men in the possession of reason have "changed the glory of the incorruptible God unto an image made like corruptible man and to birds and four-footed beasts and creeping things," and have reared "altars to the Unknown God." Barbarous nations, men with only the light of nature, are buried in ignorance and superstition. This shows the necessity of revelation, or of such a discovery of God's will as is contained in the Old and New Testaments. So "the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying" the things accredited to them, and in like manner to Isaiah, Jeremiah, to Matthew and John, to Paul and Peter. To determine whether these men spoke for God we have but to ask: What is their moral character? Were they virtuous and holy persons, who dare not declare or deliver anything as a revelation from God but what they were fully satisfied they had received from him? What is the character of their doctrine? Is it according to godliness? What of their credentials? Miracles were one proof of a divine mission, prophecies another. Did these accompany this revelation?

All these marks are to be found in the sacred Oracles. The prophets and apostles were men of integrity and piety; their doctrine reasonable and just and worthy of a divine origin; their mission authenticated by signs and wonders. We cannot conceive of such men saying "Thus saith the Lord" concerning things which God never disclosed. Reverent students of the Bible are overwhelmed with evidences of its divine authorship. "We account the Scriptures of God the most sublime philosophy," says Sir Isaac Newton. "There are no songs comparable to the songs of Zion, no orations like those of the prophets, no politics like those the Scriptures teach," says Milton. "I must confess the majority of the Scriptures astonishes me. The holiness of the evangelists speaks to my heart, and has such strong and striking characteristics of truth, and is, moreover, so perfectly inimitable, that had it been the invention of men, the inventors would be greater than the greatest of heroes," says Rousseau. "If any man would attain true knowledge of the Christian religion, let him study the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament. Therein are contained the words of eternal life. It has God for its author, salvation for its end and truth without any mixture of error," says Locke. "There is but one book—the Bible," said Walter Scott, the lover and maker of books, when dying. Well might Jesus say, "Search the Scriptures."

A PECULIAR REMEDY

Something About the New Discovery for Curing Dyspepsia.

(From Mich. Christian Advocate.)

The Rev. F. I. Bell, a highly esteemed minister residing in Weedsport, Cayuga Co., N. Y., in a recent letter writes as follows: "There has never been anything that I have taken that has relieved the Dyspepsia from which I have suffered for ten years except the new remedy called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Since taking them I have had no distress at all after eating and again after long years can sleep well. Rev. F. I Bell, Weedsport, N. Y., formerly Idalia, Colo."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is a remarkable remedy, not only because it is a certain cure for all forms of indigestion, but because it seems to act as thoroughly in old chronic cases of Dyspepsia as well as in mild attacks of indigestion or biliousness. A person has dysyepsia simply because the stomach is overworked, all it wants is a harmless vegetable remedy to digest the food and thus give it the much needed rest.

This is the secret of the success of this peculiar remedy. No matter how weak or how much disordered the digestion may be, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food whether the stomach works or not. New life and energy is given not only to the stomach but to every organ and nerve in the body.

A trial of this splendid medicine will convince the most skeptical that Dyspepsia and all stomach troubles can be cured. Send for little book on Stomach mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. So popular has the remedy become that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can now be obtained at any drug store at 50c. per package.

A New Church Building.

Plans have been adopted for the construction of the new West Side Christian Church, at 1010 West Jackson Boulevard, and work on the building will soon begin. It is to be of the perpendicular Gothic style, both interior and exterior, and is to cost $45,000. It has a frontage on the boulevard of 65 feet and a depth of 115 feet. The front will be in carved Bedford stone. The principal ornamental feature of the front will be a great window outlined as a Gothic arch and done in stone tracery. Four Gothic turrets surmount the masonry. The interior will be finished in oak with organ and choir loft back of the pulpit. The auditorium and balcony have a seating capacity of 800. The lower part of the building, which contains Sunday-school rooms, parlor and pastor's study, was completed five years ago and services are now being held in it. The West Side Christian Church was organized a number of years ago. Rev. Bruce Brown has been its pastor for the past two years. It has a membership of 500.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Publishers' Notes.

"FREQUENCY OF THE LORD'S SUPPER,"

by N. J. Aylsworth, is a new book on the subject, and is growing rapidly into favor. It embraces a book of 102 pages, paper covered, and the price is 25 cents per copy, postpaid. After a careful examination of this book Chas. M. Fillmore, of Carthage, Ohio, gives his opinion of this work as follows: "To my mind N. J. Aylsworth's 'Frequency of the Lord's Supper' is the most timely little book published. Our own brotherhood needs it badly. In too many places the Lord's Supper is given the last and least place in the morning service and of necessity slighted and neglected. In the apostolic church it was the first and foremost feature of the day's services. I hope that this book may help stem the tide that is ebbing toward conformity to worldly demands. Why should we begin to relax in our fidelity to the Lord's appointment when the thoughtful leaders in other religious bodies are beginning to realize its importance? Trinity Church, Boston, popularly known as Phillips Brooks' Church, has communion service twice each Lord's day. Dr. Donald, the rector, says he does it to make it possible for all to come to the Lord's table every Sunday."

"THE SCIENCE AND PEDAGOGY OF ETHICS."

The high standing of H. W. Everest, the author of this new book, as a scholar is a guarantee that the book is one of literary excellence and mature thought. The book appeals to the minds of students, teachers and ministers. If you want in your library or on your table a profound discussion of the science of ethics you should procure this latest work of Everest's. The book contains 312 pages, is printed in clear type, neatly bound in cloth and the price is $1.50 per copy, postpaid.

It deals with Theoretical Ethics, Practical Ethics and Pedagogical Ethics.

QUEEN ESTHER.

Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the fourth quarter deal with the life and times of Esther, and M. M. Davis' late production, "Queen Esther," will greatly aid the Sunday-school scholar in a further understanding of this beautiful Bible character. The author tells the story of her life in a fascinating style, and points out many protracted lessons which should be both learned and appropriated by the Sunday-schools of to-day. "Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis, is a splendid book to place in the hands of young men and young ladies of the present times. It is nicely bound in cloth; price, 75 cents.

She said she was pained because we had not settled with her. Dick. And of course, you replied to her that there is no such thing as pain; that it is only a creature of the imagination?

LOVING those who love us is all well in its way. Sometimes it is easier to do this than not to do it. But there is no special merit in such a course on our part. The true test of Christ-likeness is loving the unloving and the unlovely. That is the test we ought to judge ourselves by: "If ye love them that love you," says Jesus, "what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same?" We ought certainly to be above the average heathen if we consider ourselves followers of Christ. If we are not we reflect no honor on his name, and add no glory to his cause.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

ORGANIC EVOLUTION CONSIDERED

By ALFRED FAIRHURST,

Professor of Natural Science in Kentucky University.

21 Chapters, 386 Pages, $1.50

This work is a very thorough and scholarly discussion of evolution by one who has had many years' experience as a teacher of science in Kentucky University at Lexington, Ky.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Introduction, Matter, Force, Method of Creation, Spontaneous Generation, Natural Selection, Paleontology, Embryology, Special Objections to the Theory of Evolution, Rudimentary Organs, Secondary Sexual Differences, Instinct, The Origin of Man, A Future Life, Design in Nature, Evil and Altruism in Nature, Agnosticism, Recapitulation, Genesis and Geology, Appendix.

Having been for many years a teacher of various branches of natural science, it has been my duty to discuss the subject of organic evolution. This volume contains some of the objections which I have from time to time presented againt the acceptance of that theory, together with several chapters on other subjects.—Author's Preface.

It seems to me that any candid person who reads the book must close it with the conviction that the hypothesis of the origin of organic species by the process of evolution is not only an unproved hypothesis, as its ablest advocates admit, but one that is essentially false. In addition to what the author says on the subject of evolution, he furnishes the unscientific reader with a large amount of information about matter in its various forms and about organized beings that is both interesting and valuable.—J. W. McGarvey, Lexington, Ky.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Tne first real battle between the British and the Boers in South Africa was fought at Glencoe, Natal, on the 19th instant. A British force of 4,000 men, commanded by General Symons engaged the Boers on the heights of Glencoe, driving back the Boers with great loss. It is reported that 800 Boers were killed and wounded, including General Symons, who fell at the head of his column mortally wounded. The Boers are also said to have met with reverses in their attack upon Mafeking, where they have likewise suffered severely in the loss of men. It was expected that the Boers would have the advantage and win the first victories of this war because of their superior forces, and their defeat, therefore, comes in the nature of a great surprise to the world and to England. And now that troops to reinforce British arms in South Africa are beginning to arrive the hope of the Boers for a decisive victory must decrease unless some unknown event shall cause another nation to go to their assistance, which is not now even probable.

The event of the week is the success of British arms in the Transvaal. The Dutch plan of campaign had apparently been carefully worked out, and a prompt and aggressive attempt was made to put it into execution. In the southeastern corner of the Transvaal, where it joins Natal, an attempt was made by the Boers to secure control of the railway which runs south from Boer territory through Natal to the coast. The plan included, first, a series of demonstrations in various quarters to prevent the massing of troops at the point which they intended to attack; second, the cutting of the railroad between Ladysmith and Glencoe, thus securing the isolation of the latter from all possible reinforcements; and third, a combined attack on Glencoe. The execution of this plan demanded the skillful manipulation of several divisions of troops, and either the Boer commander, Joubert, proved himself incapable of manipulating them, or the troops showed themselves incapable of being manipulated with any accuracy. As a result the plan broke down when it came to the combined attack on Glencoe. Before the troops which were to make the attack had all arrived, and while those who had arrived were wondering what to do about it, the British came forth from the town, stormed the hill on which the Boers had their camp, and won a complete victory. The Boer loss is put at 800, the British at 250, including many officers. On the next day, Saturday, a British force was sent out from Ladysmith to open up the railway. At Elandslaagte a Boer camp was encountered and an engagement precipitated which ended in another British victory.

An Englishman of excellent judgment and insight has remarked, within the last few days, that he never saw the English people thoroughly unanimous on any subject until the Spanish-American war in 1898, when there was in all Britain no audible note of protest to mar the chorus of British approval for America's course. The second subject upon which English sentiment is entirely united, says the same gentleman, is the war in the Transvaal. It cannot be said that American sentiment exhibits any such unanimity on either of these topics. Mr. Shaw, of the American Review of Reviews, states the position of most of those who disapprove of England's action when he admits that things were in a bad way in the Transvaal, that the Uitlanders were not receiving just treatment, and that they were powerless to secure a redress of their grievances, but says that it is only a question of domestic policy. The Boers are doubtless unwise, he says, in according such ungenerous treatment to so large and valuable an element in the population, but it is nobody's business but their own. England's suzerainty over the Transvaal as it stands at present, according to the treaty of 1884, is confined within rather narrow limits, and consists chiefly of the right, held by Great Britain, to oversee the foreign relations of the Transvaal. Whether or not this suzerainty can be made the basis for a justification of England's course in championing the cause of the Uitlanders is a question for international lawyers to decide. But setting aside the whole question of British suzerainty, there is stronger ground still for the defense of England's position.

In the Boer Republic we see a government which has adopted a policy of isolation and stagnation as thoroughgoing as that of China—in some respects more so. It has made itself into a close corporation, holding a large area of immensely valuable territory. Others have been allowed to enter and invest their capital for the development of the resourses of the country, but have not been admitted to membership in the corporation and have been made the victims of unjust and tyrannous discrimination as outsiders. The trouble is that the Dutch Republic has been trying to play a double role, as a close corporation treating the territory of the Transvaal as if it owned it in fee simple, and also as an independent government making laws and administering its peculiar substitute for justice. It is in reality the biggest trust on record, and it is amenable to no law as long as it continues to be an independent republic. One of two things must happen: either it must cease to be a sovereign state and must hold its territory as private property subject to a higher lawmaking power; or it must cease to be a close corporation by according all residents and property holders just and equal treatment before its laws. The civilized world recognizes the present state of affairs as intolerable and the Transvaal Republic in this double character as a monstrosity and no legitimate government. No plea of suzerainty is needed to justify England's interferance any more than such an excuse was needed to justify our interference with Spanish misgovernment in Cuba. That, too, was merely a matter of "domestic policy," but the proximity of the trouble to our own shores threw upon us the responsibility of righting the wrong. In like manner the proximity of Great Britain's South African possessions, the fact that most of the sufferers are Englishmen and the tradition of British sovereignty or suzerainty over the Transvaal alike fix upon her the duty of doing this piece of work which is equally the duty of all civilized nations.

Aguinaldo is still seeking interviews with General Otis through commissions appointed by himself in view of peace conditions, but as persistently declined. In the meantime, military operations are becoming more active as the winter approaches, and the administration is of the opinion that the insurgents will soon be cornered. A man-of-war, at the suggestion of Admiral Dewey, has been stationed at the northern extremity of Luzon, to prevent supplies reaching the insurgents from that quarter, and throwing them more wholly upon their own resources. A movement under General Lawton is on foot to capture Tarlac, the Filipino capital, and the towns taken in this movement are to be garrisoned so as to make permanent the results of the campaign. It is supposed that the army in the Philippine Islands and en route is now amply large to bring this annoying war to a speedy close, and the frequent overtures for terms of peace agreeable to the Filipino leader indicate that even the insurgents are growing weary of their hopeless struggle.

William Jennings Bryan's tour through Kentucky and Ohio seems to have greatly intensified the political tension in those two states. For awhile it was doubted whether Mr. Bryan would take a hand in the Kentucky campaign, but those doubts were not realized. Whatever influence his presence and speeches in Kentucky may have been went to the credit of the Goebel ticket, on the ground that he was the regular nominee of the convention, but whether the help from this source will elect him remains to be seen. The opposition is strong, and on this the Republicans are hoping to carry the state. In Ohio the Republican party is divided, and on this and other grounds the Democrats are hoping to carry the day. It is claimed that the election in Ohio this fall will forecast the winning party in the presidential campaign next year, and for this reason each party will exert its utmost strength in the hope of success. The Democratic nominee for governor accompanied Mr. Bryan in his tour of that state.

A modus vivendi on the Alaskan boundary has at last been formally accepted by England and Canada. This result was brought about by Secretary Hay and Mr. Tower, the British change of affairs at Washington. In view of the former failures to find an acceptable line upon which the two nations could temporarily agree, the success of Secretary Hay and Mr. Tower becomes an achievement of which these two men and their respective nations may well be proud. No humiliating surrenders have been made by either nation, and while the present line is only temporarily adopted there is a generally expressed opinion that it will finally become the permanent boundary line. The line agreed upon is stated in the Globe-Democrat's words are as follows:

The modus vivendi follows the precedent established by Secretary Evarts in 1878 in agreeing on a temporary boundary on Stikine River in Alaska by an exchange of notes. The line on the Chilkat River is twenty-two and one-quarter statute miles from the head of navigation on Chilkat Inlet of Lynn Canal, and on the Klehini River, twelve statute miles further inland. The whole valley of Porcupine Creek is included within the American lines. On White and Chilkoot Passes the line is fixed at the summit of the water shed, being the points which have for sometime past been observed by the customs authorities of the two countries. The divisional line on the West Pass, by which the Dalton Trail is reached, is placed twenty-two and one-quarter miles above Pyramid Harbor, which is regarded under the treaty as tidewater mark. Thus the Canadians are not allowed to reach any point on the Lynn Canal. Moreover, there is no permission given for a free port or even for the free transfer across American territory of Canadian goods except of miners' belongings. These matters may figure later on, when it comes to a permanent boundary line, but they are not touched on in this modus.

Another fearful crime, perpetrated by negroes, and another instance of summary punishment by a mob. A negro named Joe Le Flore confessed that he, with two other negroes, tied Mrs. Gambrel and her four children to the floor of her house, saturated the furnature with kerosene and burned their unfortunate victims to death. After the confession of the negro, captured by a posse of men, he was taken to the rear of the house burned, in or near St. Anna, Miss., tied to a stake and likewise burned to death. It is thought that the two other negroes implicated will not escape similar punishment. No one will question the need for the full penalty of the law upon the perpetrators of such a dastardly crime as that set forth in the negro's confession, but it cannot but be regretted that punishment came from a mob instead of the courts. Not until a just and wholesome fear of the law shall be established in the criminally inclined classes will there be even the ordinary security of life in the presence of those who have no other ideas of life than the gratification of their brutal, beastly passions. We cannot condone the crime for which this negro was burned to death, neither can we wink at the exceedingly dangerous course pursued by the mob who burned the criminal.

Samoa is still in a state of turmoil. New difficulties have arisen between the tribes and a battle ensued in which Chief Tuisila was mortally wounded. It is reported that thirteen chiefs, who were associated with the rebel government, now claim to be the government of Samoa and have issued a proclamation to the three consuls regarding the poll tax, and conditions are ripe for another outbreak. The Mataafa people are dissatisfied and seem to be determined on a fight. They are armed with rifles and revolvers and seem to be held in abeyance only by the presence of the men-of-war in Samoan waters. In the meantime, the disposition of the islands is yet undetermined. It is rumored that the islands have been ceded to England, but the rumor is denied in Berlin. On the other hand, rumor has it that Germany has become singularly active in Samoa since the outbreat of the Transvaal war in South Africa. But nothing having the appearance of international friction between Germany and England has yet been made apparent.

After many attempts, much waiting and great expense the international yacht race off Sandy Hook resulted in a victory for America. The Columbia won the three completed races, straight. In the second race, however, the Shamrock met with an accident shortly after starting and quit the race, but according to previous agreement no exceptions were to be made for accidents. This agreement contemplated a test of the strength as well as the speed of the yachts. The yachts had advantage of all kinds of wind in the races completed, and it was agreed by all that the Columbia proved to be the better yacht at all times and under all conditions. The cup, therefore, remains with America. Mr. Lipton took the defeat in the kindliest way, unhesitatingly acknowl edging the superiority of the Columbia. He and others, however, greatly regretted the inability of Mr. Fife, the designer of the Shamrock, to be on his yacht, on account of sickness, although it is not probable that his presence would have saved the Shamrock from defeat. Mr. Lipton promised to try for the cup again as soon as he can find a designer for a better boat than the Shamrock and the Columbia.

William Henry Appleton, son of the founder of the great publishing house of D. Appleton & Co., and for many years head of that firm, died at his home in Riverdale, N. Y., October 19, at the age of 85 years. The first book, "Crumbs from the Master's Table," was issued by the Appleton firm in 1831. William H. Appleton became a member of this firm in 1858. The works of Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall and Spencer, issued by this house, called out strong resentment from the clergy, but Mr. Appleton insisted that his imprint did not carry an endorsement of the books. He held that he was at liberty to publish books representing radically different phases of belief without the charge of championing the cause of infidels. Mr. Appleton was a strong churchman, and gave no countenance to books or literature of doubtful morals. He labored hard in the cause of international copyright, and was active in many enterprises of a benevolent character.

What seems to be the first hard legal blow dealt against what are popularly known as trusts was recently rendered by the Supreme Court of Illinois on the sugar trust. The opinion of the court was somewhat lengthy, but upon the evidence submitted finds an attempt made by the Glucose Sugar Refining Company, in the purchase of the American Glucose Company's plant, to prevent competition, and thereby control the price of glucose, grape sugar and their products, and hence illegal. The sale of the plant of the American Glucose Company to the trust is thereby annulled, the decision of the lower court was reversed and the case remanded with directions. In rendering this decision the Supreme Court says:

"If the allegations in this bill are true, the parties engaged in the formation of the trust and combination heretofore described are guilty of the offense specified in the act of June 11, 1891. The demurrers admit the allegations of the bill to be true. The American Glucose Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey for transacting business in Illinois, and the persons whose names appear in the record, created and entered into a trust or combination with themselves, and with one or more of the five corporations other than the American Glucose Company, who conveyed their plants to the Glucose Sugar Refining Company, to regulate and fix the price of glucose and grape sugar and their products and by-products; and they also entered into such a combination to fix or limit the amount or quantity of glucose to be manufactured, produced or sold in this state. These parties, therefore, under the act, were guilty of a conspiracy to defraud. The testimony tends to sustain the allegations of the bill."

A new method of inflicting capital punishment was proposed a few weeks ago at the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. The condemned is placed in an air-tight chamber and a current of hydrocyanic acid gas is turned on. One inhalation of the poisonous gas does the work instantly and painlessly. This is proposed as a substitute for execution by electricity since it has not yet been possible to get uniform results with the latter method, except in one important respect. For some, electrocution (pardon the barbarous term) appears to be a painless and instantaneous death, for others a lingering torture, and it is believed that the use of this gas will eliminate this variable element. This effort, like all similar ones, to reduce to a minimum the barbarity in the process of capital punishment, does credit to the increasing humanity of man, but after all, the chief objection to capital punishment pertains to these new and painless devices no less than to the old method of hanging, namely, the after effects, that the reformation and salvation of the victim are reduced to a permanent impossibility and that society loses a member which, though now detrimental to its welfare, might be made useful if properly treated. The old-fashioned dentist needed no tool but a stout pair of forceps, and pulling was the universal cure for toothache. A few generations ago the gallows did much of the work which rightfully belonged to the reformatory, and capital punishment was the panacea for all criminal disorders of the social body. Modern dentistry has learned that most aching teeth may be cured and saved, and the forceps may be as thoroughly antiquated as the thumbscrew. May we not hope that criminology will some day learn to save those aching teeth of society, the criminals? While so much thought is being given to the problem, how to administer to the coddemned a comfortable and even luxurious death, it will be well not to lose sight of the main question as to whether it is worth while to kill him at all.

OUR JUBILEE CONVENTION.

It often happens that great occasions, long held before the public eye, fail to meet the expectations which have been awakened concerning them. They are greater in prospect than in retrospect. Not so our Jubilee Convention. Great as were our anticipations, it has more than realized them. It possessed all the essential elements of a great and memorable convention. In numbers it is, of course, without precedent. On Thursday night the Joint Traffic Association office in Cincinnati reported 14,000 enrollment, and expressed the opinion that by Saturday night it would reach 18,000. This may include some excursionists who availed themselves of the cheap rates, but subtracting these, we had a great convention.

But not in numbers merely was it a great convention. In its personnel it was truly a distinguished and representative body of men and women. A large number of our veteran preachers were present; college presidents and professors abounded; our leading editors, authors, poets, musicians and publishers were there; our ablest evangelists and pastors were much in evidence; Englishmen and Canadians mingled freely with their American cousins, and conservatives and liberals were known to lie down together and arise and eat at the same table. Business men in greatly increased numbers were present, and were interested in the business of the convention—bankers, real estate agents, cotton brokers, railroad men, farmers, merchants and politicians. Nor were doctors and lawyers wanting.

It was a great convention in the character of its utterances. The leading addresses were worthy of the occasion, and the brief speeches were, many of them, models of lofty thought and clear expression. If the speeches be divided into two classes—those which emphasized doctrine and those which dealt with duty—the latter class would greatly predominate. The tone and spirit of the leading addresses might be described as conservatively liberal, or sanely progressive. The divinity and lordship of Jesus Christ, the inspiration, authority and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures, the danger of discrediting God's Word on the one hand by irreverent criticism, and on the other by an equally irreverent unwillingness to receive the new light which modern biblical research has thrown upon the sacred page, the uselessness and harmfulness of human creeds and the solemn duty of standing fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, the value of the movement our fathers inaugurated and the danger of permitting it to crystallize into a mere sect, the necessity of developing the spiritual life of our membership, caring for the weak churches, preserving the sanctity of home life and pushing forward all lines of our missionary, educational and benevolent activity—these were the dominant notes of the convention, and were received with hearty endorsement. So long as these sentiments are welcomed in our national conventions our movement is likely to go forward to the fulfillment of its great mission.

The convention was great, too, in its purely missionary features. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society convened in Music Hall on Monday morning following the great Communion Service on Lord's day. Pres. J. W. McGarvey gave a lecture on "Missions in the Acts of Apostles," which the audience seemed to greatly enjoy. It was a magnificent assembly, and the scene was inspiring, after the venerable president had called the convention to order and there had been the usual devotional exercises, when Secretary McLean introduced a large number of missionaries to the great audience. When those heroes and heroines came upon the platform they received an ovation from the convention, being greeted with the waving of handkerchiefs and the clapping of hands. Some of them simply bowed their acknowledgments; others spoke a simple sentence or two expressing their gladness to be present, and one of them, our veteran missionary in India, made his acknowledgments in a brief speech in the Hindustani language, which was highly appreciated by the audience. Among those introduced were representatives from England—W. Durban, our English correspondent, and Bro. E. H. Spring. These English brethren made very happy speeches, bearing the fraternal greetings of the brethren beyond the sea, and describing the religious condition and outlook of England. The presence of these representatives from other lands always adds deep interest to these conventions, and we had a larger number of them present than usual at the recent convention. The addresses delivered before the Foreign Society were by Geo. T. Smith, Allan B. Philputt, J. G. McGavran, on Monday afternoon, and in the evening an address on "Missions the Crowning Glory of the Century," by E. L. Powell. All these addresses we heard commended, but we heard only the last one, which was a masterful presentation of a great theme that inspired the audience to a high degree of enthusiasm. Other addresses on Tuesday were "Missions in the Gospels," by W. J. Lhamon, a Bible study; "The Peerlessness of Christianity," by T. W. Pinkerton, and "The Work in India," by G. L. Wharton. These addresses kept up the high record of ability, and the address by Bro. Wharton in particular, as a missionary acquainted with the field and its problems, was especially interesting and valuable.

The annual reports presented by Secretary McLean and Treasurer F. M. Rains, with the great increase in the missionary offerings of the past year already reported to our readers, were a splendid background for these missionary addresses and helped them to make a permanent impression upon the audience. In spite of the fact of the great increase in the receipts of the past year, the banner has been lifted still higher, and as next year is the silver anniversary of the Foreign Society it is proposed to raise $200,000 for Foreign Missions, or nearly $50,000 more than was reached the present year. This is not at all beyond our reach if the churches and Sunday-schools can be quite generally enlisted.

JUBILEE SESSION.

Tuesday afternoon had been set apart for the special Jubilee Service, and a great audience thronged the Music Hall at two o'clock to witness these exercises. Mrs. Princess Long was the leader of song in this meeting, and right royally did she commend herself as the sweet singer from the West. The opening address was by J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard, Cincinnati, on the topic, "1849-1899," or fifty years of history. He dealt with the influences in the Old World which had led to the migration hither of those seeking religious liberty. He described the religious condition of things in this country at the beginning of the present century which gave rise to the origin of our movement and mentioned some of the leading characteristics of that movement. It was an able address and many of its statements were in the happiest vein of the author, stating truth in an epigrammatic style. This was followed by a Jubilee Poem, by Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, concerning which it is perhaps sufficient praise to say that, in beauty of thought and expression, it was worthy of the great occasion and was listened to with the profoundest attention. It deserves, however, to be read to be fully appreciated. The closing address of the afternoon was on "Lessons From Our Past," by the editor of this paper, concerning which we must allow others to speak. We should be ungrateful, however, not to acknowledge the great cordiality with which the address was received by the audience.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.

At this point a service was held not provided for in the program. It was a memorial service in memory of A. M. Atkinson who, on the Saturday evening previous, at the close of an earnest address, had suddenly expired. The audience was asked for a contribution to an Atkinson Memorial Fund, to be a part of the Ministerial Relief Fund for the care of aged preachers, the cause for which he laid down his life. No appeal was made. None was needed. The hearts of the people were ready. They were simply given the opportunity to heed the dying words of our departed brother, and "quit themselves like men." Cards were distributed through the audience, and while this was being done, and while they were being filled out, brief and tender addresses were made by a number of brethren who stood close to Bro. Atkinson; and had there been time, hundreds of others would have loved to have given their testimony to his character and work. When the cards were collected and counted it was found that more than $5,000 had been subscribed to the Memorial Fund, and many of the ministers are going to lift a collection for the fund as soon as they reach their churches. This amount should be readily swelled to $10,000, the interest of which should be applied to carry out the objects of the Ministerial Relief Fund, while the principal remains as a perpetual monument to the memory of the founder of this fund.

The evening service was a continuation of the jubilee feature of the convention. A number of short addresses were made by various brethren, as follows: T. P. Haley, on "The Reasons for Missionary Organization;" C. L. Loos, on "Our First Convention;" B. B. Tyler, on "Our Beginnings in Missions;" "Jubilee Poem," by Prof. B. J. Radford; "What Has Been Done?" by Carey E. Morgan; "Our Missionary Outlook," by H. O. Breeden. Both the addresses and the jubilee poem, by Prof. Radford, evoked hearty applause. Prof. Radford has written other poems of value, but this jubilee poem touches perhaps the highest point in poesy which he has heretofore reached, and deserves a place along with that of Mrs. Pounds in our permanent literature.

HOME MISSIONS.

On Wednesday morning, after a "Quiet Hour," conducted by Dr. A. G. Thomas, W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, president of the convention, delivered his presidential address on "Our Jubilee and Our Plea," a strong, manly, earnest presentation of present-day truths, which needed the emphasis he gave them. Perhaps there will be no better place to say that we have never had a better chairman to preside over any of our national conventions than Bro. Richardson proved himself to be during our Jubilee Convention. The president's address was followed by a statement concerning the annual report, by Corresponding Secretary Benj. L. Smith, emphasizing the special features of the report. F. D. Power, of Washington, conducted a conference on "Our Cities for Christ," and Prof. A. M. Haggard, of Des Moines, on "State Missions to the Front." The tendency in some states to neglect the state work made this conference very timely, and it is to be hoped that it may result in greater fidelity to the work in the various states. C. B. Newman, of Detroit, conducted an "Hour of Thanksgiving" for reaching the $100,000 for Home Missions. While all this was going on in the Music Hall, a business session was being held in Odeon Hall by delegates, hearing and acting upon reports of committees. This brought together in a compact body those who were especially interested in the business feature of the convention and enabled them to dispatch it more readily. The magnitude of our conventions necessitates some such arrangement as this in order to facilitate the transaction of necessary business. Into the afternoon of Wednesday there were crowded "A Plea for the Homeless," by Geo. Darsie, a strong speech on Church Extension; "Statistics for 1900," by G. A. Hoffmann, statistical secretary; "Negro Evangelization," by B. A. Jenkins; a very happy treatment of the subject; a report on Christian Endeavor, by Jno E. Pounds, superintendent; on the Board of Education, by the secretary, H. Van Kirk, and on Porto Rico, by S. D. Dutcher. All these speakers gave evidence of having given mature thought to their subjects. The evening in the Music Hall was occupied by two addresses—"America for Americans, or America for the World," by E. W. Darst, of Chicago; the other, "The Gospel of Christ in our National Life," by W. F. Cowden, of Tacoma, Wash. It would have been strange if in such themes as these the American eagle had not been permitted to scream and the American flag to unfurl itself in the breeze of this patriotic discussion.

On Thursday morning, after the "Quiet Hour," by Miss Rebel Withers, Homer T. Wilson, of Texas, delivered an address on "Expansion: Greater America for Christ." Secretary B. L. Smith then introduced the missionaries of the American Christian Missionary Society. I. J. Spencer delivered a strong address on "A Supreme Question," which was a plea for Ministerial Relief, heightened in its power and tenderness by the death of its founder. F. M. Dowling, of California, made a stirring address on "Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America." While the latter part of this program was being executed a business session was held in Odeon Hall, where there were a number of matters presented in the form of resolutions or recommendations, which elicited spirited discussions. Never have we seen one of our national conventions in a more critical mood than was this forenoon business session. There were "amendments," "substitutes," motions to "strike out" and "lay on the table" and "previous questions" and every other parliamentary device known to deliberative bodies. Some of the questions that elicited most discussion were a recommendation that a place for the convention be selected two years in advance. This was finally laid on the table and Minneapolis was disapointed, but she put in her plea all the same for the convention in 1901. Kansas City was unanimously selected as the place for the next meeting. This will insure another great convention. The selection, however, was conditioned on the ability of the board to secure liberal rates on the railroads. A recommendation that our Southern colored schools apply to the State Legislatures for assistance, since they were taking the place of district schools, elicited a lively discussion and was voted down by an overwhelming majority, as it should have been. A strong anti-saloon resolution was passed without discussion. Another resolution, calling on Congress to eject Brigham H. Roberts from his seat, was passed after considerable discussion as to its form. The motion to appoint a committee consisting of representatives of our different societies to consider the question of bringing about greater unification in our missionary organizations was, after a somewhat spirited discussion, carried by a decided majority. A recommendation of the Educational Board, that a secretary of the board be appointed, to be paid out of the funds of the American Christian Missionary Society, was after considerable discussion referred to a committee to be reported upon a year hence. Our college men feel that the Educational Board has not yet received the recognition which is due it, and that it is unable to carry forward the work for which it was created. It is certain, however, that the interests of education are receiving much more thought in our national conventions than formerly, and there is reason to hope that we will ultimately wake up to the vital relation which exists between these institutions and all other departments of our work.

DIVIDED INTO SECTIONS.

In order to give a hearing to the various interests that claimed the attention of the convention it was found necessary to break the convention up into a number of sections on Thursday afternoon. Accordingly, there was an educational session in the Music Hall, which was addressed by Hiram Van Kirk and President R. Lin Cave. Section II was presided over by Vice-president Carey E. Morgan and considered the question of Christian Endeavor, John E. Pounds, leader. This was held at the Central Christian Church and was addressed by C. R. Hudson, M. J. Grable, W. M. Forrest, Herbert L. Willett, and closed with an open parliament by J. Z. Tyler. Vice-president D. O. Smart presided over Section III, which was a conference on "Pastors and Evangelists," J. H. O. Smith, leader. This meeting was addressed by J. H. O. Smith, J. V. Coombs, I. N. McCash and J. V. Updike, at Odeon Hall. Section IV was presided over by Vice president R. M. Giddens and had the Sunday-school for its subject, H. C. Rash, of Kansas, being leader. It met in the Lutheran Church and was addressed by Mrs. A. A. Buxton, Marion Lawrence, P. Y. Pendleton, J. H. Hardin, F. G. Tyrrell. B. B. Tyler presided over the section on Benevolence, at the Richmond St. Church. This was addressed by Mrs. Helen E. Moses, Chas. Allan Thomas, Mrs. L. H. Bantz, Mrs. O. C. Shedd, Mrs. H. M. Meier, H. L. Willett, B. A. Jenkins, Mrs. Persis L. Christian, F. G. Tyrrell and W. J. Lhamon. These were fairly well attended and the proceedings were of a highly interesting character. Those connected with the section on Benevolence were of the most tender and affecting character and a great impetus was given to that interest. News of the death of Sister Younkin, who died during the convention and who was the founder of the work of the Benevolent Association, did much to heighten the interest in this work, just as Bro. Atkinson's death had given a new impetus to the Ministerial Relief. It is a great thing to glorify God, whether by our life or by our death.

The business session of the convention recommended that this feature of breaking the convention up into sections be continued in our next convention, as it seems the only possible way of bringing before us the various general interests of the brotherhood that claim our attention.

During the convention and sandwiched in between different sessions were held a number of college banquets. Bethany, Eureka, Butler, Drake, Kentucky University and College of the Bible and Hiram all rallied their sons and daughters around the banquet table, responded to toasts, sang college songs and had a good time. This serves to keep up the acquaintance among the alumni and to foster love for alma mater.

On Thursday evening there was a consecration service, led by C. P. Williamson, which made a most beautiful and fitting close to this greatest of all our conventions. It is only to be regretted that all could not have remained to have participated in these closing exercises.

We close as we began. It was a great convention, and will long serve as a landmark in our history. To the aged it was the realization of long-cherished hopes; to the young it opened up a vision of glorious possibilities. Let us all see to it that it shall not be a mere high-water mark, from which the tide of enthusiasm shall recede only to touch it again at rare intervals, but a new base line from which we shall measure our future advance.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The great chorus choir, consisting of 400 or 500 voices, under the direction of Bro. Fillmore, was one of the delightful features of the convention.

The arrangements of the local committee for the comfort and convenience of the convention and its delegates were about as complete as could well be imagined. They deserve the thanks which the convention heartily voted them for the vast amount of painstaking labor which they had performed for the success of the convention.

Cincinnati has a number of excellent hotels. Among the best of these is the Grand, which, by the courtesy of W. S. Dickson, whose guests the editor and his wife were during the convention, was our home, as it was of many of the delegates, and it proved to be a very satisfactory one. The fact is, the hotels, the street cars, the churches of Cincinnati, the newspapers and even the police, treated the convention and its delegates with great courtesy.

The Commercial League, of Cincinnati, donated, free of charge, the use of Music Hall, and Odeon Hall, lighted and kept in order for the use of the convention. This was signal proof, not only of civic enterprise and public spirit, but of sympathy with the moral and religious aims of the convention.

Bishop Walden, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, visited the convention and conveyed a fraternal greeting from the great Methodist body which he represents. These are days of larger ideas, broader sympathies and wider fellowships than the old days.

The thousands of delegates present at the convention sympathized most profoundly with the family of Bro. Atkinson, so suddenly bereaved by the death of the fond husband and father, and the whole brotherhood will mingle their tears with those of the bereaved ones. Next week we hope to write at greater length of Bro. Atkinson's life and character.

It was a great disappointment to thousands who were unable to get into Music Hall on Sunday afternoon to the Communion Service, and many even failed to obtain admittance in Odeon Hall and in the churches where the communion was observed. But no one hall would have sufficed to accommodate the vast throngs of people that gathered to that service.

Referring to the breaking up of the great convention and the good-byes, we are reminded of a pathetic phrase in a colored man's prayer, of which a friend told us lately. The colored brother thanked the Lord for that future gathering "where it will be all howdy and no goodby."

It is safe to say that thousands of pulpits and platforms last Lord's day were filled with echoes from the convention by preachers and other delegates who were present. In this way the enthusiasm of the convention will be felt by thousands of churches and tens of thousands of members throughout the country.

Among the churches crowded on Sunday of the convention was the Central Christian Church, where Robt. Moffett, of Cleveland, spoke in the morning and W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., spoke at night. These brethren had a great occasion, a great audience, and those who know them may take it for granted that they delivered a great message to the people.

THE SUPERIORITY OF GOODNESS.

Paul, in saying that scarcely for a righteous man would one die, yet peradventure for the good man some would even dare to die, strongly intimates that goodness is superior to righteousness, and that a good man is better than a righteous one. What is the difference? Is Paul justified in the intimation that there is such a distinction? Do other inspired writers agree with him? Paul has been accused of making a Christianity of his own, separate and distinct from the one Christ made, but this distinction he certainly got from his Master, Jesus Christ. The word holiness in the Old Testament expresses character, the word righteousness expresses conduct, the two together make up the religion of the Bible in its application to man, and also in reference to God, for these two words are applied to him. Righteousness is rightness, it is correctness of behavior, and hence a righteous man is a man who does right in relation to the standards of the moral law; his behavior is outwardly morally and legally correct. You cannot find any fault with it from the standpoint of law and good morals, but nobody loves him, and no one would think of dying for him. He is righteous, but he lacks the sweetness of disposition, the hearty sympathy, the graciousness of temper, the genial kindness, the unselfishness, the love that goes beyond what the law prescribes in helping others, that we usually associate with goodness. Let me describe a righteous man I once knew, and then a good one, both members of a congregation for which I ministered on the other side of the world. Bro. E. was a well-educated, intelligent, strict-liv-living man. He was industrious, frugal, honest, clean in all his habits, and a firm believer in the Christian religion. In his public addresses to the church his great theme was love, but no one ever accused him of having the thing of which he had so much to say. He did not know the meaning of the word. It was the man's great deficiency. You could not find serious fault, from a moral point of view, with his manner of life. He had been baptized, he was a member of the church, the Sunday morning and evening hour of service always found him in his place, he made a weekly offering of his means to sustain the cause, he was a total abstainer from rum, tobacco, cards, profanity, and all unchaste conversation, he kept out of trouble, and paid a hundred cents to the dollar. But he was hard, loveless and without sympathy. He did not love anybody, and nobody loved him, and it would never have entered anybody's mind, least of all his wife's, to think of dying for him. He was righteous, but he lacked the lovableness of goodness. Old Bro. B., an elder in the same church, was just as righteous, just as correct and faultless in his morals as E., but there was something else that made him a wonderfully different man. He was kind, tender-hearted, sympathetic, generous, benevolent; there was sweetness and light in his bearing and the magnetism of love, and everybody said, "Bro. B. is such a good man." They were using language more correctly than they knew. That was just what he was, a good man. It was not an accident that the Holy Spirit said of Barnabas, "He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith, and much people turned to the Lord."

It would be an easy matter to give illustrations of the obvious difference between a righteous man who keeps the letter of the law, and a good man who transcends and overflows the law in his manifestation of its life and spirit. You employ a woman to preside over the cooking stove and the kitchen. The only stipulation in the contract is that she shall cook. She is a strict constructionist, and interprets that to mean that her duties are exclusively culinary. She cooks well, she does her whole duty in the kitchen, but she declines to wash, to sweep, to dust, to make beds, to go errands, or to do anything else but the single item called for in the contract. She is righteous as far as the law extends, and, it may be, a fine cook, but she is not a good servant, and the family never falls in love with her, and bonuses seldom travel her way. You employ another woman on the same contract, but she, out of the kindness of her heart and her desire to please you and to do her whole duty, not only fulfills the legal contract, which she does quite as faithfully as the other woman, but she washes and scrubs and sweeps and dusts, goes errands, cleans up the house once a week, and does the work needing to to be done; and you say to your neighbor, "I tell you, we have a servant this time. She is a good one." All the family become fond of her, and she carries away ten presents to where the other carried away one. Righteousness may beget respect, but goodness provokes affection. We may die for those we love, but not for those we respect.

Hour of Prayer.

LESSONS FROM OUR NATIONAL MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

(Psa. 126:1-6.)

(Concert of Prayer for Missions.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Nov. 1st.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Gratitude to God for the great things He has done for us, as indicated in our recent great Missionary Convention.

Never before in our history has there gathered so large a body of our members in one convention as were assembled in Cincinnati last week. It was the celebration of a half century of missionary work. Fifty years ago a few representative men of the brotherhood met in that city and organized the American Christian Missionary Society. They numbered less than 200 and raised about $2,000 for missions.

After the lapse of fifty years we meet again in the same city, and we hear statistics that read like a dream. Instead of about 200,000 members, we are told that we number 1,118,000. Instead of raising $2,000, we raised the last year for missionary, educational and benevolent purposes over a half million dollars, and for religious work, local as well as general, over five million dollars. Instead of a little company of less than 200, there was a great gathering of over 15,000 people. Instead of finding ourselves despised and regarded as heterodox, we are respected and recognized as one of the great religious forces of Christendom, leading forward an advance column against the forces of Satan.

What lessons do we learn from all these facts?

1. That if God be with us it does not matter who is against us. That a reformation founded on right principles and carrying out the high purposes of God will succeed ultimately, no matter what opposition is arrayed against it.

2. A lesson of faith. Our fathers went out, not knowing whither they went, only desiring to know and to do the will of God, and he has led them and their descendants on to conquest and to victory. Let us trust God for the future and seek to be true to him.

3. We learn a lesson of the value of cooperation. Without working together, without combining our minds and our talents for common ends, without these annual conventions which have served to promote unity and to generate enthusiasm, we could never have accomplished a tithe of what has been done. Let all the churches and individuals who have held aloof from cooperative missionary work fall into line, that greater things may be accomplished in the future.

4. We learn a lesson of profound humility. God hath wrought all this through imperfect agents. Had we been more faithful, more willing to be led, less disposed to cavil over minor differences, and more zealous for the world's conversion, vastly more might have been done than has been achieved.

5. We learn to cherish the principles promulgated by our fathers and advocated by the Disciples of Christ to-day. They never could have achieved the triumph they have, having passed through the fires of criticism, had they not been vital and important truths for this generation.

6. Let us learn a lesson also of gratitude: "God hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." Not by might or wisdom, but by his own divine power, exerted through us, he has made us the power that we are in the world to-day. Blessed be His name for whatever we have been able to accomplish for the good of our race, and for whatever power we hold to-day in trust for the good of the church universal, and the redemption of the race! Let us bless His name that we have been led out of the bondage of sin and of ecclesiastical authority into the larger liberty of the children of God.

PRAYER.

O God of our fathers, be Thou also our God. We thank Thee for the great truths and principles which Thou hast revealed to us, and for the consecrated men and women who have dedicated their lives to the advocacy and propagation of these truths. We thank Thee for what has been accomplished in the past. We bless Thy name for the reports that have been brought to us of the success of Thy gospel in distant lands as well as in our own country. May we be strengthened mightily by Thy Spirit in the inner man that we may go forward to larger triumphs in the years to come. In Christ's name. Amen!

Oh, to eat of the flesh of the Son of Man, and to drink his blood—in hours of devout reverie, in moments of rapt and intimate communion! This is life. This is eternal satisfaction. Here are pasture-lands indeed, and the rivers of his pleasures.—F. B. M.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair this week must stand for a memory or an ideal rather than a present reality. Few things are more exhausting in the demands they make upon one's time and strength than a great convention. The program is a constant temptation tor one to attempt to take in more than he is able to bear. The mind is probably never more active than when it is following closely the various reports and the addresses of different types and styles which are made. There is a constant desire to keep up with what is going on in the convention hall, and when one has about made up his mind to stay in his room and rest he glances at the program and learns that a speaker whom he is very anxious to hear is going to address the convention. Very few, however, take in all the proceedings of a convention or series of conventions which last for a week. It is best not to try it. One must choose what he can best afford to miss and rest his wearied brain in order to appreciate the remainder. For this reason we were compelled to miss some of the good things spread at the Jubilee feast.

We have missed but few of our national conventions since 1870. One thing always impresses us as a most delightful feature of these conventions. It is the genuine feeling of fraternity that pervades them. This is perhaps one of the most attractive features of these great gatherings, and who would say that it is not one of the most profitable? How else could we maintain those subtle ties of friendship and fellowship which bind the various individuals into a common brotherhood? We doubt if the unifying influence of these conventions has ever been fully appreciated by us. Those hand-grips from brother to brother and sister to sister and friend to friend, mean a good deal more than we often imagine. This feature of the convention comes out most strikingly in its initial sessions when first greetings are exchanged, when hands clasp each other which have not met for years. One always feels, when passing through these hearty greetings with friends from every section of our great country, what a blessed fellowship this is and how glad he is that he belongs to such an army.

This Jubilee Convention was a mountain height from which one could look back over the past and glean its lessons, and out into the future and forecast, somewhat, the ongoing of this religious movement. In spite of the mistakes we have made and all the follies we have committed, nothing is more evident, in looking back over our history, than that God has been guiding us and preparing us for some larger and better work than we have yet achieved. We learn by our mistakes very often better than by our good deeds. God has been teaching us lessons of forbearance and brotherly love and of unselfish devotion to the advancement of His kingdom. We are beginning to see the meaning of it all and to understand that we must gird the loins of our minds with divine truth, replenish our hearts from the unwasting fountains of God's love and grace to meet the mighty demands that are upon us in the century whose open door is just before us. God has not launched this movement into the world of thought and action and guided its course thus far with unmistakable tokens of His love and care, without having some great purpose to accomplish in the divine economy.

As truly as God ever spake to Israel in some of the supreme moments of its history did God speak to us at the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati through the lips of the consecrated man whom he so suddenly called home. His message to us through Bro. Atkinson was, "Whatever may be your calling in life, make it a holy calling, and use it for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Open your soul to all holy activities and Christly ministries, and God will pour in his light and love, and enrich your lives with his blessing. Be warned by the sudden going out of my life. Quit you like men in the great conflict that awaits you." If we have ears to hear this message, and if we have hearts to heed it, God will still increase our numbers and widen our influence and bless our work and make us a blessing to untold millions of the race. But if we live for earthly gain or pleasure; if we close our hearts to the cry of the world's need; if we live not for the things that abide, God's presence will be withdrawn and we shall ingloriously fail to accomplish the purpose for which he called us into being. But we shall not fail. The hearts of the people are turned toward God and toward his Son, Jesus Christ, and are yearning as never before for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the abundance of his power. The future, as looked at from the heights of the Jubilee Convention, is spanned by a rainbow of hope, and under this arch of light we read the words, "Quit you like men!"

Questions and Answers.

1. For what purpose was the State Board created?
2. What are its legitimate functions?
3. Are we to regard it as an ecclesiastical body in which to try heretics?
4. Is it clothed with any authority whatever to sit in judgment upon men's faith?
Please answer immediately for the satisfaction of many. I. F. Tanner.

1. To receive and disburse missionary funds sent from individuals and churches for work within the state, and to appoint and have direct supervision of evangelists and other laborers needed in the work and report the work to the State Convention.

2. Those stated above.

3. Certainly not.

4. Not at all, though it must pass upon the fitness of men offering themselves for any service under its control.

---

1. To whom do the words "us" and "we" in Eph. 1:4, 5 refer?
2. From Gal. 1:17, 18 how can it be argued that Paul spent three years in Arabia? K.

1. To the Jewish Christians, we gather, from verses 12 and 13, where a distinction seems to be drawn between Jewish and Gentile believers.

2. The "three years," spoken of in Gal. 1:17, 18, probably covers the entire time from Paul's conversion to his visit to Jerusalem. As a part of this time was spent preaching in Damascus, we cannot tell, accurately, how long the stay in Arabia was. It is hardly probable that it would take Paul the whole of three years to adjust himself to the new situation.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

INDIA.

A. MCLEAN.

The year 1882 marked an epoch in the history of the Foreign Society. That year work was begun on heathen soil. For some years money kept coming into the treasury for this special purpose. Much of it came from the children. As J. H. Garrison, the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, was preparing to leave for the convention held in Louisville, in 1880, his little boys told him they wanted to send some money with him for missions. They handed him the savings of many weeks and said, "We want this to go to send the gospel to children who have never heard the name of Jesus." On hearing this incident the convention decided to ask the Sunday-schools for one offering each year for heathen missions. That was the origin of Children's Day. As we had then no one at work in any part of the heathen world, the offerings of the children were invested for some time.

When the problem of money was solved, the next thing was to find men to go. The society did not have long to seek. Albert Norton had spent some years in India as a missionary. After uniting with our people he wrote to the society with reference to his possible return to that field under the direction of the executive committee. He was highly recommended by those who knew him. In order to test his ability and to become better acquainted with him, he was engaged for two months to solicit funds. The time was subsequently extended. He visited many churches and spoke with great fervor and power on the theme so near his heart. He secured considerable in cash and pledges. On the 4th of February, 1882, the committee decided to send Mr. and Mrs. Albert Norton and Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Wharton to India as missionaries. Mr. Wharton was well known as a rising young preacher. He was a graduate of Bethany College and, at the time of his appointment, was in charge of the Richmond Avenue Church in Buffalo. Mrs. Wharton was a daughter of the sainted Robert Richardson, the friend and biographer of Alexander Campbell. These men and women were believed to be full of the Holy Spirit and of faith. They were ready and eager to go. They asked no stipulated salary. They were willing to go trusting in God and in their brethren. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions sent four ladies with them to serve as teachers and Bible women. On the 16th of September, 1882, this little band, eight in all, sailed from New York for Bombay. They reached their destination in October. At once they began the study of the language and the people. Mr. Norton did not continue long with the society. He resigned because of some scruples of conscience over receiving any stated amount for his support. His resignation caused some disappointment. At the same time it should be borne in mind that his services had been exceedingly valuable. He did what few other men could have done. He aroused thousands who were asleep. He convinced the committee and many churches and individuals that a mission could be planted in India. He started the work.

The convention of that year stated that the action of the executive committee deserved the fullest approval of the society and its grateful thanks. The convention recognized in the starting of this mission the evident guidance of Providence and the indication of the divine purpose that called for grateful acknowledgment and prompt and generous support. It seemed plain that the Holy Spirit was opening up to us access to all nations and inviting us to enter. The convention rejoiced that the committee was so prompt to venture upon this great field, and that their faith in the support of the Lord's people in this work had not faltered. It was recommended that other fields be entered, principally Japan and China. The hope was expressed that the next convention would be greeted with the report that both these fields had been occupied, and that the eyes of all might be turned hopefully upon still wider prospects of gospel victories in the Orient. The enthusiasm and joy of that convention were unprecedented. The reproach of having no missionaries in any part of the heathen world was rolled away. The treasurer's report showed that the receipts for the year were double that of any previous year. The marked increase in the receipts was significant. It indicated that the people were ready to enter the regions beyond and to support the workers that might be sent there.

The work began in the Central Provinces. These provinces have an area of 116,000 square miles, and a population numbering 15,000,000. The field chosen was both large and needy. The first station was opened in Harda. This town is 417 miles east from Bombay, and is a large wheat market. The society owns in Harda two bungalows, a building that is used for a school for boys and a chapel, another building for a school for girls, a hospital and dispensary, and a leper asylum. The seven buildings that constitute the leper asylum were built in the time of famine and did not cost the society anything. The present staff consists of Mr. and Mrs. Wharton, Dr. and Mrs. Drummond, G. W. Coffman, Miss Mary Thompson, Miss Mildred Franklin, Miss Bertha Marshall, Mr. and Dr. Rioch and the native assistants. Mr. Wharton has charge of the church and conducts the Bible and training school. He superintends the preaching in the bazar and in three out-stations. In addition to his preaching for the church he teaches a Bible-class in the Sunday-school. Mrs. Wharton has charge of a store for the sale and distribution of Bibles and tracts. This store is self-sustaining. She accompanies her husband on his evangelistic tours and works among the women in the zenanas and among the children in the Sunday-schools as she is able. Dr. Drummond has charge of the medical department. Dr. Drummond is a graduate of Cotner University. He took some special courses in the Postgraduate Medical College in New York to better qualify him for service in India. Last year the patients in Harda numbered 12,216. Mr. Coffman teaches the boys' school. He is a graduate of Drake University. Miss Franklin teaches the girls. In India boys and girls are not permitted to recite in the same classes or to attend school in the same building. This will account for these separate establishments. Miss Mary Thompson gives her time and strength to the women in their homes. She reads and explains the Scriptures and teaches them Christian hymns and urges them to accept Jesus the Christ as their Savior and Lord. In the cold season she goes twice a week to the villages near Harda. On these trips she is accompanied by a Bible woman. On Sundays she has a school for boys. She has another class on that day for the beggars. Every day she has religious exercises with the servants and helpers. She is constantly called upon by the women among whom she labors for simple remedies for diseases. The women of India are timid and prefer in time of trouble to appeal for aid to one of their own sex rather than to a male physician, no matter how accomplished and gentle he may be. Miss Thompson was sent to India by the churches in Melbourne, Australia. They have supported her for six years. Mr. and Dr. Minnie Rioch make their home in Harda. They went out a year ago. Since that time they have been giving their attention to the language. There are six hundred towns and villages tributary to Harda. The missionaries evangelize these as they are able. One winter two ladies took a bullock cart and tent and some helpers and went out to do village work. In two months they visited and spoke in ninety different places. They addressed about five thousand people. The most of these had never heard the name of Jesus before.

In Charwa and Rahatgaon and Timarni work is carried on regularly. These are out-stations, and are ministered to by trained helpers. Nathoo Lal preaches in Charwa and forty-two other villages. The church in Charwa has twenty-seven members. The members live in four villages. A Sunday-school is taught and the gospel is preached there every week. In Rahatgaon there is a house for the evangelist and a school building. Timarni has a dwelling and a hospital. Dr. John Panna has charge of the medical work at both points. His patients number over two thousand in a year. M. J. Shah is the evangelist in charge. In the two Sunday-schools there are about seventy pupils enrolled. The outlook is bright and full of promise. Sampson Powar is a valuable assistant in the work in Harda. He treats both the in-patients and the out-patients daily. He teaches them the Scriptures and has them commit portions to memory. Gopal gives the lepers instruction daily in the Bible. They seem happy and contented. A Sunday-school is taught among the sweepers, one of the lowest caste in all India.

Dr. and Mrs. C. S. Durand spent seven years in Harda. They went from the region about Sedalia, Missouri. Before sailing for India both spent a full year in the medical colleges and hospitals of New York. The hospital was built by Dr. Durand. The land on which it stands was given to the mission by an influential Hindu as a token of his appreciation of the work done there. Mrs. Ellen L. Jackson has been connected with the work in Harda for ten years. She went out from the West London Tabernacle and from the training class taught by W. T. Moore. She had charge of the work among the boys till her health failed. She lives in Harda and gives her influence and her assistance to the church and to the temperance society and to other good causes. Miss Sue A. Robinson and Miss Hattie L. Judson died and are buried in Harda. Miss Robinson went out from St. Louis. She served for five years. She spent most of the summers on the plains. Had she been less heroic she might be living now. She sleeps in the little cemetery at the edge of the town. She is waiting for the day to dawn and for the shadows to flee away. The women of Louisville raised six thousand dollars to build a Memorial School to perpetuate the name and worth of this noble worker. She had lived and labored for some years in Louisville before going to St. Louis. The City Fathers gave the ground on which the school has been built. Miss Judson went out from Danbury, Connecticut. She was a most earnest and efficient worker in that church. In the famine she went to Mahoba to nurse the sick and to feed the starving. While there she took typhoid fever, from which she died. She fell as a martyr to her devotion.

When the annual report was written there were 89 members in the church at Harda, 397 pupils enrolled in the fourteen Sunday-schools, 117 in the day schools, three native evangelists and twelve native helpers and teachers.

The next year Mr. and Mrs. Adams were sent out to take the place that had been left vacant by the Nortons. Mr. Adams was born and educated in Vincennes, Indiana. At the time of his appointment he was serving the church in Steubenville, Ohio. It was thought advisable for them to settle in Bilaspur, a town 503 miles east from Calcutta. There are 1,500,000 souls in the Bilaspur district. Mr. Adams has the oversight of all the work at that station. He gives his strength to the work of preaching in the church and in the villages. He is assisted by three evangelists. He superintends the boys' Sunday-schools. The average attendance in the day school is 82; the total enrollment in the Sunday-school is 78. The boys in the day school are Hindus, Mohammedans and Christians. Mrs. Adams keeps house, has charge of the bookshop, visits the women in their quarters and renders efficient aid in the day and Sunday-schools. Like the other married women Mrs. Adams has made a home. This is one of the best of all evangelizing agencies. Outside of Christendom there is no such institution as a home. There are harems and seraglios; there are buildings where men, women and children live, but these places are not homes. Only where the gospel has gone is a home possible. Mrs. Adams teaches the boys to sing. She conducts a Bible class for Christian men and teaches in the Sunday-school. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is carrying on educational and medical work in Bilaspur. On this account the Foreign Society has no work among the girls and has no hospital or dispensary there.

S. McMullen teaches some in the school; his main work is that of preaching. In some of the villages the people have told him that their deities are only stones. The people who listen to the message are beginning to learn and to appreciate the great truth of God's love. Ernest Gordon gives most of his time to the children. In the school there are religious exercises every day. A half hour each morning is devoted to the study of the Scriptures. The present membership in Bilaspur is 58; there are seven teachers and helpers.

Mungeli is thirty-one miles from Bilaspur. The work there began in 1887. G. W. Jackson was the founder. The society now has a bungalow, a school, a hospital, a leper asylum and a dispensary at that station. There are two other dispensaries ten and twelve miles distant. Mr. Jackson's health having failed, he left for home. E. M. Gordon was engaged to take his place. W. E. Cooper and A. W. Hitt each spent some time at Mungeli. At the present time E. M. Gordon and Dr. Anna M. Gordon are in charge. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon were born and partly educated in India. Mr. Gordon spent one year in Chicago University. Dr. Gordon received one medical degree in Bombay and another in Brussels. She has two large gold medals which were awarded her for proficiency in her chosen profession. Like other missionaries Mr. Gordon uses the magic lantern to attract the people and to illustrate and impress the truth. He preaches in Mungeli and in one hundred and fifty villages within a circuit of a few miles. Two schools are conducted. One is a night school and is for such boys as cannot attend during the day. Dr. Gordon gives all her time to the medical work. Last year she saw 9,705 patients. She has given considerable attention to the lepers. They have been greatly benefited by regular diet and by her simple treatment. The work among the women has proven successful far beyond her expectations. Six can read their Hindi New Testaments. About thirty attend her Bible class on Sunday. Five of these have been baptized. The children in the Sunday-school go out in twos every Sunday and hold village Sunday-schools. There are six schools conducted by the children. Hera Lal, the medical assistant, has proven himself invaluable in the medical department. One of the most promising converts was a blind boy by the name of Gulali. He spent three years in the Bible and training school in Harda. Just as he was preparing for his best work he died. According to the latest statistics there are 75 members in the church at Mungeli, and 250 pupils in the Sunday-school. There are 25 lepers receiving treatment. The helpers number six.

Damoh is sixty-six miles from Jabbalpur. The work at that point began in 1895. The first workers were Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Rambo and John G. McGavran. Miss Josepha and Miss Stella Franklin, Mrs. John G. McGavran and Dr. Mary T. McGavran and F. E. Stubbin joined the mission later. Mr. Rambo was born in Missouri and educated in Kentucky University. Mrs. Rambo was born and educated in Vermont. Mr. McGavran is from Ohio. He is a graduate of Bethany College. Mrs. McGavran was born in Bengal and was educated in England. Her parents spent their lives in India as missionaries. Miss Josepha Franklin is a daughter of Joseph Franklin, of Bedford, Ind. She taught for some years in the school of Anderson, Ind., before her appointment. Ramabai spoke of Miss Franklin as one of the most heroic women in India. Miss Stella is her sister. Her work in the church and in a printing office before she asked to be sent to India, qualified her for service on the field. Dr. McGavran is a graduate of the Woman's College of Philadelphia. She spent one whole year in postgraduate work. She is supported by the women in the churches in Ehgland. Mr. Stubbin came from Australia. He is supported by the churches under the Southern Cross. He expects to give his life to the training of the orphans connected with the mission.

Damoh was selected on account of its healthfulness and on account of its central location. Damoh is the site of the orphanage for boys. There are now 165 under the control of the missionaries. Most of them are famine orphans. Miss Josepha Franklin teaches the boys in the day school. She aims to do the same grade of work that is done at home. She has the general oversight of the girls' school also. A half hour of every day is devoted to the study of the Bible. The life of Christ is taught in chronological order. Miss Franklin not only teaches the children, but the teachers as well. She gives them lessons in principles and methods of teaching. Gymnastics and military drill are also taught. Mr. Rambo gives much of his time to the boys. He is teaching them trades and is seeking to prepare them to live lives of usefulness and nobleness. Some of the boys are learning dairying, others poultry culture, others gardening, and a few tailoring. Other trades will follow in due time. The boys are now planting all kinds of seeds and watching their growth. They take readily to improved tools, such as hoes, shovels, picks, spades, rakes, forks and saws. A boy will do more work in half a day with an American tool than he can do in a week with Hindu tools. Mr. McGavran has equipped himself for evangelistic work. He prefers this to any other. He goes out into the villages and gives much of his time and energy to the instruction of those who have never heard the gospel of salvation. He has had much to do with the buildings that have been erected there. Two bungalows, an orphanage and an industrial school have already been provided. Other buildings are needed and will be supplied as soon as possible. Mr. Stubbin proposes to take charge of the workshops as soon as he has sufficient knowledge of the language to do so. Mrs. Rambo has charge of her own home. She aids in the mission in many ways. She makes garments for the boys with her own hands. She visits the orphanage almost every morning and teaches the little ones Bible verses and simple songs. Mrs. McGavran assists her husband and the other workers and looks after her children. Miss Stella Franklin gives herself to the work in the zenanas and to the villages. The people who know her say, "Come and see us;" or, "Come and teach us your Bible." She is also teaching a class of educated young men. Dr. McGavran looks after the health of all in the mission and as many of the people as need and seek her assistance. She needs and must have a hospital very soon.

In the famine tens of thousands of meals were given out to the starving. Money for relief came from England, Scotland, America, Australia, New Zealand and from wealthy people in India. The missionaries were asked to serve as agents in the distribution of money and other supplies. They gave out grain for food and for seed, thread, bamboos, leather, wood, clothing and other necessaries. Widows, orphans, blind, aged, crippled, lepers and hungry and helpless poor were relieved and saved alive. More than sixty villages were visited and helped by our workers in Damoh. In that time 730 children were cared for in the orphanage. More than one thousand other persons were supplied in the daily ministrations. Those who have been helped are the readiest to hear and to believe the gospel. It need surprise no one if thousands of Hindus and Mohammedans should turn to the Lord because of the self-sacrifice and the heroic devotion of the missionaries in those two years when the heavens above them were as brass and the earth beneath them as iron.

STRONG IN THF LORD.

W. H. BAGBY.

Finally, be strong in the Lord, and in the strength of his might.—Eph. 6:10.

This final exhortation of the great apostle forms a fitting climax to an epistle that lifts the reader to so many and such lofty spiritual heights. Like all his earnest appeals, it is based upon most important reasons. "For our wrestling is not against flesh and blood." If the combined navies of all the powers were blockading the ports of this nation the situation would not compare with that which confronts the church of Jesus Christ every day. The nation would be battling against flesh and blood. The contest in which the church is engaged is against principalities, the fountain sources of spiritual wickedness; powers, the authorized and active agencies of evil; world-rulers of this darkness, the personifications of the evil influences that emanate from the principalities; spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places, initial evil seated upon the throne of good—the devil and his hosts garbed as angels of light. This is the foe that confronts the Christian soldier as he steps into the ranks of the righteous. What need there is that he should be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might! In this strength alone can be won the victory upon which depend the home beyond the stars and the life that will live when time is dead. What urgent need that we should put on the whole armor of God! Unless we are so panoplied we cannot hope to stand against the wiles of the wicked one—his artifice, cunning, fraud.

Along with the warning against danger there is assurance of victory if only we be clothed in the strength of his might. "I can do all things through him who strengtheneth me" said the apostle and at the close of his life, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." He had taken up the whole armor of God. Through the hard-fought battle he stood like a rock. At its close he was found standing firm with his face toward heaven and his feet on his foe. Every piece of his armor is in place, stronger and better than when he first put it on. The girdle of truth is about his loins. This is not the knowledge of the truth, but the virtue of sincerity, genuineness, faithfulness. The breastplate of righteousness covers his heart and his soul is unscathed. His feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel. As they have ever been in a state of readiness to bear him through every battle, so they are now ready to bear him to the block of death. How much it means to be ready—prepared! At the battle of Manila the Americans were ready, the Spanish were not. "I am ready to preach the gospel in Rome also. I am ready to be offered up." His feet were shod with the readiness—the preparedness—of the gospel. Always victorious because always ready—prepared—for the battle. In his hand is the shield of faith. At his feet are the broken fiery darts of the enemy. "I have kept the faith." Faith is the victory that overcomes the world. On his head is the helmet of salvation—safety, soundness. The saved man is spiritually sound, and therefore spiritually strong. It is the unregenerate man who is weak. That is what made the difference between Paul the apostle and Simon the magician. In his hand was the sword of the Spirit—the sword the Spirit had forged and that Paul had so effectively used. On his lips was prayer, earnest and instant, for all saints. "That ye may be strengthened with power through his Spirit in the inward man; that Christ may dwell in you richly through faith, to the end that you being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled unto all the fullness of God."

THE LIFE.

A. CLARK, JR.

It is the business of men to live, to live high and nobly, to body forth in deeds and words the full measure of truth that is in them. Whether to live easily or painfully; whether in the peace of calm contentment or the ceaseless unrest of storm and strife, it matters little, so the man do his work, and do it intensely and well, as of the highest and best that is given to him to do.

And this thing of life, this ineffably precious mystery, intensely tragic, yet ceaelessly fascinating and beautiful—what is it? After all the wisdom of centuries, the rapturous visions of seers, the profound meditations of philosophers and the ecstatic revelations of divine men, we have only a pitiful part answer. We can say no more than this, that life in its fittest and fullest conception is the efforts, pathetically feeble, mayhap, of men to spell out the single word truth. It is that each man when he comes bearing his gift may say: "World, I bring thee not offerings of gold or silver, not the meed of earth-praise nor the sweet incense of fleshly delights, not achievements of wisdom nor triumphs of arms. I have naught to lay here in thy lap save this, this little thing, which I have gone on to seek through doubt and pain and despair—this infinitesimal measure of truth which I have lived." An insufficient answer, I say, only half intelligible; yet the best that in the imperfect light of human experience may yet be written. And by it must the final merit of every institution and every man be measured. For of every man, little or great, human man or divine man, there is but one question that can reasonably be asked. It is not, What did the man believe? nor, What were his antecedents and training? nor yet, To what social code or religious formulas did he conform? What of truth did the man live?—that is the only question. What sincere work did he labor manfully to do? Whether a pitiable man of destiny, ruthlessly trampling under foot the dearest sentiments and liberties of a nation and erecting from the fragments of broken dynasties and fallen thrones another dazzling lie, or only an immortal little monk of Wittenburg, sorrowfully defying the sacred and venerable mother church, and struggling with fateful persistence through the gloom of persecution, doubt and anguish out into the pure, sweet light of clearer truth—Napoleon or Luther, idolized imperator or proscribed priest; each man alike must be measured at last by this single question: How did he stand in his attitude towards life? Had he aught of truth to give his brother-men, that they might better know how to read aright the pathetic riddle of human life and destiny?

And it is in such a manner that we must come to judge Him, the unapproachable One, the unique God-man, whom we are wont to call the Christ. It is not he that by some process of mystery or miracle, defied the laws of nature in his birth; nor yet that the gift of some super-subtle power enabled him to dazzle or delude the senses of men by the manifestation of inexplicable physical phenomena. To measure his surpassing merit the incalculable world-worth and heaven-worth of him by the gross test of miraculous healings and impossible metamorphoses, perversions and suspensions of natural law were to degrade divinity to the pitifully low plane of a vulgar wonder-worker. Did he make the water into wine? Did he stay the tempest, heal the palsied arm, make the blind to see? Well, what of it? That were the poorest, most insufficient test of Godship; it is not to such things thinking men bow down. What of the life? That is the question. What had he to offer to the unhappy children of men, what clearer light and higher hope, what surcease of doubt, what glint of infinite sun-radiance to illume the all dark mystery of how to live? It is thus must your world-Savior be judged. And if, after the painful progress of centuries, frail men still despairingly cling to his all-trailing robe, it is for this, that there in his Word and work they may read how in largest part truth has been translated into life. The death is there, too—transcendent, unspeakable tragedy—yet of little worth then or now, save as the inevitable, triumphant therefore of such a life.

For, after all, it is the business of men to live, to live high and nobly, to body forth in words and deeds the full measure of truth that is in them. And He, the inimitable One, is most deserving of gratitude, reverence, worship, since in the light of his experience men may come near solving the ever-troublesome sphinx riddle. For there in him, unattained and perhaps unattainable, yet none the less infinitely worth the effort, may be found the life which, when lived in full perfection, will make of every man a god, even as he was God.

Rockport, Tex.

Our Budget.

—The Jubilee Convention will warm up the entire brotherhood.

—The spirit of evangelism and of missions are two essential growth elements.

—Longing for souls, praying for power and campaigning for Christ ought to characterize the church of Christ in a special sense this fall and winter.

—The churches ought not to be afraid of high marks set for their attainment, hereafter, seeing that those of the past year were so easily reached and nobody hurt.

—Keep a religious body full of religious enthusiasm and no power on earth or under the earth can prevent its growth. Crystallization can not take place during such conditions.

—Glowing accounts of the Jubilee Convention were given in various pulpits in this city on last Sunday and at the preachers' meeting in this office on Monday.

—The assistant editor of this paper preached to the Compton Heights Christian Church, this city, last Sunday A. M. and P. M., in the absence of their pastor, S. B. Moore.

—A number of Churches of Christ in this city have arranged for a protracted meeting this winter. F. O. Fannon, of the First Church began a protracted meeting in the Second Church last Monday night.

—"The mount of transfiguration," "the third heaven," "heaven itself," are some of the expressions used by delegates on their return from the Jubilee Convention in an attempt to convey to nonattendants a faint idea of their conception of its magnitude and power.

—In each of the representative gatherings or conventions of the leading Protestant religious bodies of the United States held thus far this year strong resolutions have been adopted vigorously protesting against the seating of Congressman-elect Roberts, from Utah, in the next Congress.

—A meeting of bishops of the Episcopal Church in the nature of missionary council is being held in this city this week. About 250 bishops and leading clergymen of that religious order are said to be present, but their deliberations w re wholly of an advisory character. A number of bishops filled the pulpits of their order in this city on last Sunday.

—Three properly directed questions on any theme, subject or substance, will drive the wisest man living into the regions of the unknown. We are not, therefore, very far removed from primeval darkness, notwithstanding our great boasting about enlightenment, science, civilization, etc. Our knowledge of primary things is exceedingly small.

—Don't drink too much, don't play progressive euchre too often, don't dance with the common herd, atttend church occasionally, keep up a good appearance in society, avoid religious literature and conversation, be prompt at your lodge, and a few other minor details such as will insure your popularity in life and a big funeral in death, is about the the answer which the ordinary member of the church to-day would give to the question, "What must I do to be saved?"

—The Interior seems to have found starlight on the mystery of the trinity provided it can be squeezed out of the following words in its comment upon the recent discovery of the triune nature of the North Star: "No physical fact will explain the mystery of the trinity, but the resolution of this best known and longest known of all the stars into three self-centered bodies, may illustrate the relation of the New Testament Trinity to the Old Testiment Unity of the God-head." Even starlight is delightfully acceptable in times of great darkness, but we fear that the above is too nebulous for practical uses.

—Upon reading the somewhat meager notice of the Jubilee Convention in the Herald and Presbyter last week we took up our pen to criticise that prominent religious journal for so small a notice of so great an event in its own city, when we happened to remember that the Jubilee Convention was not a Presbyterian affair!

—John Alexander Dowie, of Zion Tabernacle fame, Chicago, recently had a somewhat exciting and severe experience; one at least against which his faith did not get the victory. He attempted to deliver an advertised lecture on "Drugs, Doctors and Devils," and to his astonishment found all three of the elements of his theme painfully and aboundingly in evidnce, that is if we may use things and persons as he intentionally denominates them. And but for the police force he would not have escaped without bodily injury. So that for one time at least he felt devoutly grateful to physical force in the squad of policemen by whom he was rescued from a persistent assault, and if wise he will not soon attempt another harrangue on "Drugs, Doctors and Devils," in Chicago.

—Bro. N. M Ragland, of Fayetteville, Ark., who is supplying us with an occasional article poetically entitled, "Leaves From Mission Fields," and who has concluded a series of four articles outlining the life and labors of Bro. Garst, begins this week a series of similar articies on the life and labors of Miss Hattie L. Judson, whose picture we present on our first page. The deep spiritual tone, the inspirational theme of missions and the nobility of the characters presented make Bro. Ragland's articles gems of literature as well as added power to the cause of missions. Our readers this week will not, therefore, fail to be interested in the picture of Miss Judson and an account of her life and work from so gifted and consecrated a pen—from one who will himself soon enter the mission field in a foreign land.

—One of the newest and wisest of modern movements toward a better understanding between labor and capital is the league for Social Service, which has Dr. Josiah Strong for its president. From information distributed from the headquarters of this League, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City, we gather the following facts: The object of this league is the social and industrial betterment of labor. This object has led to a study of what employers are doing to improve the condition of their employees. The league has found that educational classes of all kinds, workingmen's clubs, baths in the factory, play grounds, summer camps, gymnasia, etc., etc., are being operated. It is the plan of the league to give the widest currency to movements for industrial betterment. A commercial membership has been made, so that any employer desirous of doing something for his people can get expert advice, just what might be done advantageously, and how to do it. The league has him for its client, and advises him. In addition, special reports will be sent him on any phase of industrial betterment that he may desire. Its first birthday was celebrated September 1, 1899. A branch office has been opened in London and Edinburgh, where members of the league may find mailing headquarters, and also secure information regarding social and industrial movements and institutions. It has foreign correspondents in nineteen different countries besides the United States. It has circulated 252,872 leaflets, or 4,136,588 pages, during its first year, which closed the last of August. Any support you can give this mediatorial work will be most happily and wisely invested and graciously received by the officers of the league.

—This week the W. C. T. U. are celebrating their silver anniversary in convention in Seattle, Wash. The convention opened October 20th with about 500 delegates present. In the president's opening address attention was called to the progress that had been made along various moral lines and also to the things needing present attention. The convention will not likely be troubled with the perplexing temple question, that having been disposed of at a former convention. Strong sentiment was expressed by the White Ribboners against polygamist Roberts for a seat in the National Congress. On this point Mrs. Stevens, in her presidential address, said:

When men of immoral character are being talked of to fill places of high position, it is the right of the mother, who is trying to train her sons to lives of purity and honor, to protest in all womanly ways, and such protests may prevent, as it sometimes has, the nomination of such men. By the same token when good men are sometimes discontinued in office because they have dared to stand for righteousness, we should not be silent, but bring the weight of our influence to bear against such action. There is nothing in the world evil-doers like so well as to be left alone and allowed to think that no one notices what is being done.

—Unfortunately an omission occurred in one of Bro. Jones' sentences in his recent article in this paper and we give herewith the sentence in full as it should have appeared:

On page 1,321, in item five, it read thus: "But suppose a man builds an argument jointly on philosophy and Scripture, an argument imbedded in human nature as revealed through universal consciousness, and imbedded in the divine nature as revealed in the Word of God, an argument interlaced and supported by scriptural proofs sanctioned by the consensus of Christian scholarship—what then?"

—November 12-18 has been appointed for a week of prayer by the American International Convention and the World's Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association. That for which the Association will especially pray and for which it asks the prayer of all the churches and for which all true Christian men and women should always pray is stated as follows:

1. A more consistent life on the part of the active membership, finding expression through the work of the Holy Spirit in Christian conduct, enthusiasm and activity.
2. Unsaved young men, especially for the associate membership and accompany this prayer with diligent effort.
3. The whole Association field and the young men of this and all continents. With this prayer there may be wisely presented on the Lord's day and during the week, to the membership, the churches and the community generally, a view of the whole work in its world-wide development and relationship.

A program of services for the entire work may be had of R. C. Morse, general secretary, 3 W. 29th Street, New York City, or of any Association headquarters.

—A recent number of the Christian Courier contains a synopsis of a sermon preached by J. B. Sweeney, Gainesville, Tex., on "The Good that Ingersoll Has Done the Church," in which he is reported to have said:

Likewise a great ado has been made about inspiration. Bibliolatry has had full sway here. No inspiration was needed when Paul told Timothy to bring his cloak to him. The Bible is not to teach science, or medicine, or history, or dates; it teaches religion. Inspiration revealed the great spiritual and religious truths necessary for salvation. Even should it be shown that there were errors in the human or secular or unimportant part of the Bible no harm is done. Often does Paul repeat in substance: "I say this, not the Lord;" "this is my judgment, not the Lord's revelation. You may ignore my advice and not sin. Why? Because I may make mistakes."

Ingersoll and infidels have done us real service in making us take a correct view of the Bible. Not worship it. It is not our Savior. It is only the finger-board to point us to him. "Search the Scriptures," said Jesus. We are to take a common-sense view of the book. Who wrote it, when, where, what is the divine side, and what the human? Our views may be different from those of the tenth century or last century. 'Tis not an important question. Getting rid of some of these traditional views, errors, no more destroys Christianity than cutting off some dead branches destroys the tree.

In some quarters such statements would be taken as evidence of rank heresy, but in Texas it may go for sound doctrine. If so, Brother Sweeney and the Courier are not in danger for promulgating such doctrine.

—Roman Catholic journals are quick to point out weak spots in our public school system and seem never to tire of the job, but they are unaccountably blind when it comes to the condition of children and of society in countries and communities where the parochial school system prevails. What a striking practical illustration of Matt. 7:3, 4!

—From the published reports of the Missouri Baptist General Association, held in Joplin, Mo., last week, we are given the following statistics, which will be of interest to our Missouri and other readers:

The fifty-two missionaries employed in the state preached during the year 10,058 sermons, were instrumental in securing 986 conversions, baptized 738 persons and traveled many thousands of miles. Doctor Manly J. Breaker, corresponding secretary of the Home and Foreign Missions, referring to the field at large, stated that Cuba, Porto Rico and Hawaii were now included in the home field; that the chief agencies in the work were the American Home Missionary Society, of New York, and the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, and that these together raised last year $521,250, of which Missouri Baptists gave $7,123, sustaining 1,650 workers. He also said that these 1,650 woykers supplied 4,387 churches, having a membership of 102,000. Number of sermons preached, 152,000; Bibles and Testaments distributed, 25,748; churches organized, 251; baptisms, 9,857; scholars in Sunday-schools connected with the churches supplied, 150,000; benevolent contributions secured on the field, $158,808. Speaking of the Foreign Mission work, he said that the chief agencies were the American Baptist Union, Boston, and the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. That these spent last year $728,878 and sustained 544 missionaries and 5,000 helpers. That these have under their care 1,815 churches, with a membership of 210,000, and that 14,000 were baptized during the year. Sunday-school scholars, 150,000. Referring to the part Missouri took in the work of the home and foreign fields, he said that during the year it had raised $6,912.72 for Home and $6,400 62 for Foreign Mission work. That this was a gain over last year of $1,557.54 in contributions to the former and $1,218 29 to the latter, making a total gain of $2,765.83.

Rev. H. B. Green, of Lowell, Mass., has put us under obligations to his kindness for a copy of his book containing seventeen pressed flowers which he gathered in Palestine, eleven of which are referred to in the Scriptures. A copy of this interesting souvenir may be had of Dumas & Co., Lowell, Mass., for $1.00.

The Institute of St. John is likely to become one of the most interesting and stimulating features of a new Christian revivalism. These institutes are pioneered by J. S. Hughes, of Chicago, who believes that the change from an age of analysis to the age of synthesis must bring John's writings to the front as the Reformation brought Paul's writings to the front. There is certainly a growing interest in his new work. Circulars will be sent free to those wishing further information.

Miss Ethel Allen, daughter of J. H. Allen, of this city, was married to Mr. Hamilton Grover, in Central Christian Church, on last Tuesday at 8:00 P. M. The ceremony was pronounced by W. T. Moore, dean of Christian Bible College, Columbia, Mo. Dr. Moore was called from the convention at Cincinnati to render this service. The bride was elegantly dressed, the church handsomely decorated and the ceremony eloquently presented. The bride and the bridegroom have the congratulations of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in their happy embarkation upon the matrimonial voyage.

Crumbs from the Feast of the Women.

By MARY WISDOM GRANT

How gladly would I give each address in full, the whole loaf, that our sisters throughout this broad land might be inspired as were those of us who sat at this happy feast in our great Jubilee Convention, but space will admit of only a crumb from each.

To gaze upon the faces of our beloved missionaries and hear their words of heroism and tender consecration caused us to brush away the unbidden tear and to be overwhelmed with feelings of unworthiness and humility which words cannot express. Before their commanding physical presence and personality, their intelligence, their spirituality, their modest, unassuming greatness, we felt our nothingness. Sisters, truly our missionaries are the superior ones among us, the aristocracy of the Disciples of Christ. They give their lives, the strength and beauty of their manhood and womanhood, joyfully; we give our paltry gifts, slowly, indifferently, yes, often grudgingly.

God bless our heroes and heroines, every one, and make us more worthy of them, in that we may more fittingly support them by our prayers, our love, our gifts, is my prayer.

At this hour in our semi-jubilee we are gathered to commemorate a very joyful occasion, the advent of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions among the agencies of the church for the furtherance of the gospel. On the 21st of October, 1874, the women of the Church of Christ assembled in their first missionary convention, and on Oct. 22 completed the organization of their society. Though it is only twenty-five years since, we who were the makers of that bit of history can scarcely realize now the condition of things out of which we that day passed.

The church at that time was practically reading the great commission, Go ye into all our own country and preach the gospel to the Anglo-Saxon.

And as to Christian women? "They were but women—what could women do?" Nothing to forward the kingdom except to illustrate the beauty of holiness by a pious walk and a well-ordered conversation.

We deferentially referred our proposed organization to the secretary of this representative body to know whether the church was ready for the innovation, and received for reply: "Go on; this is a flame of the Lord's kindling, and no man can extinguish it."

There was prejudice unreasonable and unreasoning to be overcome. A venerable Texas preacher, a good man and true, one whose holiest

> "Ambition was to walk with God
> In the paths the fathers trod," said with sorrowful, downward inflections, after our first public meeting: "Yes, the sisters did very well, but, Sister Pearre, I do think that in deference to the feeling of the Southern sisters this work ought to be given up!" See our Southern field to-day—Virginia and Georgia each has its Christian Lectureship under the auspices of the Woman's Board. Virginia has for years had one of her most consecrated daughters, whose education she fostered as a missionary in the foreign field and whose pen, touched by a live coal from the altar is an inspiration to the great brotherhood. Kentucky, last year the banner state for liberal giving, has for years had a refined home and Christian school set like a lighthouse in the sea of darkness of the mountain region. Arkansas rejoices in the contribution of one of her loveliest daughters to the Lord's work in Hindu and and now gives one of her devoted ministers for the inviting Calcutta work. Texas is the guardian angel of the mission to Mexico, her next door neighbor. At the C. W. B. M. Convention in 1894 all the devotional meetings were in the hands of the Southern sisters and delightfully conducted. Florida is even now all astir with preparations for the departure of her young medical missionary. We have nowhere truer or more loyal coworkers than they.

On that memorable day when the little society of seventy-five unlessoned women filed out of this room to begin its chosen work, it must have seemed to our experienced brethren a forlorn hope for lifting up the church's fallen banner, sailing over the sea and planting it again on the abandoned rampart. But in little more than a year it was in Jamaica—and to stay.

The gracious Father has had our missionaries in his keeping and their lives have been precious in his sight; not one has been lost.—MRS. C. N. PEARRE.

No small part of our joy on this occasion is the privilege of meeting and greeting the charter members of the society, those who came to Cincinnati twenty-five years ago and organized the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. The little band has multiplied into thousands. True, the lines have deepened on many a brow, and the snowy locks tell of the years that have gone, but through the undimmed eye the serene spirit looks out, speaking its beautiful trust in God.

In just so far as we have trusted our Heavenly Father have blessings attended our efforts.

To fairly estimate results we must consider the thousands who have become Christians through the teaching and influence of these missionaries and turned from their idols to the worship of the living God. Fifty missionaries have gone out under the auspices of our board, most of them women.

The growth and development of our women in church and missionary interests has come as blessing in disguise

90,000 women and $90,000 in '99 was an inspiration. There was a gain in membership and contributions.

We want money, consecrated money; but we want fellowship also—we must have larger fellowship. Let 100,000 women and $130,000 be our motto for 1900. Sound it out all over the land!

The time is ripe, the nations of the earth are open for the gospel.

Plan for larger things, shrink not from increased responsibility, and keep step with the rush of events as the world hastens to fulfill God's purpose concerning it. In the strength of our womanhood go forward, bravely and cheerfully accepting whatever comes in duty's path.—MRS. O A. BURGESS, Pres. National C. W. B. M.

Sisters of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, shall we not seek Christ, that he may abide with us, to leave us no more forever? Shall we not shut out from our lives all that will mar his pleasure; shall we not live simply, that we may have time to spend with him; shall we not allow him to control our expenditures; shall we not put away in his holy presence all anxious care and fretfulness; shall we not daily seek through communion with him, to learn the language and thought of that country in which we hope to dwell eternally? This is the day of our opportunity, this is the hour in which we need to be strong in him, if we would speedily bring the consummation of his divine plan. Satan is trembling before him, as his matchless powers are being made manifest. The world is recognizing in him the one conqueror. All powers are making ready to bow before him, willingly or unwillingly. The nations owning even nominally his sway are gaining the dominion of the earth, and shall not woman, on whose breast he was cradled, woman whom he remembered from his cross, woman whom he made the first messenger of his glad tidings, be first to prepare her heart for his appearing and by her consecration bring ever nearer Christ, who is not only the greatest need of the church, but of the whole world.—MRS. HELEN E. MOSES.

After all, dear friends, the great underlying need of the church is Christ. We cannot truly serve until we are filled with the love and spirit of our Lord Jesus.

We need to have him touch our fevered restlessness that we may be given a truer perspective of life; that he may point out to us what is worthy of our time and strength since he can only accomplish his work through us.—MRS. LOUISE KELLY.

Calcutta, if you can read its letters aright, spells for the C. W. B. M. Opportunity!—W. M. FORREST.

I believe more in the providence of God and the answer to prayer. My appointment to Calcutta is an answer to prayer.

I am willing to give my life for God.—N. M. RAGLAND.

The church has received these contributions from the Y. P. S. C. E.: 1. Increased confidence of older people in the young people in the church. 2. Developed latent power. 3. An appeal to the heroic. 4. Vitality in the young. 5. Children trained to pray naturally. 6. Stimulated Bible study. 7. Y. P. S. C. E. has come to stand for patriotism and citizenship. 8. Systematic giving. 9. Communion with God. 10. Development of loyalty and esprit de corps.

The Quiet Hour is giving God a chance at us.

Devotions consist in listening and hearing what God has to say, not in teasing God for material blessings. Take God into your life and be his constant companion.

The result of the Quiet Hour is the best thing the Y. P. S. C. E. can bring to the church.—FRANCIS E. CLARK.

To do the greatest missionary work in the world, parents, train your children to love to be alone with God.—G. P. COLER.

The first lunatic asylum in the world was built by a Christian woman outside the walls of Rome.—MRS. IDA WITHERS HARRISON.

If there is a discouraged pastor in this convention I would say to him: Go home and organize an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. The Aid Society is all right, but what your church needs to grow in spirituality and numbers is less oyster soup and more missionary tea.—NEIL MCCLEOD, Jamaica.

Those who aid in developing the work at home are just as much missionaries as those who go into distant lands. If every member would pay five cents per month into her state treasury and each treasurer would send one-tenth quarterly to the National Development Fund, there would be an ample amount to do the work required in the states now unable to employ a state organizer. Sisters, what are we going to do about this?—MISS LURA V. THOMPSON.

To think out a meeting is a most difficult part. Be sure when a meeting moves off smoothly that some one perhaps out of sight bore the burden, did the drudgery that was necessary to its success. There never was a song or prayer or thought offered in behalf of missions but had weight in turning the world to the Christ-man. Who can tell how much of that success, so constantly spoken of by our missionary boards, is credited on God's books to the influence of the apparently insignificant monthly meeting of the Auxiliary of the C. W. B. M.—MISS BERTHA MASON, former missionary to Mexico.

The three relations where woman's opportunities are greatest for loyal service to God and humanity are wifehood, motherhood and homemaker. Hannah, who stitched so many loving thoughts into Samuel's little coat, stands for the mother; Esther, who influenced her husband by a method not yet improved upon, stands for the wife; the nameless Shunamite women show us the power, the beauty and the rich results of hospitality in the home.—MRS F. M. LOWE, president of Missouri.

It is the part of wisdom to invest where we can expect the largest and quickest returns. $100,000 given for the work is soon used and the need remains; but 100,000 women will send their gifts from year to year, and will teach their children to give, and the work will never cease. Investing in women we are saving the women themselves from lives of narrowness and selfishness.

God always gives us all we are ready to receive. He blessed the widow's pot of oil to the filling of all the vessels she had brought. Had she brought more vessels she would have received more oil.—MISS ANNETTE NEWCOMER.

At the World's Fair, on the Midway Plaissance, very early one morning, a woman alone went into the Moorish Palace. With no idea what she would see, she entered the magic labyrinth of mirrors. Near-sighted and dazed, she looked for a time in admiration, mingled with awe, upon the company of remarkable woman she saw in the distance and on either side, in every possible light and at every angle of vision. She made many observations in her mind, such as, "That woman is as queenly as my eldest sister; this one has reserved power in her bearing, like my youngest one; that woman over there has personal magnatism that draws me toward her, I'd like to know her better; that one shows in her face the calm faith and courage which were developed by trials in my dear old maiden aunt;" and, "There at the right, in the distance—can that be my mother?" And as she turned to go forward to meet this last reflection of the magic mirrors, she came face to face against— "My dress! MY WRAP! MY FACE! MYSELF!''—and she hid her face to conceal her burning blushes from her own multiplied image! Will you make the application? Go alone, very early in the morning into the wonderful palace of your heart. Perhaps you will be dazed at first, but there, by the light of God's Word and the spirit and magic power of prayer, you may see at every possible angle your own highest aspirations and noblest loves; your own responsibilities and opportunities; and when you see clearly you will at length recognize the very same attributes and characteristics which you have long adored in your distinguished sisters and mothers in Israel, who have been worthy of God's especial honors and whom you have called ''God's women.'' You will cover your face in blushing reverence as you bow to thank God before the reflection of your own life missions; and, ere you go forth to your glorified work, you yourself will write in indelible letters of light across your own brain, and your own heart, and on the palm of each hand, and on the soul of each foot, ''GOD'S WOMAN!''—MRS. CATHERINE F. LINDSAY, Founder of the Missionary Social Union.

The women of the board are sometimes discouraged but they are thankful for the service. They need the work as much as the work needs them. Visions of the possibilities before us of homes for the incurable, for the aged, deaconesses where helpers may be trained as nurses and missionaries. To receive the plaudit, ''Well done,'' we must visit the sick and in prison and care for the needy. If we remove the many selfish motives for benevolent actions very few remain done simply for love of Christ. —MRS. H. M. MEIER.

Mrs. Dr. Younkin, that noble, unselfish woman in whose pure soul originated the disinterested idea of the benevolent work sent this message to the convention from her dying bed: ''My sickroom shall be a sanctuary of prayer for the conference at the convention.''

'Twas she, Mrs. Mattie Younkin, who through trials and tears and prayers did the pioneer work of the association.—MRS. J. K. HANSBROUGH.

Ninety per cent. of the children who enter our Orphans' Home become Christians.—MRS. ROWENA MASON.

Our Babies' Home has been in operation only four months and has cared for twenty-two babies. We have helped the mothers by finding employment for them while boarding their little ones. Our home is unique in being the only one in the city which aids mothers by boarding their children. Others will not take them unless the parents relinquish all claims and give them up wholly to the home.—MRS. O. C. SHEDD.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

We are now getting ready for the silver anniversary of the Bible-school work of the Disciples of Christ, for the next convention will be our twenty-fifth.

It is time for a silver present to the Lord of Hosts and to his work, and we shall strive to have the co-operation of every Bible-school in the state to help us in our work.

But now to the schools contemplating that which will seriously hurt your church in every department, suppose the frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder's in the shock: why should you close your school for the best term of the year? Don't do it, dont think of doing it. Don't let the other fellows think of it.

As says the Awakener, keep your school evergreen, but do not keep your teachers so, demanding that they be thoroughly ripe for their work.

Remember, January 1st we begin our study in the life of Jesus, chronologically, and to close your school shuts out one of the happiest periods in that life, and it will repay extra exertions to run right along. But, why not? The secular teachers do their best work in winter, while Pa declares that he works the team so hard in the spring and himself so hard in the summer that he can not well attend. Then, push the winter work, and so far as Pa is concerned, push hard, for the children will come winter and summer if Pa will only make the way.

At the National Convention the Bible school session was right up in G, and I do not hesitate to say that Mrs. A. A. Buxton in the primary work has no superior, while the Fifty Years of Bible-school History, by J. H. Hardin, was an eye-opener to many, and F. G. Tyrrell's outline of what the next fifty years, was endorsed by all. Bro. Hardin's paper will be seen, and it is hoped that Bro. Tyrell will put his thoughts in black and white.

By the way, what a fine time for the ''Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America,'' and for which the exercise of Mrs. Jessie Pounds is splendid, and is to be had in any quantity desired by addressing B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio. The exercise is very interesting and meets a popular demand. Have you seen the birthday boxes for the same occasion, and did you not get a sample souvenir to be given every child or any one that contributes one dollar to Home Missions? The souvenirs are just the thing and 2,000 girls and boys in Missouri should earn one. Decorate your church house with autumn leaves and flowers, interest the children in the exercise, invite the other people to attend and make it a great day for God and home.

Eldon, where C. C. Hill is managing the work, sends in their apportionment for the entire year, while Linneus, Maud and Red Top and Boone remit their proportion.

Sister Guthrie sends us the dollar memorial for her little daughter, Mary, as she has done for these years, and I am simple enough to believe that the little saint looks upon the giving with renewed joy, while your servant anxiously aims to see that it does an especially good work, or is used toward the compensation of some one that does such.

Tuxedo, St. Louis, has had the fall rally and all pronounce it one of their best. The attendance was very large, the interest was fine, the workers were happy, and the children did as usual, their prettiest. You will find it so with your rally if you will immediately write for your exercise to Bro. Smith and push forward for the November rally for America. Write now.

Remember, T. A. Hedges, LaGrange, takes our work in North Missouri, and he will do your school good, for there are few better men in institute work than he, and one visit from him will convince the most doubting. But he cannot visit all at once, write him now for a date and arrange for good and substantial work in bettering yourself in the advaced methods of this cause.

Will your school not accept its apportionment and will you not see to it now before so many collections came upon us? Get this work out of the way by remitting us your part due to date, or for the year, which is better, and then we will not intetfere with your offerings at other times and dates. See? Well, let us see by your remitting that you did see things as we do, and responded thereto.

Weak Lungs and Wasting Away the Bane of Womanhood.

The Famous Slocum Treatment Curing Thousands in Every State.

FREE to Every Christian-Evangelist Reader.

Thousands of women are wasting away day by day, week by week, month by month, through anxiety, overwork and motherhood.

Their once robust constitutions have been overtaxed, and the wasting away process has thrown them into decline.

From 150 pounds to the last bed of sickness from which all hope has fled, is but a step or two.

How important, then, to check the consumptive germs in time!

Every one who has week lungs, who has a cough that does not mend, who has asthma, catarrh or pulmonary trouble, the grip or its after-effects, should without delay send for a full course of Dr. Slocum's famous treatment, which is sent free to all who apply.

Delay means but one ending—consumption.

Since the wonderful discoveries of Dr. Slocum have been brought to the attention of the medical world, the death rate has been greatly reduced. Not only does the Slocum System of Treatment cure all lung and pulmonary diseases, but even consumption itself, as has been proven by thousands of prominent physicians.

No matter how deep-seated the ailment, Dr. Slocum can cure it.

Mrs. Julia Glover, Easley, S. C., says:

''I contracted consumption in January, 1898. Three physicians failed to help me. Night sweats reduced me so I was but a wreck. After trying almost every means for getting well, I finally sent for a free course of treatment from Dr. Slocum, and it entirely cured me. To day I weigh 191 pounds, and am a living example of the wonderful miracles he is performing everywhere.''

The Slocum system kills the deadly bacilli, imparts vigor to the body and makes firm, healthy flesh.

In a word, it strengthens and builds up, making men, women and children stout and healthy, when all other means have failed.

Now that the raw winds of fall and winter are at hand, Dr. Slocum proposes to further demonstrate his wonderful triumph by sending to every suffering reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a Full Free course of the Four Preparations comprising the treatment.

WRITE THE DOCTOR.

Simply send your post office and express address, stating you read the article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the Free Course will reach you without delay.

Write Dr. T. A. Slocum, 98 Pine Street, New York, where his great laboratories and correspondence consulting offices are located. If in doubt as to your disease, or in need of advice, write the Doctor freely and you will be told what to do.

SPECIAL NOTE.—The Slocum Treatment is medicine reduced to an exact science, and this is an honest, straightforward offer made by the world's most famous physician. All readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST anxious regarding the health of themselves, childen, relatives or friends, can have Four Free Preparations with complete directions for use in any case, by sending full address to Dr. Slocum's Laboratory, New York City.

New York Letter.

The Atlantic Coast delegation to the Jubilee Convention was a jubilant company. When we left New York Wednesday morning the 11th, there were about a dozen of us representing New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, New England and New York. At Philadelphia Bro. J. S. Myers and a goodly company of the "brotherly love" saints joined us. At Baltimore B. A. Abbott and others from that city reinforced our pilgrim band. Washington City contributed E. B. Bagby, Ira Kimmel and many others to enlarge our delegation and inspire us with their goodly fellowship. At Gordonsville a coachload of good Disciples from Eastern Virginia were hitched on to our train, and journeyed with us to Clifton Forge in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains where we rested over night at the Gladys Inn. At Charlottesville the North Carolina representatives became a part of our traveling convention, for such it was. Early in the morning of the 12th we left Clifton Forge about one hundred and fifty strong, and all day journeyed in delightful fellowship amid the beautiful scenery along the far-famed Chesapeake and Ohio route, down the great Kanawa River. The journey to the convention was one of the most delightful social features of all—one that helped to prepare the way for the higher enjoyment of the great convocation.

One of the saddest and yet one of the most potent events of our gathering was the sudden death of Bro. A. M. Atkinson, the noble secretary of the Board of Ministerial Relief. As he was closing a fervid address and appeal to a session of business men at the Grand Hotel on Saturday night, Oct. 14th, he exclaimed, "Quit ye like men, be strong!" and sank back in his chair, breathing out his earthly life. All possible assistance was rendered to restore and revive him, but to no avail. Though it saddened our hearts to know Bro. Atkinson will meet with us no more in our earthly conventions, yet we do not doubt that his death found as it were a golden link binding us all in thought and purpose more closely to heaven; for as we met at the great convention service on Sunday afternoon, Bro. J. H. Garrison made an appropriate address emphasizing Bro. Atkinson's message to us, viz., our high privilege and solemn duty in ministering to the necessity of the saints. Let us hope and pray that this message may be the more readily heeded by us since our dear departed brother has sealed his ministry on this behalf with his death even more effectually than by his life. Let us establish an Atkinson Memorial Relief Fund, the interest of which shall be used as he would have us do in behalf of the helpless preachers and their families. This will be the best way to show our endorsement of his labors.

The reports of all the boards are so inspiring, both financially and as to the work done at home and abroad, that the delegates, who are perhaps 10,000 strong, are jubilant with enthusiasm and hope. All the reports are good—far beyond our expectation. The addresses up to the present have been uniformly good, and the arrangements of the local committees have met with unstinted praise. The outlook for the future work was never so bright as now. We rejoice and go forward in the work of the Lord.

The Sunny South, published in Atlanta, Georgia, and the Christian Index, of Des Moines, Iowa, are by special arrangement publishing Charles M. Sheldon's great book, "In His Steps," by chapters in their columns. But few religious novels will permit of the compliment of so many republications after its first appearance, and it may yet become as popular in America as it now is in England.

Texas Letter.

About one hundred delegates from Texas attended the Jubilee Convention—by far the largest number ever sent from here to a convention. Some of us who wished to go could not, and we content ourselves in the good luck of our more fortunate friends. When Campbell and Owen were in a debate, at one point Owen's friends had a fine laugh at Campbell's expense, when the sage of Bethany quietly remarked, "It makes me happy to see Mr. Owen and his friends happy." But it makes us more than happy to see these hundred Texans happy; it also makes us hopeful, for they will return to us so filled with holy enthusiasm that the whole state will feel the thrill of their joy and be awakened to a new religious zeal.

What a glorious epoch is this Jubilee Convention! All our societies forging ahead of their figures. It means great things for the cause of missions, and we rejoice.

During our state fair in Dallas there was a big dollar dinner, at which many of the big guns of Democracy were present, such men as Bryan, Stone, Belmont, Clark, etc., and a Christian man's bid was accepted as the best for the banquet. But when they told him later that the bill of fare must include wine, he promptly threw up the job, telling them that his conscience would not allow him to serve wine. The managers took the matter under consideration and soon decided that a man with such solid convictions was too valuable to be cast aside, and they told him to go ahead and give them the banquet without wine. He did so, and it was the greatest success of its kind ever seen in the Lone Star State. If we had a few more such modern Daniels it would be good for our politics.

And whisky got another black eye during the fair. Our city council passed a special ordinance opening the saloons on Sunday. The mayor, another Christian gentleman, after some deliberation and hesitation vetoed it. The council promptly attempted to pass it over his head, but failed. Two of the councilmen who stood by the mayor in this fight are members of the Central Christian Church of this city. The saloon can be downed if good men will stand together in the fight. If we were united as the whisky men are we would sweep them from the field in a single struggle.

Conditions in Florida.

Christian-Evangelist:—Of late I have received a number of communications from the North in relation to the opportunities for pastoral and evangelistic work in Florida. I take this means of answering a number of these letters, and also of giving information to others who may contemplate making enquiries.

It is self-evident that Florida needs preachers, and a goodly number of them. It is also true that the men could most easily be found if they could be given a support. But very few churches in Florida can support a pastor, and these churches are supplied. We have many small towns, country places and outlying districts containing scattered church members, some of them organized into small bodies and holding regular services, with stated visits from some preacher. We must believe from some experience and observation that the co-operative system would work well in some localities in our state where it is yet to be tried. Preachers with failing health, or with members of their families demanding a more genial clime on account of infirmities of the flesh, and who come to us like birds of passage to escape the winds of the North, expecting to leave us again in the springtime are not just what will fill the bill of church needs in Florida. True, we will welcome all such, and will not begrudge them one breath of our balmy air; but a trip of three or four months, footloose and uncertain, and sometimes almost careless as to results, with a sermon here and a sermon there, is not the kind of pastoral or evangelistic work to do us good. Brethren, if you come, come to stay. Scores of small towns and growing villages, within some a dozen, and in others one or two Christians, are here. Some of these points will pay you something, in others you will have to pioneer it. Many of our brethren in this state are poor, the most of them are so, but the state is improving. Our towns are growing. Our climate is the pink of perfection, and if you have stick-to-a-tiveness about you to hold on and grow up with these developing communities, come along. We have many good things in Florida; but, my brethren, dont't think you will drop into a soft snap because our air is balmy and our skies are bright, and don't flatter yourselves that you will be able in a "series of your choicest and most convincing" sermons to tear the earth asunder or set the lagoons of our state in a conflagration. Florida is cosmopolitan, and needs a "long pull, a strong pull and an all pull together." It may be thought that the above is indefinite. The same can be said of some of the enquiries that come to us. We have many new fields needing spiritual development here, but very much depends on the man who may undertake the work. A man must be a good preacher and an indefatigable worker to succeed here. At times he will find, if there is not much inspiration in his work, he will as a compensation have plenty of perspiration. We will most gladly welcome all consecrated and determined workers to this field.

The Law After a Local Trust.

The Missouri baking powder trust, of which Mr. Whitney Layton, of St. Louis, is secretary, is defending a criminal action brought by the authorities for violation of the law which prohibits the use of alum, arsenic, etc., in baking powders and other articles of food. It seems that Mr. Layton has already been arrested for selling baking powder containing alum. The combination of alum powder manufactures will probably have its hands full in defending similar suits, as it is said to be the determination of the prosecuting authorities to rigidly enforce the law.

In prohibiting the sale of articles of food containing alum, Missouri has followed the recommendations of the leading physicians and boards of health of th country, and it would appear as if the law strictly enforced would remove a source of danger to the public health which for years has been the cause of much concern to all medical men. Meantime, housekeepers will aid the authorities in driving out the danger by demanding of their grocers a baking powder that does not contain alum.

Leaves from Mission Fields.

MISS HATTIE L JUDSON.—NO. I.

"Laid on thine altar, O Lord divine,
Accept this gift to-day for Jesus' sake.
I have no jewels to adorn thy shrine,
Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make;
But here I bring within my trembling hand
This will of mine—a thing that seemeth small—
And thou alone, O Lord, canst understand
How, when I yield thee this, I yield mine all."

In gathering leaves from mission fields one is treading on holy ground, sacred as the soil of the burning bush, or the floor of fair Loretta's shrine. Every leaf is rich in asssociations and fragrant as morning roses newly washed with dew. On every one is the seal of the divine Spirit given in approval of the lives that are offered either for service or for sacrifice. To thoughtful minds and responsive hearts these leaves will teach a varied lesson. They are messages from distant lands telling a pathetic story of deathless devotion, unchanging affection and infinite sacrifice in the cause of world-wide missions. It is the story of Gethsamane and Calvery repeated in the experiences of those who have taken up the cross and have followed the Man of Sorrows into the land of idols. Were he to return to-day he would find in every country as high examples of faith as those that adorned the first century. In fact, these examples have been multiplied many times. There is a great cloud of witnesses who say:

"My life is not my own, but Christ's who gave it,
And he bestows it upon all the race;
I lose it for his sake, and thus I save it;
I hold it close, but only to expend it.
Accept it, Lord, for others, through thy grace."

A good name is better than precious ointment. It is also the most valuable heritage that can descend from parent to child. Judson is a name that will be held in the most affectionate regard in many lands as long as the great commission of our Lord is respected and obeyed. It at once suggests all that is heroic in faith, pathetic in suffering and steadfast devotion. Adoniram Judson, the first American missionary to the East, is in every way worthy of a place among the splendid company of saints and martyrs mentioned in the Epistle to the Hebrews. To wear his name is a great honor. The subject of this memoir enjoyed this distinction. Her father belonged to this worthy New England family. Hattie L. Judson was born in Danbury, Connecticut, August sixteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-one. Like most of the best people in this American Republic, her ancestors were farmers. They were also noted for piety and high Christian character. Her great-grandfather, Wildman, was one of the charter members of the Church of the Disciples of Christ in Danbury. Early in life Hattie began to taste the sad variety of grief. When she was an infant only two months old her mother died and left the helpless babe to the care of others. Only the heart that has experienced the infinite loss of a mother's love can understand what this means. Our Father in heaven, who takes notice even of the sparrow's fall, will not neglect the children of his love. Hattie found a home in the family of her grandmother, where she lived till she was three years old. In the meantime her father married again and she returned to her home. She was educated in a rural district school. A girl of good mind and studious habits, she made rapid progress in the rudiments of an English education. At the age of sixteen she was able to teach a district school. She taught one summer in a neighboring village, walking to and fro, a distance of two miles, every day. This was a valuable exercise for the future missionary. At the age of twenty she entered a hat factory in Danbury and worked at this trade for eleven years. This experience she also turned to good account in her work on the foreign feld. She had schooled herself to the habit of improving every task for the future as well as for the present good. At the tender age of fifteen Hattie became a Christian, and was received into the fellowship of the church in Danbury. In her young heart the good seed of the kingdom found a soil genial almost to a miracle. Her growth in the gifts and the graces of the gospel was beautiful. She became an intelligent worker in the various organizations in the church. She held several official positions, such as president of the Endeavor Society, assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school and treasurer of the King's Daughters. Her greatest work, however, was in the auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. In the meetings of this society her thoughts and her affections were constantly directed to the whitening fields both in this country and in other lands. As she earnestly prayed for increased offerings and a larger company of laborers, the conviction grew upon her that she ought to lay her own young life and devoted heart upon the altar of Foreign Missions. The writer was present at the great convention in Nashville, seven years ago, when Miss Judson was introduced by the venerable Charles Louis Loos, and gave her experience in the following words, instinct with meaning and emotion: "I conceived the desire to become a missionary after our auxiliary was organized in Danbury. My heart went out in sympathy to the heathen in their darkness. I believe it impossible to fully understand their sorrows and their sufferings. I thought, perhaps, some one else could do the work better. I also thought that a missionary should be a perfect being, and that only such should offer himself. At last, however, I reached the conclusion that I would commit a sin if I did not offer myself as one desirous of entering the field. I at once wrote Mr. McLean, and the result you know this morning." Miss Judson returned from Nashville to her home in Danbury, and at once began preparations for the long journey to India. Early in the following December she sailed from New York bound for Bombay. She made the perilous trip over sea and land in thirty-five days, the shortest time of any of our missionaries. She reached her future home in Hurda, Tuesday, January tenth, eighteen hundred and ninety-three. She says of her reception by the missionaries in that strange land: "I had a right royal welcome, and so unexpected. I am much pleased with the missionaries." She at once began the study of the language in which she was to tell the glad story of the cross. She was happy in the thought that she had given up all for Christ and was able to do even a little service in his name.

"No service in itself is small,
None great, though earth it fill;
But that is small that seeks its own,
And great that seeks God's will."

One More Free Church in Missouri.

Last Sunday was a day of exultation and rejoicing with the brethren at Fairplay. We sang the song of deliverance and closed our afternoon service with that ever-appropriate and blessed song, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Five years ago a little band of Disciples were brought together at this place under the labors of A. D. States. Nearly all of them babes in Christ and inexperienced in church work, but earnest and loyal to the cause of the Master, surrounded by bitter sectarian opposition, they were forced to provide a place of worship. The building of a church house was soon decided upon, various plans were submitted and suggestions made, and it was finally decided to erect a stone building, and enough money was subscribed to build the house had it all been collected and judiciously used, but exhorbitant prices were paid for labor and material, collections neglected until subscribers had moved away or changed their minds, and as a result, before the house was completed our funds were exhausted and a debt of five hundred and fifty dollars left hanging over us. Those of us who had borne the heaviest of the burden were unable to do more. Little internal difficulties arose and for a time it seemed the little band would scatter and our house be sold for debt, but just at the most propitious moment our Church Extension Board (God bless them) stepped in and saved our home in this peril, but unsettled difficulties magnified, and discouraged and disheartened, without a preacher or efficient elder, our Sunday-school and church attendance grew less until January last, at which time we were without a Sunnay-school or a meeting of any kind.

At this time, as was the case when the Board of Church Extension came to our relief, Bro. J. S. Palmer, of Kansas City, came and preached for us one week, greatly reviving our drooping spirits and encouraging us to renewed effort, and while I don't believe in special providence, it would be hard to make this congregation believe that the good Lord did not have some hand in sending him to us. Bro. Palmer is a strong man, a consecrated Christian, and an untiring worker in the Master's vineyard. He has done more missionary work in helping weak churches than any other preacher in the state. Refusing another charge, a better salary and a good working congregation to come and labor for us in our distressed condition to try and save the cause at Fairplay. Less than eight months have passed since he took charge of the work here, the scattered flock has all been gathered into the fold again, sixteen confessions; two from the Methodists, two from the Baptist churches and seven by letter, making in all thirty-six additions since January. Not a jar or discord in the congregation, our church has been finished at an expense of three hundred dollars, and the money raised to pay every dollar of the old debt, to be paid by December 24th, 1899. Every dollar subscribed is as good as gold. Bro. T. B. Larimore, of Florence, Ala., was with us one week and assisted in the dedication. Bro. Larimore is an able man and at home in the pulpit.

We now have the best church house, the best preacher, and the best working congregation in Polk or Cedar Counties, and shall never forget the blessing bestowed upon us by the Church Extension Board. Next year they may expect a liberal offering from us in return for past favors.

Brethren, rejoice with us, for the Lord doeth all things well. R. D. GORDON, Member Church Board.

"Was Joseph Smith a Polygamist."

The article in the Saints' Herald under the above title is from the pen of Apostle Herman C. Smith, "corresponding editor," and not from that of Pres. Joseph Smith, as stated in my former article. As the article is unsigned and appearing in the editorial department of the paper, I only discovered my mistake by a glance at the "Editorial Items." The correction is made with pleasure.

Elder Smith is a personal friend of the writer, having known him from boyhood, and I take pleasure in saying that I entertain no doubt as to his sincerity. But a man's sincerity does not prove the righteousness of his cause. So far as the writer is concerned it is a matter of indifference whether Joseph Smith was a polygamist or not, and yet it is fair and right that the investigating public should, as far as possible, have the exact truth upon the question.

Having examined that part of the Herald article that relates to Mrs. Zina D. Huntington Young, I shall now examine the argument which seeks to overthrow the presumption of Joseph Smith's guilt, raised by the testimony of Mrs. Emily D. Partridge Young. The woman in question either was or was not the plural wife of Joseph Smith. If polygamy was not practiced in Nauvoo previous to Joseph Smith's death, then we are willing to grant that he was not a polygamist. But, on the other hand, if polygamy was practiced in Nauvoo before the prophet's death, then it will be admitted by his most ardent defenders that it is just possible that he might have been the secret possessor of a plurality of wives. First, then, let us decide the mooted question as to whether "spiritual wifery," or polygamy, was practiced in Nauvoo before Joseph and Hyrum Smith were shot. Upon this point I shall produce one of their own witnesses—a man whose testimony they dare not question. We refer to William Marks, who was, at the time of the death of Joseph Smith, "president of the Stake," at Nauvoo, Ill. President Marks says:

A few days after this occurrence I met with Bro. Joseph. He said that he wanted to converse with me on the affairs of the church, and we retired by ourselves. I will give you his words verbatim, for they are indelibly stamped upon my mind. He said he had desired for a long time to have a talk with me on the subject of polygamy. He said it eventually would prove the overthrow of the church, and we should soon be obliged to leave the United States, unless it could be speedily put down. . . . He said that he would go before the congregation and proclaim against it, and I must go into the High Council, and he would prefer charges against those in transgression, and I must sever them from the church unless they make ample satisfaction. There was much more said, but this was the substance. The mob commencep to gather about Carthage in a few days, therefore there was nothing done concerning it.

After the prophet's death I made mention of this conversation to several, hoping and believing that it would have a good effect; but to my great disappointment it was soon rumored about that Bro. Marks was about to apostatize, and all that he said about the conversation with the prophet was a tissue of lies. —*Saints' Herald, Vol. I, pp.*22, 23, as quoted in Herald of Aug. 2, 1899.)

Elder Smith quotes the above to show that "after the death of Joseph Smith the existence of polygamy and plural marriage was denied even by Brigham Young and his associates until August 29, 1852." That the quotation proves that "Brigham Young and his associates" denied the existence of polygamy at the time of the prophet's death cannot be truthfully denied, but it proves another fact, which the writer of the Herald article studiously seeks to conceal, namely, that polygamy actually did exist at the time, all their denials to the contrary notwithstanding.

Elder Marks was at the time he made the foregoing statement an honored member of the Reorganized Church, and remained so to the day of his death. His testimony must be accepted as unquestionably true. He honestly states that the prophet "had desired for a long time to talk with him on the subject of polygamy"—that polygamy would eventually "prove the overthrow of the church, . . . unless it could speedily be put down."

Why all this anxiety? Why had Joseph Smith "desired for a long time" to talk with Elder Marks on polygamy? Why should the prophet manifest so much eagerness to "put down" something that did not exist? The fact is, his secret was out. Polygamy had been practiced in Nauvoo "for a long time," Joseph Smith himself being the witness, and the evil had grown to such gigantic proportions that the prophet becomes alarmed for his personal safety. He saw that such a storm of indignation would arise that it would sweep the entire church from its moorings and force the entire Mormon population "to leave the United States." Something must be done and that speedily or all was lost. Joseph would "go before the congregation and proclaim against it," and President Marks "must go into the High Council" and sever all from the church who would not make "ample satisfaction."

How this scheme would have worked will never be known. The storm came sooner than was expected, and in the terrible whirlpool of fury that immediately followed, the prophet and his brother Hyrum went down, down to their death in Carthage jail.

That polygamy flourished in Nauvoo at the time of the prophet's death is proved beyond the possibility of reasonable doubt. Elder Marks asserts it most positively, and even Elder Smith will not dare to dispute what his own witness declares.

If William Marks told the truth (and who can doubt it?) then it is perfectly clear that all those in the practice of polygamy would deliberately lie to conceal their crimes. If Brigham Young, John Taylor, Parley P. Pratt and others would deliberately lie to conceal the fact that polygamy was practiced among their people, what reason can Elder Smith offer to show that Joseph and Hyrum Smith would not do the same thing to save themselves from the penalty of a violated law? The fact is patent to everybody that any man who lives in constant violation of the law will have no scruples to even swear to a lie to save himself from the punishment due to his crimes. The fact, is this interview with Elder Marks can only be explained on the hypothesis that polygamy had existed in Nauvoo, "for a long time," and that to an extent that alarmed Joseph Smith and his confederates as to their personal safety.

With the testimony of William Marks before him Elder Smith will hardly be rash enough to deny that polygamy was practiced in Nauvoo at the time immediately preceding the prophet's death.

With this fact settled, let us now proceed to determine, whether Joseph Smith, Jr., was a polygamist. This leads us to enquire:

WAS EMILY D. PARTRIDGE YOUNG THE POLYGAMOUS WIFE OF JOSEPH SMITH?

Upon this point we introduce the testimony of Lovina Walker, of Salt Lake City, as follows:

I, Lovina Walker, hereby certify that while I was living with Aunt Emma Smith in Fulton City, Fulton county, Illinois, in the year 1849, she told me that she, Emma Smith, was present and witnessed the marriage or sealing of Eliza Partridge, Emily Partridge [Emily D. Partridge Young, the very woman in question.—D. H. B.], Maria Lawrence and Sarah Lawrence, to her husband, Joseph Smith, and that she gave her consent thereto.

LOVINA WALKER.

We hereby witness that Lovina Walker made and signed the above statement on the 16th day of June, A. D., 1869, of her own free will and accord.

HYRUM WALKER,
SARAH E SMITH,
JOSEPH F. SMITH.

Let us now introduce the sworn statement of the very best witness in this case, that of the woman herself.

AFFIDAVIT OF EMILY D. P. YOUNG.

TERRITORY OF UTAH, } ss.
COUNTY OF SALT LAKE }

Be it remembered that on this 1st day of May, A. D., 1869, personally appeared before me, Elias Smith, Judge of Probate for said county, Emily Dow Partridge Young, who was by me sworn in due form of law, and upon her oath saith that on the 11th day of May, A. D., 1843, at the city of Nauvoo, county of Hancock, state of Illinois, she was married or sealed to Joseph Smith, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, by James Adams, a high priest in said church, according to the law of the same regulating marriage, in the presence of Emma (Hale) Smith and Eliza Maria Partridge (Lyman).

EMILY D. P. YOUNG.

Subscribed and sworn to by the said Emily D. P. Young, the day and year first above written. E. Smith, Probate Judge.

—Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism, pp. 376, 377.

It will be observed that the certificate of Lovina Walker and the affidavit of Mrs. Emily D. P. Young are in perfect agreement in every essential particular. Mrs. Walker says Emma (Hale) Smith witnessed the marriage of Miss Emily Dow Partridge and her sister Eliza Partridge to her husband, Joseph Smith, and Mrs. Emily D. P. Young corroborates this by saying that both Emma Smith and her sister Eliza Partridge were present when she was sealed to the prophet on May 11, 1843.

Concerning her subsequent marriage to Brigham Young, Mrs. Stenhouse explains that "when Joseph Smith died, Brigham told his wives that they were at liberty to choose whom they would for husbands; . . . thus it was that Emily Partridge became Brigham's wife."—Tell it All, p. 289.

Such evidence as the foregoing can only be met by the impeachment of the witnesses, and this Elder Smith undertakes by showing that the witness in question contradicts herself as to the date upon which she claims to have been married to the prophet.

Upon this point Elder Smith remarks:

In the case of Emily D Partridge Young we need to say but little. In her testimony in the famous Temple Lot suit she testifies that she was married to Joseph Smith. At one time in her testimony she said this event transpired on March 11, 1843, and at another time gave the date May 11, 1843. (It is immaterial which date she intended to give.)—The Saint's Herald, Aug. 2, 1899, p. 491.

Elder Smith seeks to invalidate the testimony of Mrs. Emily D. Partridge-Smith-Young by showing that she contradicts herself upon two points. But neither of these points, as I shall show, is material to the question at issue. In this case the issue clearly is this: Was the witness, Mrs. Emily D. P. Young, ever married to the defendant, Joseph Smith? The exact date of marriage, or the particular form of law under which the marriage was consummated, are, therefore, questions of no material consequence.

If the date of the marriage was the point in controversy, then a contradiction as to date would be fatal. But as the question of date is not the issue, a slight discrepancy with respect thereto cannot invalidate the testimony of the witness upon the main issue, unless it can be shown that the date upon which the witness claims to have been married to the defendant renders the alleged marriage, at the time stated, absolutely impossible. And this Elder Smith neither claims nor attempts to prove.

The Herald editor next undertakes to break down the testimony of this witness by trying to show that the "revelation" under which she claims to have been married to the prophet did not exist at the time she alleges the marriage to have taken place. Elder Smith quotes the witness as saying:

I was not married to Joseph Smith under the revelation on sealing, but I was married to him under the revelation on plural marriage.

Under cross-examination she was asked:

Q. Now, I would like for you to explain how you were married to Joseph Smith under the plural marriage revelation when the church you belong to claims that revelation was not given until July, 1843; just tell how you could be married under a revelation in March that was not given until July?

A. Well, I do not know anything about that.—Plaintiff's Abstract, p. 364.

From this it appears that the writer of the Herald article is of the opinion that the testimony of this witness cannot be relied upon because of the slight discrepancy relative to the "revelation" under which the alleged marriage is said to have taken place. She claims to have been married to the prophet "under the revelation on plural marriage," not later than May 11, while Elder Smith urges that this cannot be true for the reason that this "revelation" did not exist till July 12 following—some two months after the date of the alleged marriage.

On the surface this objection may seem to possess some merit, but as a matter of fact it has neither legal value nor logical force. Upon this question Elder Smith assumes—

1. That the "revelation on plural marriage" had no existence till July 12, 1843.

2. That no polygamous marriages could possibly take place without it, and hence, no "plural marriage" had ever been performed; and—

3. That Mrs. Emily D. P. Young had, therefore, never been "sealed" to Joseph Smith.

In the first place, his objection is wholly immaterial. What he urges respecting the "revelation" under which witness claims to have been married to the prophet may be true, and yet the fact that she was married to him would still remain. The question is not one respecting the law under which she was married, but it is rather a question of fact—was the witness in fact married to Joseph Smith? All other questions are but secondary, and have but little, if any, bearing upon the real issue.

But I wish to invite attention to a few facts relative to these assumptions. In the first place, Elder Smith professes to believe that Joseph Smith was not the author of the document that enjoins and regulates the practice of polygamy. If it be true that Joseph Smith did not receive the "revelation on plural marriage," and if it be true that no polygamous marriage could be performed without it, as Elder Smith assumes, then it follows, as a logical necessity, that no "plural marriages" have ever been performed. With all the facts before him will Elder Smith take this ground? On the other hand if plural marriages could be and in fact were performed in the absense of such a "revelation" from the prophet, then the argument that the witness could not have been married to Joseph Smith as alleged falls to the ground, and the case based thereon goes down with it.

In the light of these facts let us sum up the testimony of Elder Smith's witness and see what he has proved. He has succeeded in making reasonably clear the following facts: He proves—

1. That Mrs. Emily D. P. Young was married to Joseph Smith, Jr., at Nauvoo, Ill., sometime in the year 1843 He proves—

2. That the date of this marriage was either March 11, or May 11, 1843, and admits that "it is immaterial which date she intended to give;" and he proves—

3. That the "revelation on sealing," or "plural marriage," had at least a practical existence several months before it was reduced to writing, July 12, 1843.

His witness swears first, last and all the time that she was actually married to the "prophet, seer, revelator and translator," Joseph Smith, Jr., and lived with him as his wife till the day of his death, June 27, 1844.

Thus it will be seen that all of Elder Smith's labored effort to break down the testimony of this witness and thus rescue the name of his prophet from ignominy and shame, falls to the ground and lies in ruins at the very feet of Justice.

The jury of an enlightened public, before whom this case is being tried, will promptly pronounce the verdict of "guilty," and Joseph Smith's name will go down in history as the base impostor that he certainly was, and as the author of Mormon polygamy and the "revelation" upon which it is based.

Leaving the case of Mrs. Emily D. P. Young with the passing remark that "this certainly throws suspicion upon the testimony of this woman," Elder Smith at once makes the broad charge that . . . "the so-called revelation is a trumped up affair, gotten up by men already in the practice of crime, who connected Joseph Smith's name with it to give it prestige among those who had confidence in his teachings."

It is a very significant fact that Elder Smith does not offer a single word in support of this charge, but requires an intelligent public to accept his unsupported statement upon a question about which, personally, he knows absolutely nothing, the matters of which he speaks having taken place years before he was born. But quite to the contrary, numerous witnesses—men and women who lived at the time and had a chance to know whereof they spoke—have testified that this very "so-called revelation" actually existed and was read by Hyrum Smith, the prophet's brother, before the "High Council" at Nauvoo, as early as August, 1843, only one month after the "trumped-up affair" was witten.

In the affiidavit of David Fulmer, at the time a member of the High Council, we find the following: He swears that—

. . . On or about the twelfth day of August, A. D. 1843, while in a meeting with the High Council, . . . in Hyrum Smith's brick office, in the city of Nauvoo, county of Hancock, state of Illinois, Dunbar Wilson made inquiry in relation to the subject of plurality of wives, as there were rumors about respecting it, and he was satisfied there was something in those remarks, and he wanted to know what it was, upon which Hyrum Smith stepped across the road to his residence, and soon returned, bringing with him a copy of the revelation on celestial marriage, . . . and read the same to the High Council, and bore testimony of its truth. (Italics mine.)

This affidavit was made before James Jack, a notary public, at Salt Lake City, Utah, June 15, 1869. Mr. Fulmer gives the names of those present at the time this "trumped-up affair" was read, and among them he mentions William Marks, whose testimony has already been given, Thomas Grover and Leonard Soby. Concerning this matter Thomas Grover says:

The High Council, of Nauvoo, was called together by the prophet, Joseph Smith, to know whether they would accept the revelation on celestial marriage or not The presidency of the Stake, Wm. Marks, Father Coles and the late Charles C. Rich, were there present. . . . Brother Hyrum Smith was called upon to read the revelation. He did so, and after reading it said: "Now, you that believe this revelation and go forth and obey the same shall be saved, and you that reject it shall be damned."—Utah Journal, Logan, Utah, April 21 and April 24, 1886.

Leonard Soby, in an affidavit made before Joshua W. Roberts, a justice of the peace in the state of New Jersey and county of Burlington, swears that—

. . . On or about the twelfth day of August, 1843, in the city of Nauvoo, in the state of Illinois, in the county of Hancock, before the High Council of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, of which body and council aforesaid he was a member, personally appeared one Hyrum Smith, of the first presidency of said church, and brother to Joseph Smith, the president and prophet of the same, and presented to said council the revelation on polygamy, enjoining its observance and declaring it from God; . . . . as coming from Joseph Smith.—Utah Herald (Ogden), January 5, 1886, as quoted in Doctrine and Dogmas of Mormonism, p. 380.

Mr. Soby is not among the number "already in the practice of crime," as Elder Smith charges, but was rather one of the three—Wm. Marks, Austin Cowles and Leonard Soby—who rejected the "revelation on plural marriage" and afterwards left the church, and to this day has lived apart from it. In spite of the testimony of these men, and scores of others that might be adduced, Elder Smith, in the absence of anything better, is content to characterize this so-called revelation as "a trumped-up affair, gotten up by men already in crime," to justify their own wicked deeds. Although a so-called apostle, Elder Smith's unsupported assertion is wholly inadequate to destroy the force of the sworn statements of these witnesses. The public demands the proof—not unsupported assertion—that these witnesses have sworn falsely. Let the ministry of the Reorganized Church either furnish the proof or confess the hopelessness of their cause. Will they do it?

If the charge made by Elder Smith be true, that these men, "already in the practice of crime," will thus deliberately lie to cover up their crimes, what are we to think of the system that produced them? It is certainly enough to make the thoughtful man stop and enquire: "Is this the product of a system instituted of God by special revelation to redeem a fallen world? Is it possible that a pure system has produced the horde of unmitigated scoundrels that Elder Smith paints these men to be?" If Mormonism, as it was organized and controlled by Joseph Smith, has produced the band of thieves and cutthroats that other Mormons are characterized to be by Elder Smith and the preachers of the Reorganized Church generally, then in all candor we ask, What must the system have been? and what apology can be offered for such a cesspool of corruption as that described by Elder Smith and his associates? In answer to these momentous questions let the Savior of men speak:

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. . . . A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. . . . Wherefore, by their fruits ye shall know them" (Mat. 7:15-20).

The fruits of the Mormon tree being evil, Mormons themselves being the witnesses, what must have been the character of the tree that produced them? There can be but one answer—"Evil! CORRUPT!!" And this must be the unanimous verdict of the civilized world D. H. BAYS.

General Convention Reports

Report of the Foreign Board.

(CONCLUDED.)

India.—Missionaries, 22; native helpers, 48: churches, 4; members, 272; added last year, 86; in school, 502. Hurda.—G. L. Wharton, besides preaching at Hurda, assisted the native preachers in their out-stations and occasionally made short tours in the villages. He superintended the building of the girls' school. This is the only girls' school within 60 miles of Hurda. The city gave the site. The contractor contributed one-third the cost of the building. The work was never so promising and in such good shape as now. Mrs. Wharton has charge of the girls' school. There were between 40 and 50 in attendance daily. Bible teaching has a prominent place. Though the girls leave young, they go out with a fair knowledge of the Bible and especially of the life of Christ. Much credit is due to the noble teachers, Dinabai and Norabai. Dr. C. C. Drummond has charge of the hospital and dispensary. The in-patients number 190, the out-patients, 12,216. There were 14 lepers in the asylum. In addition to his medical work Dr. Drummond has preached as he has been able to find time and strength. Part of the year he conducted a Sunday-school in a village near Hurda. G. W. Coffman has had charge of the work among the boys. He has given about two hours daily to teaching and overseeing the school. The government made a grant to the school this year. In the school there are seven teachers. Four different languages are taught. The school is growing in favor in the community. The Bible is taught regularly and systematically. David and Dr. Minnie Rioch reached Bombay in December. They began at once the study of the language. Meanwhile, they are doing English work among the railroad people. They have a Sunday-school for children and adults and a preaching service in the evening. The Sunday-school numbers 42. Dr. Rioch has had the opportunity to help the sick and also to assist Dr. Drummond. Miss Mary Thompson has carried on the zenana work as in former years. One hundred and fifty homes are visited regularly by her and her assistants. While visiting among the villages she frequently meets former pupils. They are glad to see her and invite her to come in. During the year she has worked in about 40 villages. In one village the schoolmaster asked her not to leave the place so soon. In some villages the people receive her and her assistants gladly into their houses. One man wished her to cast a devil out of his wife. Sampson Power assists in the medical work and does much preaching to the out-patients. He talks to them much in private. He tries to make them understand that all are sinners before God. He shows them God's wonderful love in giving his only Son. The in-patients are instructed every evening. They listen quietly and attentively. G. Masih has worked especially in the church. In March he was appointed to the ministry. Twice a week he preaches in the bazaar. In the boys' school he teaches a Bible class an hour daily. In addition he conducts many prayer-meetings, Junior and Senior Endeavor meetings, conducts two Sunday-schools and works in the bookshop. Nathoo Lall's work in Charwa and the villages has been interesting. Many have gladly listened to the message of salvation. Some have accepted it. He has preached in 20 villages. About 25 boys and girls can sing hymns and repeat the Lord's Prayer. Dr. John Panna has preached in the hospital, in six different villages and in the bazaar. He has a Sunday-school with 60 boys and girls in it. Kimabai visits regularly in about 30 homes in Charwa. M. J. Shah has conducted work in Timarni and in the surrounding villages. He has two Sunday-schools, a Sunday morning class for boys and the Sunday evening preaching service. Many gospels and tracts have been sold. Bilaspur.—M. D. Adams has given his time and strength to the preaching of the gospel in the church. He has conducted most of these services. The additions for the year number 25; present membership, 58; in the Sunday-school there are 75 scholars; in the day school, 82. Some have left the place, but are not lost to the Master's kingdom. They are in other places filling useful and responsible positions. A Society of Christian Endeavor was organized among the young people connected with the church and has a membership of 35, and its influence has been wholly for good. The boys in the Sunday-school are mostly Hindus. The fact that they attend for regular instructions in the Scriptures is cause for encouragement. The work in India is hard. Every step is contested. The land is joined to its idols. W. E. Gordon reports an enrollment of 56 boys. These attend regularly. Those that attend irregularly number 26. The grant received from the government this year was considerably more than that received last year. The government inspector says, "I am glad to find the school making steady progress." Mr. Gordon is considering the opening of a school in a village about five miles distant. S. McMullen has devoted his whole time and strength to village preaching. About 500 leaflets have been given away to such as could read and understand. The people are not yet ready to break away from the old faiths. Mungeli.—E. M. Gordon reports that the past year has been one of steady progress. The additions number 28. The present membership is 75. In the Sunday-schools there are 250 scholars; in the day school, 40; night school, 25. The work of many years is bearing fruit. Converts are now coming from some of the higher castes. There are Christians in five different villages. Some go a distance of nine miles to attend the Sunday services. The lepers number 27. They receive Bible instruction every day. There is a change in the attitude of the non-Christian community toward Christianity. Their superstitious fears and prejudices are gradually growing weaker. Dr. Gordon treated 133 in-patients and 9,572 out-patients. Fresh patients come every week. The Christian women are growing in numbers so fast that it is almost impossible to care for them individually. Much remains to be done. Hundreds and thousands need the light. Damoh.—W. E. Rambo reports 165 boys in the orphanage. They range in age from two to eighteen. The majority are from the lower castes. About 35 are Christians. These for the most part are doing well. In the past year some actual work has been done in the industrial school. About five acres have been plowed with American plows. A workshop is nearing completion. Much time has been given to the study of methods and agriculture and kindred subjects. We expect to start a dairy and piggery soon. In the industrial school the boys are taught useful trades so that they may be able to support themselves and their families. The industrial problem for those who have broken caste must be solved before much can be hoped for in the way of self-support. We hope some of the converts will enter the ministry. Dr. Mary McGavran treated about 12,000 patients. There has been much sickness among the famine children. Several have died. Most of them are doing remarkably well. The dispensary has been open all year. The building in use at present is a small grass house without doors or windows and with mud floors. John G. McGavran writes that for the first time since his arrival in India he has been free to devote his entire time to village preaching. After the close of the rains he loaded tents, furniture, kitchen wardrobe, etc., into carts and within a few hours he and Mrs. McGavran and the helpers encamped a few miles from Damoh. Their plan was to make a tour taking in most of the eastern portion of the district. The marches were usually about five or six miles, sometimes 10 or 12. From the camp he visited from two to four villages a day. Mrs. McGavran frequently visited women in the villages near the camp. They tried to visit each village and each group twice before moving. Most of the villages had never seen a missionary before; some of them had not a soul that could read or write. The great majority had only one or two educated men. It was like breaking sod in a new country. The people are industrious and level-headed. The great majority are respectable common people. They made 20 marches in all and visited 75 or 80 distinct villages. Each village had from one to five visits. Miss Stella Franklin did most of her work in the girls' orphanage for part of the year. She did considerable irregular work in the towns and near villages. Since January first she has given her entire time to Bible teaching. She has found the people most responsive. She goes where she is called. As she walks through the town the people invite her to come in and sing and read. Sometimes as many as 30 women are waiting for her. The people are ready to listen, but they are not ready to become Christians. She does not know how long it may be before there may be conversions. Miss Josepha Franklin's work during the year was regular and thorough. The government curriculum was introduced into the school. Seven teachers were employed. These were required to attend a normal training class once a week. The school is purely a Christian school. The number enrolled during the year was 172. Of these nearly 160 were boys taken into the orphanage during the famine. Ten of the boys are blind, or nearly so. These have begun to read the Bible in the Moon system. On Sundays Miss Franklin has done some work in the zenanas and the bazaars. There are five houses to which our helper went regularly every Sunday. Sometimes the men attend.

Turkey.—Missionaries, 7; native helpers, 18; churches, 17; membership, 434; added in the year, 119; in school, 567. G. N. Shishmanian made an extended tour through Asia Minor. The people manifested a deeper interest in the gospel than he had ever seen before. Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Chapman reached Constantinople October 2, 1898. They began at once the study of Armenian and the conditions of the field. Mrs. Chapman taught a class in English in the school. Mr. Chapman organized a night class in English. Besides speaking regularly at the Wednesday evening meetings, he preached in English every Sunday afternoon from December to July. He has visited some of the churches in the country round about. Some time has been taken in the business of the mission and in getting settled in a home of their own. Mr. and Mrs. John Johnson have spent a busy year in Smyrna. The success is not large. Their knowledge of the language is not yet very complete. They are doing all in their power for the furtherance of the gospel in that great city. In addition to the Sunday services evening classes are taught. Instruction is given in English. Garabed Kevorkian reports 7 meeting-places; 7 organized churches; 179 members; 21 additions; 4 Sunday-schools; 4 day schools; 140 pupils, and 9 native helpers. The past year has been one of the most trying of all to him. Some tried to close the door of the meeting house. They succeeded for a time, but subsequently the door opened. United States Consul, Dr. M A. Jewett, has been most kind to him. The governor of Tocat, Bakear Pasha, has watched over his personal safety and has continued to aid him in many ways.

Denmark.—Dr. Holck reports the present membership in Copenhagen as 169. The meetings are fairly well attended and the church is in good condition. In Norway there are 9,958 members. This is over 100 more than reported last year. The work has been begun in Christiania. A church of 76 members has been gathered in eight months. The present membership in Malmo, Sweden, is 25. Work has been opened in Lund, a university town of 25,000 inhabitants. The great need of Scandinavia is that of trained men to take charge of the churches.

England.—The churches have enjoyed a prosperous year for the most part. Southampton has been without pastoral oversight since April 1st. Special services were held in most of the churches under the leadership of J. A. L. Romig. There have been 391 baptisms in the year; 64 have been received in other ways. The net gain is 242. The aggregate membership of the 15 churches and missions is now 2,412. These churches have raised for self-support $17,488.05 and $2,419.60 for missions. In the Sunday-schools there are 2,541 pupils. The Christian Endeavorers number 379.

Africa.—Missionaries, 3. It was not until the first of March that work began in Bolengi. Dr. Dye has a clinic twice a day. He treats about 40 patients a day. Most of them are suffering from vile, putrid ulcers. All the diseases which flesh is heir to are found on the Congo. He has treated the old chief of the village who was very low with pneumonia. The chief is now well and very anxious to be on friendly terms with the missionaries. He has also treated a number of sick traders. Mrs. Dye has been busy with her household cares and teaching the boys to make coats to wear at school. E. E Faris is getting the mission premises in order. He is doing all in his power for the furtherance of the gospel.

Conclusion.—According to the promises of our God, we look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwell srighteousness. Every plant which the Heavenly Father has not planted shall be rooted up. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off. We have this exceeding great and precious promise to strengthen our hearts, lest we should fail or be discouraged. The gospel is destined to run and triumph and fill the whole wide world, even as the waters fill the sea. Wherever it is preached it wins its victories. It shall not return to its Author void; it shall accomplish that which he pleases and prosper in the thing whereunto he sent it. The powers of darkness may muster and marshal themselves for the conflict; the strife may be fierce and long; but of the final issue there can be no doubt, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. He has graciously given us this beatific vision of a world evangelized and redeemed. When the seventh angel sounded, great voices were heard in heaven and they said, "The kingdom of this world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Then shall the words of the saintly Cowper find their fulfillment:

> "One song employs all nations; and all cry,
> 'Worthy the Lamb, for he was slain for us!'
> The dwellers in the vales and on the rocks
> Shout to each other, and the mountain tops
> From distant mountains catch the flying joy;
> Till, nation after nation taught the strain,
> Earth rolls the rapturous hosanna round."

Church Extension Report.

(CONCLUDED.)

Our board has given considerable help this year in furnishing up-to-date, practical plans for our mission churches and their architecture is constantly improving. Working plans are furnished at half the rates they can be secured elsewhere. The catalogue of seventy plans will be sent for ten cents.

Fifty-eight loans have been closed from October 1, 1898, to September 30, 1899, aggregating $53,786.25.

In every case the board requires first mortgage security, with an absolute clear title and with the house insured against fire, and also against cyclones in certain localities. Our loan must be the only debt on the property. The loan is to be returned to the board in five equal annual payments with four per cent. interest payable semiannually.

Seventy-three loans have been granted, but not closed, aggregating $41,940. These will be closed as soon as satisfactory arrangements have been made.

ANNUITY FUNDS FOR CHURCH EXTENSION.

The National Convention at Des Moines, Ia., in 1890, made the following recommendation to the Board of Church Extension: "We request the board to consider and adopt, if practicable, the annuity feature in raising funds for Church Extension, believing it will prove, as in the case of other churches, a successful method of raising money for the fund."

We have received $17,933.33 of annuities this year.

The board gratefully acknowledges the work of J. T. Ogle, of Missouri; B. Q. Denham, of New York; F. D. Power, of Washington; C. J. Tannar, of Ohio; A. Linkletter, of West Virginia; W. H. Waggoner, of Illinois; R. R. Hamlin, of Texas; George Darsie, of Kentucky; F. M. Dowling, of California, and E. S. Muckley, of New York, in giving convention addresses at points the secretary could not reach and in securing special sums of money.

OUR NAMED LOAN FUNDS.

A recommendation of the National Convention of October, 1888, provides that the Extension Board may solicit and administer Named Loan Funds, in memory of donors, or such persons as they may designate.

The nature of these Loan Funds is as follows: A National Loan Fund is $5,000 or more, to be paid at once or to be paid in annual subscriptions through a series of ten years. It can be demonstrated that $5,000 will in five years, through the Church Extension plan, do the work of $12,442.

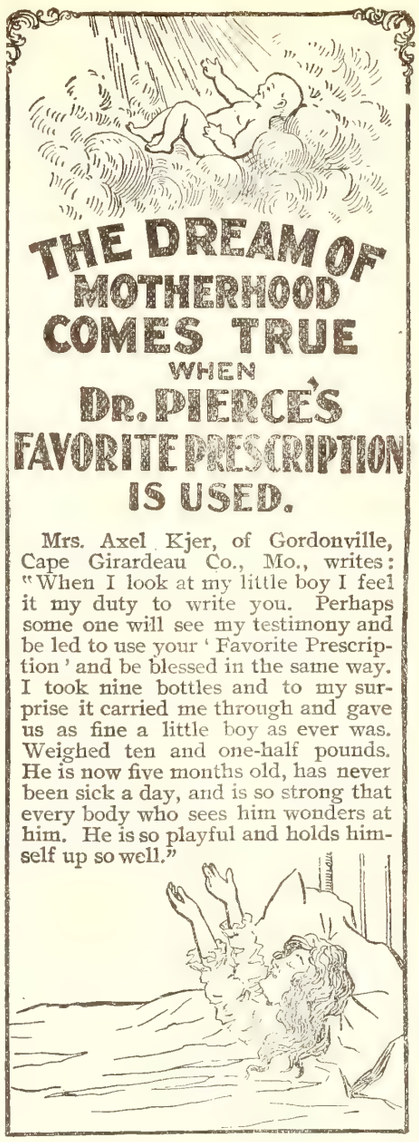
We ask special attention to be given to securing Named Loan Funds this year. We must have some large gifts in order to reach the $250,000 for Church Extension by our next convention.

We have the following Loan Funds: General F. M. Drake Named Loan Fund; Standard Publishing Company Named Loan Fund; T. W. Phillips Named Loan Fund; Frankford, Ky., Church Named Loan Fund; Cedar Rapids, Ia., Church Named Loan Fund; Dr. J. W. Gill Memorial Named Loan Fund; Asa Shuler Memorial Named Loan Fund.

SPECIAL WORK.

During the year the board was called upon to do some special work in saving valuable church property at Huntington, West Virginia, and Central Church, of Toledo, Ohio.

The splendid property at Huntington, worth $16,000, was to be sold for debts. Upon investigation our board found that it was impossible for the brethren to raise the debt of over $10,000. The board had just one week in which to save the property after receiving notice. The secretary was sent to the ground and in one week the church raised, with some outside help, $3,000, the board loaned $5,000 and compromises of $2,000 were made, and instead of the Roman Catholic Church buying in the property by paying off a $6,000 mortgage, our people are joyful in its possession.



The Central Church at Toledo, Ohio, was to be sold in July under mortgage foreclosure. The debt here was over $10,000. The work of saving the property was placed in the hands of this board. The churches of Ohio gave $636.33, Wood county, $1,528 78, the Central Church gave $2,102.97, our board loaned $6,000 and a centrally located church worth $22,000, in a city of 160,000 people, is saved to our cause after a month's work.

A LOOK FORWARD.

We now turn our faces hopefully toward the new year. We had over $206,000 in the fund on September 30th. The new receipts this year went over $7,000 beyond what we asked. No man who reads the signs of the times looks for anything less than $50,000 this year, and and $250,000 in our fund by the time of our next convention in October, 1900.

Every consideration demands that this be done. We have 2,700 homeless missions; 950 were organized during the past two years, of which 450 are yet without houses of worship; there are now 127 Home Missionary Societies, District, State and National, sending out evangelists and organizing churches. The building must follow the new organization at once, and when it cannot build alone it should be promptly aided by our board. In this way only can we make our work permanent as we go. To more nearly compass the great demand let us see to it that our motto for this year is "$50,000 for Church Extension in order to reach $250,000 by the close of 1900."

Notes and News.

The new church building in South McAlister, I. T., was dedicated on the 15th of October. J. C. Howell is the pastor of this church. A fine program of service was prepared for the occasion.

Colorado Convention.

The eighteenth annual session of the Colorado Christian Missionary Convention will be held in the South Broadway Church, Denver, Oct. 31 to Nov. 3. An excellent program has been prepared. Wm. F. Cowden will represent the A. C. M. S. and Mrs. Helen E. Moses the C. W. B. M. A strong force of the Colorado pastors and workers will also participate.

The Gracious Invitation.

Christianity vs. Mormonism.

A public discussion will begin in Alma, Ill., at 10 A. M., Tuesday, Nov. 7, 1899, between Clark Braden, president of Southern Illinois Christian College, as representative of "the Churches of Christ;" and I. N. White, one of the Twelve Apostles of "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints" (the Josephite wing of Mormonism), as representative of that organization.

ISSUES: "Was Joseph Smith a Prophet of God?" "Are 'the Churches of Christ' Scriptural Churches?"

Six sessions of two hours each will be given to the discussion of each proposition, and, if Mr. White will debate three sessions per day, the debate will close Friday night; and preachers can come to the debate and get home again and lose no Sunday appointment, and lose no time in Alma.

Persons coming from Odin and south of Odin can reach Alma on the Chicago Branch of the I. C. R. R. at 10 A. M. Monday and Tuesday, and 10 P. M. Monday. From Kinmundy and north of Kinmundy at 5 A. M. Monday and Tuesday, and 5 P. M. Monday.

A Misinterpreted Scripture.

Why is it that there is such a general and persistent misinterpretation of this Scripture? People constantly speak of it as if it were the decisions of the last judgment in the case of men as individuals. It is nothing of the kind. It is a national judgment, not of individuals. In the concept of this writer (Matthew) the kingdom of heaven is not an institution like that which we call the church, nor is it a spiritual dominion, but a new state over which Jesus Christ was to reign in person, assisted by his twelve disciples (ch. 19:28) and which was to be established in a few years (ch. 16:27, 28).

When this all-conquering kingdom should be established Jesus would administer justice to men as individuals and as nations. He would bring swift retribution upon those nations which had ill treated his disciples and reward gloriously those nations which had received them graciously. In this case it is not a crowd of individuals, who are assembled before the King, but nations. They are separated as nations into two classes, not on the ground of their faith or moral character, but on the ground of their treatment of Christ's disciples, or rather of the King in the person of his ambassadors.

There is an exactly similar idea in Luke 19:27. The misinterpretation grows out of a misconception of the nature of the kingdom of heaven as conceived in the mind of the author of "The Gospel According to St. Matthew." F. M. CUMMINGS.

Marlboro, O., Oct. 10, 1899.

Educational Notes.

The best established fact in the world is Christianity. The power of Christ is not wanting. Civilization is perfect only as it approaches the Chaist-standard. The nation indifferent to or opposing the great Teacher is doomed to decay. God's truth will grind it into powder. Just so the education of the future must be controlled by the principles of Christianity. The school must pay tribute to him who has "all power and authority in heaven and on earth." Antagonism or indifference here will prove fatal, no matter what amount of wealth may be poured into our "undenominational" or state universities. The stone cut out of the mountain without hands must fill the whole earth. Such is the promise of prophecy inspired by the God of the universe.

The time must come when the state will prosecute its educational work with a view, not merely to intellectual culture, but with the purpose of producing the best possible citizenship. Its own existence will depend upon such an ideal. Infidelity has no power to build up the national structure; it blasts society's fair and fragrant flower with its every breath, blows out the lamp on the center-table, around which the family circle is found, and bids hope cease singing her sweet song in the chambers of the soul; darkness, despair and death, only are left. Let parents think earnestly of this fact before placing a child in any school where the purpose to "pass by in deepest silence all that the Christ has said" is announced as the par-excellent ideal of education. It may cost fewer dollars, perhaps, but will make large drafts on state and home and soul.

There was never a greater need for distinctly Christian education than to-day. The common distinction between religion and secular duties is applied in the educational problems before us with most disastrous results. To the Christian every duty is such, because enjoined by Christ; nothing can be secular. If this be true of life as a whole, why teach our children that education (preparation for life's work) should be strictly secular, not spiritual; worldly, and thereby fill them with an utterly false idea in the very dawning of life and its activities? Herein will many a tale of woe be unfolded in the day of judgment. Herein is the demand for Christian schools for the education of children reared in Christian homes, whose parents wish the faith of childhood nurtured and cultured.

Brooks preached strong sermons during the meeting, and we confidently expect to reap an abundant harvest in the near future. There were five additions to the church.—H. H. PETERS.

IOWA.

Lafayette, Oct. 16.—There were six confessions last night at our regular service here, and one two weeks ago.—J. M. CROCKER.

Jefferson, Oct. 19.—J. M. Hoffmann, of Boone, just closed a three weeks' meeting here, in which the cause of Christ was greatly strengthened. The audiences were unusually large from the first sermon to the close. This in itself is evidence of strong preaching. There were 22 additions, and 13 were by confession and baptism. This meeting puts our church in much better standing in this community. About $1,300 was raised for the new church at Boone. About $60 was taken in at Bro. Hoffmann's closing lecture on "Man."—T. W. MCDONALD.

MISSOURI.

Tipton, Oct. 16.—I have just started here in a meeting with Herold E. Monser. The way was well prepared and the meeting opens favorably.—VERNON J. ROSE.

Tuxedo, Oct. 16.—We celebrated our "jubilee" with six accessions yesterday, making 14 at regular services in the last few weeks.—D. N. GILLETT.

Nevada, Oct. 16 —We could not go to the "Jubilee," hence we started a meeting yesterday. The congregation is hopeful and the outlook is encouraging. One by statement last night; nine accessions to the congregation since Sept. 1.—BEN F. HILL.

Billings, Oct. 16.—Our meeting began Oct. 1. Nine confessions last night. The interest has grown far beyond our expectations. Ten confessions to date.—F. J. YOKLEY, pastor.

Unionville, Oct. 14.—We closed our revival here last Sunday night with eight additions. Bro. Morgans and daughter did us good work. They remained two weeks, with four added. We continued after they left for four nights, with four more added. Our daily paper proved a success in every way. We discontinue it this Wednesday, having run it for one month.—R. E. L. PRUNTY.

Mound City, Oct. 18.—My annual resignation was presented to the Mound City congregation Oct. 8, and was not accepted. We baptized a young married man last Wednesday evening. He teaches school near here. During our 21 months' work for this church there have been 35 additions; 14 by primary obedience, three from others religious bodies, three reclaimed, 15 by letter. We have paid off an indebtedness on our church building of $760, besides some smaller debts, and prospects are good to close the year out of debt and sufficient money raised for another year's work.—W. E. BOULTON.

Elmo.—Two more additions by letter to-day, making five since we began here.—H. W. CIES.

Irvington, Oct. 18.—A. W. Gehres has removed from Hopedale to Irving on and is now in Butler College. His regular visit to Hopedale church, Oct. 15, resulted in four additions; two by confession and baptism, and two by statement — a father, mother and daughter-in-law.

Bloomington, Oct. 18.—There were 10 more additions in our meeting at the old Clear Creek Church last night. Bro. T. M. Myers held his meeting for this church 27 years ago, and now this is a church with more history that any in this country. People are coming in crowds from Bloomington and the four other neighboring churches to hear Bro. Myers preach. He has been holding meetings in this grand old church at intervals for nearly 30 years, and he is to-day a more forceful preacher and better loved than ever before.—N. H MATHERS.

Anderson, Oct. 16.—I have just closed a two weeks' meeting with the East Lynn Church of Christ at this place, with 11 additions by baptism.—W. A. MCKOWN, pastor.

ILLINOIS.

Jacksonville, Oct. 16.—Scoville and Huston, the evangelists, are gone, but the evangelistic spirit is still in our midst. There were 12 additions yesterday, our pastor, Bro. Geo. L. Snively, doing the preaching. Our church is greatly prospering.—J. WALLACE BROCKMAN.

Jacksonville, Oct. 12.—Midst scenes of joy and gladness, the series of evangelistic meetings conducted by Evangelists R. Reign Scoville and Frank C. Huston came to a close. Never in its religious history has Jacksonville witnessed such a remarkable religious awakening; the entire community felt the good effect of the meeting, and has been made better by it. The coming of the evangelists was largely advertised throughout the city by large posters, placed in prominent places, and all the electric cars of the city. The meeting was retarded somewhat during the first week by the presence of a successful street fair, but beginning with the second week the audiences were large, often crowding the great building to the walls, and the crowds were something never to be forgotten. The Jacksonville church has passed through some grand meetings, but never in its history has any equaled the magnificent revival just closed. Considering the time of year, and the proverbial consecration of the people of the "Athens of the West," the result, 134 additions to the church, has been something remarkable. The last Sunday was a "red-letter" day in the history of the church; there were 26 additions, and Bro. Scoville displayed his versatility by raising over $500 to pay off a slight indebtedness occasioned by a new heating apparatus. Too much cannot be said in praise of the great work accomplished by the two great men of God. Thousands of souls have been gathered into the "garner of the Lord" through their instrumentality; their coming into our homes has brought sunshine, and their going away has taken nothing but shadows out. The meeting closed on Wednesday night, the 11th inst., there being 13 additions the last night, all of whom were grown persons with one exception. The closing scene will ever linger in the minds of the grand audience that witnessed it; many were touched to tears. Our beloved pastor, Bro. Snively in his farewell to the evangelist in behalf of the church said: "The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee. The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace."—WALLACE BROCKMAN.

Colfax, Oct. 19.—Thirty-five added to date here; 26 by baptism. We continue another week. P. Baker is one of the best pastors in the brotherhood. I will be at Winchester, Ind., till Nov. 20th. Any church desiring my services in January can address me there.—A. MARTIN.

Who is Driving?

LEILA FIRTH.

Swiftly beneath the tinted trees
The Colonel's dogcart bowled,
Sweet Madge between her father's knees,
Proudly the reins did hold.

Her pride the Sultan seemed to share,
He trotted on so gaily,
As though he knew a maid so fair
Was not his driver daily.

From one tall tree a leaflet strayed,
Its beauty too soon blighted,
Unluckily its course, soon stayed,
On Sultan's nose alighted.

With sudden plunge the pony shied,
Two strong hands checked his striving,
"Hillo!" the little maiden cried,
"Daddy, I thought I was driving!"

L'ENVOI.

So men still hug their fond conceit
Of ruling and contriving;
While life jogs on all smooth and fleet,
They think that they are driving.

But when awakened by life's pain,
They find, in faith confiding,
Their Father's hand is on the rein,
Safely homeward guiding.

"The Nameless Terror."

LESLIE COLLINS.

On a lovely little island in the far South Seas, where the days are full of sunshine and the nights are tropical, there looks down upon the sun-kissed waters a volcano vast and great. It is as it were a guiding landmark by daytime and a lighthouse by night, and if the many passing merchantmen can but catch a glimpse of its towering top, the ship's course is sure to be shaped aright. Through the lapse of centuries this pyramidical wonder has stood out against the southern skies as a monument, majestic and grand. The simple-hearted natives call it "The Nameless Terror," and sometimes these strange and superstitious people fall in worship at its feet. This is not on account of any fright occasioned by its awe-inspiring power, but because of a beautiful tradition that forever hangs over its lofty crest. At times, for years, it seems to slumber in a peaceful sleep, dreaming away the long-drawn days and summer nights; but then again, seemingly from some unknown cause, as if to give vent to pent-up wrath, it awakens with a nightmared start; then its sunken temples throb with burning blood, its pulses beat with violent heat, and its heretofore calm and tranquil bosom heaves with tumultuous rage; a far-off rumbling noise heard that shakes the very sea, and then is the seething, boiling mass within breaks forth in all its fury. How vividly I recall its last eruption, and how its awful presence seemed to take delight in terrifying my trusting soul, and then to calm my quickened pulse by an outburst of beauty. Yes, I remember. It was in the warm midsummer; when the noble night was cast, after hours of toil and torture through a close and sultry day. We were on the yacht "Delightful," captain, Peace and Happiness, bound for the sunny ocean to enjoy a pleasant stay. It was twilight, sweet and poetic twilight, such as only falls within the confines of the tropics. The spell was almost spent and but a few bells yet remained before the dawn. Our pretty little yacht ploughed gracefully along, and like the easy flying eagle, we sailed on without a motion. The favorite islands of the Hawaiian group, the fairest of the seas, the traveler's Mecca and the tourist's Paradise, were left far to the north and east, and in the nighttime we had crossed the torrid line. I was in the airy wheelhouse where the eyes can sweep ahead, when athwart the dim horizon I beheld "The Nameless Terror." What a scene and what a picture stood before our eyes! We had passed the mighty icebergs floating in the boreal seas; we had to lessen sail to meet them and to view their beauty grand, to look upon their splendor and to talk of glacial births; but when I first beheld the mountain burning in the starlit skies, with all the startling grandeur that volcanoes alone can claim, I confess I felt like the poor, deluded natives and bowed my head in admiration. As we approached, the scene became one of universal wonder; the night, the starlit night, and the big and bright volcano in the drowsy distance, the dreaming waters of the sea between, and the bedimmed shore-lined cliffs of blackened rock that rose abruptly from the depths below and, towering upwards, formed the sloping sides down which the red-hot molten lava rushes like a living thing; its round and reddened crest, that ardent crown which has withstood the storms of many ages, and beyond where awful craters descend into the fiery furnace, and above which wild and hot and hissing flames shoot upwards, dancing, playing here and there, now to the right, now to the left, and then with one long, last struggle coil themselves into blackened smoke; the dense, dark, weird, funnel-shaped cloud that hung directly over the crater's crest, and the long black streak that faded to the murky west; the tranquil sea, upon whose placid bosom our little barque was but a speck—all of which afford a landscape never to be forgotten, and portray a panorama well worth the dangers of the deep. And to those favored few who have looked upon a burning mountain in the night, a bleak and barren black volcano in eruption, "The Nameless Terror," let me say that there is forever hung upon the palaced walls of memory one of God's greatest paintings, and which amid the quiet hours of restful solitude, whether it be at the close of a busy day or in our dreams at night, we often find ourselves returning to gaze upon. It charmed us then; it charms us now. Its recollection is a pleasing past, and I'm sure its memory is a joy.

Keeping Goldfish.

Goldfish may be kept in either plain glass globes or in an aquarium with water plants. If kept in globes the water, when possible, should be obtained from a running stream and be frequently changed. Fill the bowl three parts full and place in a cool part of the room, as goldfish cannot stand any great heat or too much light. No food should be given except ant eggs or a few white millet seeds and the prepared bread. One of the reasons that so many fail in keeping goldfish is that they overfeed them. About six eggs to each fish is sufficient. Ordinary breadcrumbs and flies on no account must be given. Two or three trumpet snails may be kept in the water to devour the slime. If the fish are kept in an aquarium, place some shingles at the bottom, then a few pieces of charcoal and some small stones, and, lastly, some colored shells. Plant some pretty little water plants about three inches deep in the gravel and shingle, such as frogbit, water plantains, water milfoil, etc. When these are established put the fish in.—Catholic News.

Where Disillusions Begin.

In a parlor of a hotel recently the conversation turned upon ill-assorted marriages, and especially upon the illusions of the days of courtship, and one gentleman related his experience. He had been charmed by a young, beautiful creature, whose attractiveness, as he afterward found, lay largely in her ability to set off her fine points through tasteful dress and by little arts of the toilet. Her musical voice seemed like a bird's notes.

One morning he conceived the idea of surprising her in her home in a suburb of the city. He wondered if he should find her out among the flowerbeds, and was somewhat disappointed on arriving at her home and looking around the attractive lawn that he caught no glimpse of the one being who made his world. He stepped upon the veranda, and as he waited he heard a voice? Could it be that of the charmer? It could not be possible, for these were the harsh, shrill tones of a scold. He rang again, and the servant appeared. He asked for the young lady, and then through the half-open door he saw a flying figure with hair in curl-papers and disordered gown, and heard an exclamation that he could not have imagined as coming from the delicate lips of the young creature. He hesitated. Should he retreat? He decided that it was impossible for him to do so in good order, so he waited in the parlor. He confessed that he never could have told just how he met the beauty when she appeared in her lovely negligee gown, her soft hair waving above the fair brow—too fair to be natural he found now in the sober light of the morning and of reason. The tones were sweet and low, trained with marvelous skill, he decided, as he compared them with the voice that might have been that of a virago, still seeming to echo through the open doorway of the wide hall. This was his last call upon the one to whom he had expected to offer his heart, hand and all that he possessed.—Mary R. Baldwin, in the October Woman's Home Journal.

Unspoken Messages.

Dear friend, our lives are far apart;
The hand of fate holds heart from heart
And hand from hand.
Between us words may ne'er be spoken
To tell of faith and trust unbroken;
But, dear, is there no other token
To tell thee that "I understand?"

Then rest content, my friend, do not forget
That in the distant future there is yet
A fairer land.
And when the days seem long and weary, dear,
Cannot thy fancy bring my presence near,
With well-known voice soft-whispering in thine ear,
"I understand, dear friend, I understand?"

Thine earnest eyes look into mine,
And in their depths I can divine
All love's demand.
Heart speaks to heart, tho' thousands may be near;
And in thy soul a voice, low-toned and clear,
Will bring from me to thee this message, dear,
"I understand, I always understand."

Young People and the Home.

BY DEWITT COSGROVE WING.

What manner of men boys are to be will depend largely upon the training they receive in their homes from their mothers and fathers. It seems to be the method of some overaffectionate parents to permit their boys to do pretty much as they please. I heard an old gentleman remark the other day that he had raised three boys without whipping them, but he wished he had applied an apple tree with occasionally, for he said he now sees where it would have perhaps done good. Not many boys are raised without a whipping, several of them, from mother or father. I think no boy has been raised in this country who did not deserve all and more than he received. The parents who say their boys are too good to whip simply go beyond truth for the purpose of making it appear that their boys are models, when neighbors know their status pretty well. I've seen one or two good boys, who didn't need more than three thorough whippings per week, but who never received one. I've seen boys (one of them appeared when I looked at a mirror) who needed all the switching a loving mother could give. The bad boy, the youngster who kills birds, chickens, ducks, breaks window panes, tears the paper from the wall and tracks mud into the house and pulls his little sister's hair and says he "didn't go to do it," is full of life and health; he is running over with mischief, and a switching is about the only alternative the mother has, though it fails to a great extent, for the boy soon forgets the taste of it and begins a new campaign of mischief. A scolding and a promise to whip is an ineffectual method of correcting a boy, and the promise of reward for obedience is the worst thing a mother or father can do for the bad boy. He should not be paid to obey his parents. When boys reach the point where they find cheap literature interesting, the serious trouble begins. Low-grade reading of the "Nick Carter" variety with vulgar illustrations contaminates the youthful mind and creates in it a progressive appetite for more. There is a vast amount of this literature on the market at cheap prices, and the excitement which ramifies it seems to capture the mind of the boy and make him perfectly foolish on the subject. Prudent parents never permit cheap literature to enter their house, and they train their boys with kind words, cookies, switches and scoldings.

Family Broils.

BY DE WITT COSGROVE WING.

One would not expect to find bitter disputes and animated quarrels in a home where the true Christian spirit is thought to dwell, nor would we dream of seeing a man of known sanity mistreat his wife whom he has promised to protect and forever adore. Yet with my own eyes I have seen and with my own ears heard things in families which I should be somewhat astonished to see and hear in the homes of savages, who dwell in the jungles. I be think a case wherein the husband, a middle-aged man, told his hard-worked wife to get out of the house and never come back; whereupon she gave similar orders upon similar authority, that of ownership, and the trouble waxed warm, and but for the interference of a fourteen-year-old daughter they might have attempted personal violence. The trouble grew out of a trivial dispute with reference to a bill for groceries. It was a farm home, which by reason of its quiet and beautiful surroundings should be a pleasant place to dwell, and where the influence would seem to avert all things unpleasant. Quite often I have heard bitter quarrels raging between husband and wife, and among brothers and sisters, a veritable nest of angry bees. These family broils are terrible things; they destroy, not only the happiness of the homes in which they occur, but extend their evil influences into the homes of the children who have witnessed and participated in them.

The marriage which troubles of this character follow is manifestly an ill-timed one, and the persons to the contract will doubtless often wish it were possible to nullify it without publicity. The homes wherein flourish family broils are not happy ones, as they should be, and their influence is ever to tear down rather than build up in friendship a community. When once the broils have begun the frequency with which they hold sway increases until they become almost of daily occurrence, when divorce terminates the scene. The only precaution seems to reside in a knowledge on the part of man and woman of the nature of each; that is, one should thoroughly understand and know the other prior to marriage. The "love-at-first-sight-and-marriage-at-the-next" matrimonial ventures furnish a text which might be very generously dealt with, and this variety makes homes where there are periodical broils. In the language of the American people to-day, "Let us have peace"—in the homes where the girl and boy crop, the most important of all crops, is grown.

Bill's Luck.

A Chicago hotel manager, says Collier's Weekly, employed a hardy man going by the name of "Bill" to do his window washing. One morning Bill, instead of doing his work, was amusing himself by reading the paper, and, as luck would have it, the manager looked in.

"What's this?" he said. Bill was dumfounded. "Pack up your things and go," said the manager.

So poor Bill went to the office, drew the money which was owing to him, and then went upstairs and put on his good clothes. Coming down, he went to say "Good-by" to some of the other servants, and there he happened to run across the manager, who did not recognize him in his black coat.

"Do you want a job?" asked the manager.

"Yes, sir," said Bill.

"Can you clean windows?"

"Yes, sir."

"You look a hardy sort of fellow. I only gave the last man five dollars, but I'll give you seven."

"Thank you sir," said Bill; and in half an hour he was back in the same old room, cleaning the window this time, and not reading the paper.—Union Gospel News.

One tramp last week "got seven days" for begging. He claimed he had a right to beg, for the Prince of Wales does it, and "you read in the Holy Scriptures, ask, and ye shall receive." Another tramp was committed to prison for a month. Though able-bodied, he had not worked, he said, for twenty years, preferring to beg. His most successful method of drawing coppers was to stand on his head while singing, "My God, my Father, while I stray."

Asters.

Gone is the summer, its passion is over,
Gone are the birds with their carrols of mirth;
Cold are the breezes, they whisper of winter,
Coming to blight all the verdure of earth.
Yet in the garden the asters are blooming,
The purple and crimson, the pink and the white,
Fairest of crowns for autumn's adoring,
Flooding the place with a halo of light.

Gray are the skies over meadow and mountain,
Brown are the pastures, the stubble is sere,
Yet the brave asters, undaunted, are blending
Wonderful tints, overflowing with cheer.
Hearts that are lonely or grieving or weary,
Longing for joys that have vanished away,
Look on the asters, and learn from their beauty,
When the world frowns it is best to be gay.

Secretary Hay's Home.

To many persons Secretary of State Hay is the most interesting American in public, or at least in official life, and probably, therefore, it is not ill fitting that his home should be, from many considerations, the most interesting in Washington. The Hay home is a large, roomy structure of red brick at the corner of Sixteenth and H Streets, and a glimpse of its interior does not make the report that it cost more than $1,000,000 difficult of belief.

In its plan to the minutest detail, and in its furnishings, the house bears everywhere the indelible impress of the intelligence, care and discrimination of the statesman, diplomat, and cultured gentleman whose accomplishments, varied as the winds, ranging all the way from successful authorship to most creditable representation of the United States at the Court of St. James. For years Col. Hay has been engaged in traveling everywhere worth going, and meeting everybody worth meeting, and his Washington home has been made the receptacle of a great accumulation of souvenirs and mementoes of these journeyings, selected with a care such as only a nature like Col. Hay's could exercise.

If the Secretary of State may be said to have a hobby in his home it is mantelpieces. Hardly a room has been unprovided, and artistic taste has found expression in a variety of mediums from onyx to Irish marble. In the Turkish room are the most beautiful examples imaginable of the rugmaker's art. Almost all of the rugs were made to order, and single specimens are valued as high as $15,000 or $20,000—so valuable, indeed, that connoisseurs who have visited Col. Hay's home have, half laughingly, half mournfully, entreated him to hang the rugs on the wall instead of allowing the profanation of the tread of feet.

The ceilings throughout the house are all either inlaid or paneled, and most of them are fitted with a peculiar type of reflector from which scintillate rays of light. The walls and ceilings of the dining room are of solid mahogany, and the draperies and tapestries in the mansion are among the finest in America. As might be imagined, the library is a spot very near to the heart of the author of "Jim Bludsoe," and indeed, with its mahogany finish, silk draperies and secluded, cosy corners, it is difficult to understand how it could fail to hold a warm place in the affections even of a transient visitor. The music room, with its handsome inlaid piano, is another apartment worthy of the tenancy of a muse, and so in its evokings of enthusiasm a visitor might continue through the entire house, not forgetting the invariable feminine raptures over portieres that are so heavy as almost to require a man's strength for their movement.—From Self-Culture for October.

"Give Us this Day Our Daily Bread."

A little girl in a wretched attic, whose mother had no bread, knelt down by the bedside and said slowly:

"Give us this day our daily bread."

Then she went out into the street and began to wonder where God kept his bread. She turned around the corner and saw a well-filled bakershop; so she entered confidently and said to the baker:

"I've come for it."

"Come for what?"

"My daily bread," she answered, pointing to the tempting loaves. "I'll take two, if you please—one for mother and one for me."

"All right," said the baker, putting them into a bag and giving them to his little customer, who started at once to go into the street.

"Stop, you little rogue; where is your money?"

"I haven't any," she said simply.

"Haven't any!" he repeated. "You little thief, what brought you here, then?"

The hard words frightened the little girl, who, bursting into tears, said:

"Mother is sick and hungry. In my prayers I said, 'Give us this day our daily bread,' and then I thought God meant me to bring it, and so I came."

The rough but kind-hearted baker was softened by the child's simple tale, and instead of chiding her he said:

"You poor, dear girl! Here, take this to your mother." And he filled a large basket for her.—Selected.

Where to Be Religious.

Many people think they are only religious when they are engaged in prayer, reading the Bible, listening to a sermon, taking the communion, putting money into a contribution box, singing hymns in church, or performing some distinctively religious act; everything else is called secular; these acts only are sacred. But the truth is a man may be as religious in shoeing a horse, in measuring grain, in weighing coal, in purchasing or selling an article of merchandise as in paying his subscription to the church or attending the prayer-meeting. The man who resists the temptation to make money by lying and swindling, and does it in the name of Christ and Christian honesty, is morereligious, certainly more Christian, thanthe man who has offered prayers, but will cheat and swindle when he gets a chance. The woman who can maintain her equanimity and control her temper while bending over a hot stove in warm weather with children crying and clawing after her has more religion—or shows more in that transaction—than a dozen Mrs. Jellibys who never miss a prayer-meeting or a convocation of the W. C. T. U. This is not said in disparagement of the latter, but in emphasis of the right of the former to be included under the head of religion.—Chronicler, in Christian Oracle.

Organize A Reading Circle at Once.

Every church should be an educational center. It should have a school of higher grade, wider scope and more definite aim than the average Sunday-school. The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses are admirably designed to meet this need. Concise handbooks are provided for Bible study, the study of missions and the study of the plea and history of the Disciples. Two successful years have demonstrated the wisdom of this plan. Every Christian Endeavor Society, every C. W. B. M. Auxiliary and every church ought to investigate the merits of these courses at once. Full and free information will be sent on application to J. Z. Tyler, 798 Republic Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

The Red Box Clew—V.

The next morning Vega was given her breakfast by the housekeeper in the large kitchen with its clean floor and shining walls. It would have been an easy thing to make herself miserable because she had not been placed at the table in the dining room with the others. She might have told herself that they did not consider her good enough; that she was only to be a servant; she could have wept a few miserable tears because forced to eat in a kitchen. In fact, Mrs. Clarmont anticpated this very thing. She sent for the housekeeper while breakfast was progressing. "How did she take the idea of eating out there?" the mistress inquired.

"Because," spoke up Clara, "I'm not going to eat with her, that's flat! Rather than get down on her level, I'll take care of Vega, myself."

"That's right," said Ronald, "let her know her place and then go ahead."

Mr. Clarmont looked up. "It used to be, 'Be sure you're right, then go ahead,'" he remarked.

"Mercy me!" cried Clara, "Pa is going to join in our conversation!" But Mr. Clarmont ventured no further words.

"We are right," said Mrs. Clarmont sharply. "If we don't recognize social classes, what's the use of anything? I never dreamed of the child eating with my children; I merely wished to know how she takes it, poor people are generally so frightfully stuck up and that sort of thing."

"She seemed quite cheerful," said Mrs. Dew.

"Then she is used to it," said Mrs. Clarmont promptly. "I'd rather she had been a little dissatisfied; 'twould show that she was more fit to be a companion to Vega." The housekeeper returned to the kitchen and resumed her seat beside the girl. She noticed that Frank was looking very serious, and a suspicion came to her that it might be caused by pride. But this vanished when Frank spoke.

"Mrs. Dew, I have been wondering how I can make Vega happy. I wish you would tell me something about her."

"Nobody will ever make her happy," returned the housekeeper, "the only thing to be hoped is that you can divert her mind while you are with her. Vega was nine when she became deaf. She had been going to school two years and she was bright and quick to learn. She was so fond of music, too, and could play real well, both from note and from ear. People said she would make a musician. And she was so companionable, I mean fond of company, and the girls of her age considered her their captain. Well, after her deafness, she has shunned company; she made her mother hide the piano away in the attic, because the sight of it reminded her of her loss. Everything is done to humor her. Most people have a tender spot—an interest for something—and if you reach that spot, you have got 'em. But if Vega had any particular inclination, it was for music, and of course that's at an end. So all you can hope to do is to walk with her, and take care of her and see that she gets what she wants."

When breakfast was ended, Mrs. Clarmont sent for Frank. "Fanny, I have written on Vega's slate that you are the new girl employed to amuse her. You will notice this slate and pencil are always fastened to her waist. When you wish to tell her anything, you must write it down. Now go with her and amuse her." All this while Vega was gazing at Frank with a sour expression that said very plainly, "If you think you can amuse me, you are very badly mistaken!" However, she marched away and Frank followed. They left the house and entered the beautiful pasture that stretched from the back of the house to the distant grove. The footpath wound under picturesque forest trees, and through stretches of bluegrass that was now in seed, and the dew was so heavy it looked like fallen rain. The birds were busy with their songs because it was early, and they knew what was to be expected later on from an August day in Missouri. Frank drank in the pure country air with delight. It was so very different from hot pavements, drifting coal soot and the sounds of umbrella-menders and electric cars! She was quite frightened by some snake doctors with chalky white bodies, their four brown wings going like windmills on the ends of their curious stems. They darted about her head with threatening sounds, then stood still in the air and looked at her. And a clumsy bumblebee alighted on the red bloom of a clover; only he was too heavy for his chair, so the clover bent over and he fell off, then circled about Frank as if he thought she had something to do with his disgrace and he had half a mind to put a sting in her. There was a beautiful pony grazing not far away, and under a clump of locust trees were three cows, one hard at work putting up her day's cud and the other two lying in the long grass, and playing like the sun could not get through the delusive locust branches. On ran the footpath till it ended at the summerhouse beside the brook.

When they entered, Vega pointed at the benches, then waved Frank to the house. "What is it?" Frank asked, before she remembered that her companion couldn't hear. Vega saw the moving lips and made her gestures with a very cross face. The other was too timid to write her question upon the slate; besides, why did not Vega write what she wished; or, why did she not speak out? Perhaps what she desired was cushions. Frank ran to the house, hoping the housekeeper could explain.

"You poor child," said Mrs. Dew. "You'll have to find her out for yourself. Vega is beyond me!"

"Yes, it's cusions," said Ronald, who happened to be near. "That's just like Vega, waiting till she got there, then sending back for them. I'll get 'em for you." So Ronald brought her the cushions and Frank carried them to the summerhouse. Vega seated herself upon them and stared at the brook.

Frank summoned up courage and took the slate and pencil from their pocket; then she wrote, "What do you want to do?" Vega read the words scornfully aud then spoke out, "I don't want to do anything?" Her voice was not unpleasant, but it was so loud Frank was startled. She could not help starting a little, and when Vega saw this, she closed her mouth tightly as if she were putting it away for good.

Frank waited a long time after this, while her thoughts were very busy. She feared she was about to let slip a golden opportunity. If she could enter this lonely life and bring sunshine there! There must be some way to reach this discontented heart. But Frank felt herself so young and inexperienced. How could she know what steps to take? And nobody could tell her. Yet why could not Vega be happy? She had health, comforts of all kinds, eyesight, a comely form and face. And surely God gives a special care to those who are afflicted. She was afraid Vega knew nothing of the rich promises to the sorrowing. Had nobody ever taught her? Could Frank teach her? Tears came to her eyes. Oh, if she could show Vega how to become a Christian—if she could make Vega know what it means to be always sure of one Friend, always trustful of one Father! For sometimes, when Frank would be inclined to mourn because she had never known her parents, the thought would come that she was the daughter of a King. This Father had watched over her from her infancy, he had given her a home and friends. And he had promised to grant to her whatever she might ask. Why not ask him now? For an instant Frank forgot the presence of Vega.

But all the while Frank sat there on the bare bench absorbed in thought, Vega, from her rich cushions, was watching her. The little daughter of the rich lady had never seen a face like that of her hired companion. One could see at a glance that it was refined, but Vega was accustomed to refinements. It was the expression of the face—not a face beautiful in itself—that struck the observer with wonder. Vega's own face was marked by the habit of always having one's own way. But Frank's face was that of one who has learned to submit—and who has learned to submit gladly—to another will. Vega did not understand, but she was touched. Then she saw tears come into the clear eyes, and she saw Frank raise her face and look up, as if she could see a brightness beyond the brightness of the morning. And that brightness was reflected upon her own brow, as if in prayer she had reached a mountain peak where a sun, unseen of earth, shone full upon her. Vega wondered more and more, and her wonder was touched with awe and a tenderness she had not known for years. For awhile she struggled with her pride, then she spoke for the second time, "What is the matter?" It cost her a great effort to speak those words, for she had been wounded deeply by the way her tone effected strangers. But this time Frank did not notice the peculiarity. She seized the slate and pencil and and wrote impetuously, "I was praying that you might love me."

Well, and when Vega read that and looked up startled and saw the steadfast pure gaze fastened upon her—a gaze all the clearer because it found its way through tears, she caught the pencil out of Frank's hand and wrote, "You darling!"

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CHAMBERLAIN.*

The Book of Nehemiah is one of the sections of the document which includes Chronicles, Ezra and Nehemiah, and which was originally a unity. The section which is called Nehemiah is made up of certain excerpts from the personal journal of this noble-hearted man, who acted as governor of Jerusalem for many years. Such sections are 1:1-7:73a; 12:27 43 and 13: 4-31, which are written in the first person and are, therefore, of the very highest value as being the authentic utterances of the man who had most to do with the restoration of Jerusalem to something like habitable conditions. His work falls in the reign of Artaxerxes I. (464-426 B. C.). In former studies regarding Ezra it has been pointed out that there are reasons for believing that Nehemiah's work actually preceded that of Ezra, although in the narrative it comes later. The question, as before stated, turns upon the Artaxerxes meant in Ezra 7:1. It has been usually supposed that this was the first king of that name, which would bring the work of Ezra first, but there are many strong reasons for believing that it was rather Artaxerxes II. (404-358 B. C.), which would bring the date of Ezra's arrival in Jerusalem down to 397 B. C., instead of 458 B. C. It is difficult to understand how Nehemiah's work during the whole period to which the first seven chapters of the book bearing his name could have proceeded without any reference to Ezra's presence in Jerusalem if he were there, or to the work which Ezra had done, if that had already taken place.

Be that as it may, we know that in the twentieth year of the king's reign (cf. 2:1), Nehemiah being then resident in Shusham (Susa), the royal city of Persia, and a chamberlain at the court of the king, was visited by a relative of his, Hanani by name, who either came from Judah with certain other men of that nation, or, meeting them in Susa, brought them to the court and introduced them to his powerful relative. Nehemiah was sufficiently interested in his nation to take pains to ascertain exactly the situation prevailing at Jerusalem. His inquiry shows that as yet the population of Judah consisted almost entirely of those who had been left at the time the city was destroyed, or their descendants. The words of Nehemiah in his inquiry and the response of his visitors make no reference to any who had returned from Babylon. This does not indicate that none had gone, but rather that their numbers were inconsiderable in comparison with those who had never left the vicinity of Jerusalem. The report was sufficiently discouraging. The Jews in Judah were wretchedly poor, and were oppressed by foreigners who had taken possession of large portions of the province. The city was defenseless, because the wall had never been built up since the fall of the monarchy in 586 B. C., and while many people lived upon the site of the former city, the general appearance was one of poverty and desolation.

Nehemiah was distressed when he heard these reports. He was deeply sympathetic with the life and purpose of his nation, and felt that the promise of better days was faint indeed. Moreover, there was a recognition of personal responsibility in his attitude. He felt that he was the most powerful man of his nation. No one in Jerusalem or in Persia possessed the authority and influence which were his. His place was well-nigh as high in the court at Susa as had been that of Joseph in Egypt or Daniel in Babylon. It rested upon him, therefore, to take immediate steps for the relief of his oppressed people in the province.

His first resort was, however, to prayer and fasting. He desired to get himself right with God before attempting anything else, and devoted himself for some days to the strictest seclusion and to those duties of the religious life which would prepare him best for his responsible work. In his prayer, which he records, he beseeches the favor of God on the ground of his covenant of mercy, and lifts up his petition for the nation whose sins he bears upon his heart and confesses before God. Nor does he exempt himself and family from this responsibility. All have dealt corruptly and neglected their duties as prescribed by Moses in the law. They have incurred, therefore, the penalty of violated statutes. Nevertheless, he claims the promise of mercy upon confession of sin, as it had been given them in their sacred writings. God had promised to be with them and restore them if they should confess their faults and return to him. The chamberlain still further pleads that the Jews are the servants of God, his representatives, and, therefore, that the divine name and reputation are at stake, bound up in the fortunes of this people. Therefore, he prays for success, that in the enterprise which he proposes to undertake, that of securing the royal permission to go and give his personal attention to the restoration of Jerusalem, he may be prospered of God. His position was a high one in the court, and from the point of view of his people he seemed all-powerful; and yet he knew that a moment's caprice on the part of his wayward and passionate sovereign might undo the results of years of faithful service. He must pray for a favorable moment in which to present his petition, and for the divine blessing upon his effort to incline the heart of his king to his design.

The character of Nehemiah is most interesting. He exhibits just those qualities which make an ideal leader. First, he had won the confidence of a monarch, and had become, in some sense, a favorite of the mightiest ruler of the world. Next, he was loyal to his nation, even though that nation was the poorest and least resourceful of all the peoples of the time. He was not ashamed of them, but willing to act as their champion at the very court itself. Thirdly, he was a man of deeply religious nature, one who in an emergency turned to God for strength and wisdom rather than relying upon himself. And, lastly, he was a man whose strength of purpose, nobility of character and energy of disposition made him a power for the work which he proposed to undertake. All these qualities combined to make Nehemiah the ideal deliverer of the Jews in this time of their deep trouble, and are qualities which are needed in every generation for the carrying forward of God's purposes in the church or in the state.

THE PROBLEM SOLVED.

Many and learned are the articles that appear from time to time on Christian Science, Faith Cure, Magnetic Healing, etc., but there is but one solution to the question: it is all suggestion. Would you know how the so-called Christian Scientists produce their phenomena? Are you unsettled on "Divine Healing?" Can you account for the cures of the "Magnetic Healer?" If you cannot from a scientific standpoint answer these questions in the affirmative, you should investigate anew the law of psychology that governs these things. "Suggestion rules the world." "Thoughts are things." "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." Do you desire to supplement your salary by doing good to an afflicted humanity? Suggestion helps you in all kinds of business. It keeps you well. It is the key to success. At Parsons, Kan., a School of Suggestive Therapeutics has been opened by Evangelist W. E. Harlow and Dr. John Tinder where suggestion in the cure of diseases and correction of vices is taught and practiced. Write for free literature.

"Received Him Not."

"He came unto his own, and his own received him not." This statement of the rejection of the Son of God and his claims contains the simplest and the most colorless description of unbelief to be found in the divine record. There is no intimation here, that in refusiag Christ, they severely criticised or abused him, but they simply disregarded his teachings, and probably in a cool, courteous manner turned their backs upon him. We come in contact with legions of such people to-day. They pass no criticism, attempt no refutation, or institute no inquiry concerning the plan of redemption, or the hope of eternal life. They may often with courtesy listen to the preaching of the gospel read the Word of God, and behold the principles of sacred truth exemplified in the characters of the Lord's chosen, and yet remain passively indifferent to the claims of the Son of God. This is unbelief. It may clothe itself in refinement, veil itself in the gossamer garb of subtle philosophy and capricious speculation, or conceal itself in wantonness and worldly pleasure. It may stalk abroad with a dignified indifference, or attack with a violent opposition, yet it remains the same heaven-dishonoring, Christ-insulting and soul-destroying thing. It is in reality the parent of all vices. It is the sin of man, as neither higher nor lower beings practice it. Unbelief is doomed by the decrees of the Almighty. There is no hope for it. Its only and sure remedy is the uplifted Christ.

A Human Hothouse. This is what one of our celebrated writers on popular medicine calls our body. Thousands of germs are embodied in its different parts, some good, some bad, such as nature, climate or disease has laid in the soil. If they sprout and spring up, they prove in many cases dangerous weeds which endanger the general welfare. Out with them. Remove the danger and kill the germs before it is too late. Small dangers bring great troubles; let them grow and it may take a lifetime to get rid of them. As an eradicator, Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer has no equal. It doesn't weaken the system in performing a cure, but builds it up at the same time and creates sound muscles and flesh. For further particulars address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112 114 So. Christian Endeavor

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 5.

A NEW NAME.

(Gen. 32:24-29; Rev. 2:17.)

Some of us grow very tired of the old names we have so long borne, and all the associations that go with them; tired of our imperfect and wearying selves, tired of the thoughts and broken resolutions, tired of the weaknesses and sins, tired of the unequal struggle between our inner and truer and better selves and the fleshly, weak, outward thing that bears our name.

So, perhaps, it was with Abram when God gave him the larger name. So was it, doubtless, with Jacob, who wrestled long and manfully until there came to him release and a new and noble name. So was it, also, with Saul of Tarsus, when he came to himself, to his mission, to his largest possibilities and found his truest name. So was it, perhaps, with Simon and James and John.

Is there a promise for us, in this Book of Revelation, that some day we all of us shall escape from the thralldom of an old name into the glorious liberty of the new? Can it be that in that other world, when we have shuffled off this mortal coil, we shall also slough off, like the chrysalis, the old shell and the old name that shuts us in?

What a glorious thing it would be to possess new names signifying those very virtues which we most earnestly long to obtain! In prisons they take a man's name from him, and he is assigned a number. His past is lost. He himself is gone. He is nothing but the occupant of a cell numbered so and so. In convents and monasteries are taken away the old names of the sisters or the monks and they are given names which may or may not represent the virtues they embody. In contrast to the case of the prisoners, may we not receive names that mean far more than empty numbers? In contrast to the case of the cloisters, shall we not receive names that signify the actual virtues we so long have striven for and at last triumphantly attained? One of us shall be Patience! One shall be Purity! One shall be Peace! One shall be Faith, one Humility, one Prince, one Power! One shall be called The Gentle, one The Messenger, one The Deep, one The Calm.

Endeavorers, what does it mean, this new name, except that each of us should take that which he would most prefer to be, and should toil for it, pray for it, reach for it, until the promise shall for us be fulfilled, "I will give him a white stone, and upon the stone a new name written, which no one knoweth but he that receiveth it." What would you like that secret stone to bear, O fellow-endeavorer? Take that secret name and fix your desires upon it, and as sure as his promises are sure, it shall be yours.

The Biblical Basis of Missions.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

As director of the missionary department of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses I believe that it is possible to make the articles in our weekly papers interesting and profitable to all our readers during the year at hand, and especially so to the first and third-year readers. The handbooks of these years cover fields not so remote from each other as might at first glance appear. History has its biographical element, and biography well written is but another name for history. Many great missionaries are named in Brother McLean's concise book. His limitations forbade even the briefest paragraphs about them. Brief sketches of select lives among them will tend to draw the first and third-year studies together, and will not be without value to the second-year students. We are pleased to announce, therefore, that for the most part our articles will be biographical.

For the present, however, we wish to impress upon our students the necessity of getting themselves well grounded in the conviction that the Bible is the basis of missions. When this is once seen it can never be forgotten. It is so patent that when once discovered it stands up ever in monumental fashion on the landscape, if one may so speak of biblical history and literature. It is like those truths to which Wordsworth pays tribute in his "Ode to Immortality"—"Truths that wake to perish never."

In three of his chapters Brother McLean has emphasized this directly, and in two others indirectly. There are three chapters in his handbook entitled "The Scriptural Basis of Missions." These are followed by two entitled "The Apostles and Missions, and "Missions in the Life of Paul." These last two are really sequels to the first three. We ask of all first-year students a thorough study of these chapters, and if others have the book in hand it would be well to review them.

We cannot be students of the Bible without being students of missions, nor can we believe in the Bible without believing in missions, nor can we reverence and love the Bible without reverencing and loving missions. It thoroughly stirs the soul to reflect that the Book of all books is the one in which God reveals himself through and to a chosen few, that they may bear the revelation to others, and they to others in increasing multitudes, until the majestic outreaching shall include all the nations and tongues and kindreds and peoples of men. That is the really vital thing in our Bible; it is the most wonderful thing in it, and may be truly called the miracle of miracles in it. Take missions out of the Bible and there is left in it no revelation of God to men, no sending of the Son of Man as the Savior of men, no sending of the apostles of Jesus as preachers to men, no organized church or body of Christ as a refuge of men. Cancel the missionary element of the New Testament and you cancel its pages one by one.

Christ himself is the Father's incarnate mission to man. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The confession of Christ is the confession of his mission to the nations of earth and the adoption of it as our own. Baptism into Christ is baptism into his purposes and plans for world-wide redemption. Walking in newness of life with Christ is simply marching along the ancient highway of his apostles and first disciples at the entrance of which highway stands the guideboard of his commission.

A thorough conviction of the biblical and Christ-given basis of missions is the best prepartion for study in this department. If it is indeed a biblical work, this of missiions, it is therefore great and right and sublime. The enthusiastic student of it must from this standpoint soon come to realize that it is his joy and privilege to become identified with all those past and present who have made the Master's majestic work their own, each according to the measure of his ability and the height of his opportunity.

THE EXILED PROPHET

Or, WHAT JOHN SAW ON PATMOS

By J. G. ENCELL

Illustrated with thirty-five half-tone engravings. 245 pages. 12 mo. Cloth...$1.00

This work is prefaced by an essay on the Phophecy of Daniel by Dr. D. R. Dungan, covering a space of seventy pages.

In the remainder of the book will be found the author's understanding of the Book of Revelation reached after many years of careful study and investigation of this subject.

Many are of the opinion that Revelation is a sealed book, but such as hold that opinion will be convinced by a careful reading of this work by J. G. Encell that Revelation is something revealed.

SOME OPINIONS OF THIS BOOK.

"At the beginning of the book is an interesting Essay on Daniel, by D. R. Dungan. This essay is intended to prepare the reader for the explanation of things seen by John on Patmos. The author of the work proper takes the position that the things contained in Revelation are to be understood by some one at some time. If it were not so it would not be called the 'Revelation of Jesus Christ.' This book is one that will be read with profit by many."—Gospel Messenger, Mt. Morris, Ill.

"The 'Essay on the Book of Daniel,' which forms a most fitting introduction to this volume, has all the clear and careful thought which is characteristic of D. R. Dungan's style. The body of the book is given to a brief exposition of the most striking features of John's vision of the future church. For a number of years the author has been giving the substance of this book in a series of illustrated lectures. The marvel is that he has succeeded in condensing the work to its present form. It is suggestive and stimulating."—Christian Oracle, Chicago, Ill.

COLGAN.

W. H. Colgan died Sept. 12, 1899, in his 59th year, leaving a wife and two daughters to sincerely mourn his loss. A man of high honor and integrity, his friends were unnumbered. As an ex-Confederate soldier he was pronounced brave and unflinching. As a civil officer he was kind, considerate and courteous to all, and this made him a favorite with the entire bar of Kansas City, Mo. His qualities of mind and of heart greatly endeared him to his associates. He was a Christian and an upright citizen, whose character was above reproach. To know him was to love him. His death was a great loss to the community and his dear ones. W. D. CREE.

WILKIE.

Two little sunbeams, precious darlings, Freddie and Raymond, sons of Charles and Ella Wilkie, of Crescent City, O. T., the joy and the pride of our once happy home are gone from earth forever. Freddie, born Oct. 18, 1898, was taken from us April 29, 1896, aged six months and eleven days. Raymond, born Sept. 24, 1896, was called away Oct. 2, 1899, aged three years and eight days. Blessed treasures, while it wrings our poor hearts to give them up, yet we feel that they have been called home by the blessed Master to be with him in his kingdom. Holding our darlings in loving remembrance, we pray God to enable us to so live that when this mortal life with us shall close, we may be reunited with our loved ones in an eternal home.

5 DROPS [TRADE MARK.]

THE WORLD'S GREATEST ROBBER

But all for the Good of Suffering Humanity.

for it Robs them of Diseases.

RHEUMATISM, HAY FEVER, ETC.

By the never-failing merit and efficacy of "5 DROPS" many diseases have been robbed of their terror, and the grave of many of its victims. Through the prompt and decisive action of "5 DROPS," thousands have been snatched from the jaws of death and restored to health, happiness and friends. Many a person has been told by the attending physician that they were beyond the reach of medical science. Yet to-day, they live and are a walking advertisement for this remedy, and are likely to reach a ripe old age. This may sound a little skeptical to some, yet it is true, most positively true. We make no exaggerated statement in behalf of this remedy; we hold out no false promises to the sick and afflicted. But we say to all of them, it does not matter how many doctors have treated you, how many remedies you have tried, how long you have suffered, if you have any of the following diseases, you can positively be cured by the use of "5 DROPS," for it never fails: RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, BACKACHE, ASTHMA, HAY-FEVER, CATARRH, TOOTHACHE, NERVOUSNESS, SLEEPLESSNESS, NERVOUS and NEURALGIC HEADACHES, HEART WEAKNESS, EARACHE, CROUP, MALARIA, DROPSY, CREEPING NUMBNESS, BRONCHITIS, LA GRIPPE, and kindred diseases. So proof positive are we of the effectiveness and highly curative properties of "5 DROPS," backed by the many thousands of testimonials received from grateful persons from every part of the country, that we are fully warranted in saying that "5 DROPS" is daily curing more people than all the remedies on the market combined, and in cases of Rheumatism, it is curing more than all the doctors combined, for they cannot cure chronic Rheumatism. "5 DROPS" can and does cure it regardless of how severe, or how long standing. "5 DROPS" is not alone the best remedy on earth, but is also the cheapest, for a dollar bottle contains 300 doses. Price per bottle, $1.00, prepaid by mail or express, or six for $5.00. Sample bottles, 25c., but for the next thirty (30) days will send sample bottles for 10c. Agents wanted. Address America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. Peolep will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the ope.

Be Sure About The Food

Prudent consumers will before using any proprietary article of food satisfy themselves from official sources of its purity and wholesomeness.

Was there ever proof so conclusive as to the qualities of the baking powders as that given by the Government Chemists at the World's Columbian Fair?

The official tests there made showed Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder to be the purest, strongest, most healthful of baking powders, and a diploma and medal were awarded accordingly. A pure, grape cream of tartar baking powder.

Such testimony must establish the use of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder in every home where pure food and economy are appreciated.

NOTE.—The alum baking powders were excluded from consideration at this great competitive test because they are deemed neither reliable nor wholesome.

Publishers' Notes.

"FACTS ABOUT CHINA."

This is the title of a new paper-covered book containing 57 pages, written by W. Remfry Hunt, and just published by the Christian Publishing Co. The book contains the important facts concerning China that would be most interesting to those who read to learn the facts of history.

To those who do not have the time nor opportunity to read large volumes on the history of China this little book will be found to give to them the essence of the history of this Oriental country. The author of this little book diligently searched for the facts he gives and gathered them while living in China. The intention of the author in writing the book is to impart information about China to students, members of the reading circles, Sunday-school scholars and all those who are deeply interested in China as a mission field.

A glance at the following table of contents will afford an idea of what "Facts About China" contains: "Vastness of the Chinese Empire," "History and Age of China," "People of China," "Populousness, Classic and Sacred Systems," "Strange Manners and Customs," "Some Absurdities of Heathenism," "Language, Education, Literature, Climate, Products," "Missions in China," "Modern Progress and Hopeful Signs," "Difficulties and Oppositions," "Encouragements from Native Converts," "Appalling Needs and Claims," "Our Own Missions in China," "Names and Work of Missionaries," "Our Privileges and Responsibilities," "China Missionary Chart."

The price of this little book is 25 cents, postpaid.

"FREQUENCY OF THE LORD'S SUPPER,"

written by N. J. Aylsworth, and recently published by the Christian Publishing Co, is another paper-covered little book, embracing 103 pages, and deals with the subject in a most attractive and convincing manner. The price of this book is 25 cents, postpaid.

The author, in his introduction, says: "If the thoughts here presented shall serve to remove some practical objections which are commonly supposed to lie against the frequent celebration of the Lord's Supper and shall tend in some measure to increase the spirituality and effectiveness of its observance, the object of the author will be attained." Every preacher in our church should read this book and also recommend it to the families in their congregations.

Books on important Bible characters are always interesting to the student of God's Word. The Christian Publishing Co. has among its list of late publications the following: "In the Days of Jehu" and "King Saul," both written by J. Breckenridge Ellis, and "Queen Esther," written by M. M. Davis. These books will give the reader a greater insight of the characters and times of these prominent personages mentioned in the Old Testament. A careful reading of these books by those who have studied the Sunday-school lesson during the last year or so will be found to aid materially in impressing the lessons on their minds. The story of each life is so attractively told and the lessons so plainly brought out that the readers will treasure them in their minds the balance of their lives. The price of "In the Days of Jehu" is 75 cents, "Queen Esther" 75 cents and "King Saul" $1.00.

HUGH CARLIN, or, Truth's Triumph, by J. H. Stark, is a well-planned and well-developed religious story, dealing with some of the modern phases of religion in a very practical and striking manner. It takes high rank as a religious novel. 185 pages. Cloth, $1.00. Christian Publishing Co.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Is it a Boer-hunt or a Lion-hunt in the Transvaal? Last week the victories of the British at Glencoe and Elandslaagte on successive days made it appear that the Lion was hunting the Boer. Just at present it seems that the Boer is hunting the Lion. Later reports indicate that the two British victories mentioned were less decisive than had been supposed, and that the Boer forces which were involved in those fights are very far from being demoralized. On the contrary, they are pushing on south toward Ladysmith, according to the original intention, and the three divisions which failed to meet before the attack on Glencoe are now united. Glencoe and Dundee have been abandoned by the British, and Gen. Yule has effected a skillful and perilous retreat from Dundee to join Gen. White at Ladysmith. The storm-center at present, therefore, is Ladysmith, which is held by the combined forces of Generals White and Yule, and before which is concentrated almost the entire strength of the Boer army, far superior in numbers to the British. General White has the choice between attempting to hold Ladysmith against serious odds and falling back to Colenso to await the arrival of the British troops which are now on their way to South Africa. It is believed that he will pursue the former course, but it will mean serious work. The previous victories have been over only parts of the Boer force, and not overwhelming at that; now the whole army is to be met. Boer marksmanship has shown up to advantage in the skirmishes of the past two weeks, and there is an increasing respect for the ability of Gen. Joubert, Boer commander-in-chief, as a tactician.

Taking the situation in South Africa just as it stands, one must conclude that the Boers have quite as good a prospect of victory as the British, probably better. But the really significant thing about this apparently well-matched conflict which is about to occur at Ladysmith is that the Boer army represents practically the whole military strength of the Transvaal, while the British are but a handful at an outpost. If the Boers lose this battle they have nothing to fall back upon; if they win they will still have to deal with the British army corps which is coming under Gen. Redvers Buller. For the Boers the ensuing battle is the supreme effort; for the British it is a mere preliminary skirmish. Gen. White and his command may be in a perilous place, and may perhaps have before them a larger contract than they can carry out, but the British cause is not in danger. The real army is not yet in the field. During the past week 21,000 men, 1,000 horses and six batteries of artillery have been embarked at Southampton. By November 4 the work of embarkation will be complete, but Gen. Buller will not be able to take the field with his army corps before the latter part of December. Meanwhile, the Boers may be defeated, but no amount of British reverses can be decisive. Operations on the western border of the Transvaal continue to be of minor importance. Mafeking has been shelled by the Boers with little effect. There has been a skirmish in the neighborhood of Kimberley, but Cecil Rhodes, who persists in remaining there, says that the defenses are strong and that there is no reason for anxiety.

Together with the political, social and sanitary regeneration of the islands which have recently passed out of Spanish control there must come a religous reconstruction. Fortunately, the United States Government need not and indeed cannot burden itself with the responsibility of administering this reform. But just because of this fact it is worth while to keep an eye on events in the Far East to see whether representatives of the United States are preserving that attitude of fine impartiality which alone is consistent with the pretentions of a government which maintains no religious establishment. The point most immediately at issue is Catholicism in the Philippines. It is charged, apparently on good authority, that Protestant missionary work in the islands has been repeatedly interfered with by the United States authorities, while the Archbishop of Manila has been aided and abetted in every possible way by Gen. Otis. If there is anything which the Catholic priests or bishops can accomplish toward the pacification of the Filipinos, by all means let them do it, but the United States Government cannot recognize them as such without incurring consequences more serious than the unfriendliness of the Philippine insurgents. The past record of the Roman Catholic Church in these islands affords little basis for Archbishop Chapelle's confident expectation that he will soon be able to effect pacification. All reliable evidence points to the conclusion that the priests are thoroughly hated by the natives, and that Catholicism as a religion has no hold on them. Hence, also, the ludicrous futility of Archbishop Ireland's protest against Protestant missionary effort there on the ground that the field is already completely occupied by Catholicism, and that the introduction of any other teaching would only tend to shake the childlike faith of the Filipinos and unsettle them. It seems to us that we have heard that argument before about keeping quiet for fear of "shaking the faith" of somebody, and it is pretty well conceded that the argument is never resorted to except in the interest of a faith which is not worth keeping unshaken. Certainly, the Christian faith of the Filipinos needs to be shaken up right briskly, and we would be sorry to see the action of any United States official, whether civil or military, impeding this movement.

While the Catholic Church is making this preposterous claim to exclusive religious jurisdiction over the late Spanish colonies, the hierarchy in Spain is demanding for itself even more significant and startling concessions, and is attempting to enforce these by hinted threats of a Carlist uprising if they are refused. Representatives of the Spanish hierarchy have discovered the secret of that country's present critical condition to be the excessive liberalism which "substitutes individual discernment for the authority of the church." To check the advance of this obnoxious liberalism the following demands are made by the church: "Complete independence of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, which means that none of its members, under any consideration whatever, shall be judged by secular courts; re-establishment of all clerical privileges; abolition of the legality of marriages not sanctioned by the church; noninterference of the secular authorities with any legacies or grants obtained by the church; prohibition of religious association to non-Catholics." In other words, the Spanish hierarchy, running dangerously close to disobedience to the Pope's injunction to be loyal to the present dynasty, proposes to dictate terms to the civil government, rendering itself and its agents practically independent of the state in matters temporal and judicial. This means that for Spain the hand of progress is to be turned back about four centuries on the dial of history, and the old claims of mediæval Catholicism re-established. Doubtless there is in Spain a large Catholic party too clear-sighted to approve of such insolent demands. The resistance of these demands must come from such a party if it comes at all, for the administration is not strong enough to resist successfully.

Sometimes a very excellent organization does a very foolish thing. In fact, most of them do from time to time. The case in mind is that of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, than which we esteem no association more highly, which at its recent National Convention at Seattle, Wash., adopted a number of miscellaneous resolutions bearing only remotely or not at all upon the work for which the union professes to exist. The most conspicuously irrelevant was that which censured the policy of the administration in the Philippines as an attempt to "compel a foreign people to submit to the rule of the United States," and protested against "a war through which the administration is striving to enforce its policy " We do not criticise this resolution because it criticises the administration. Approval of the President's policy by vote of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would have been equally irrelevant. No one can deny the right of any number of women, whether members of a temperance union or not, to "resolve" at pleasure touching any subject in the realms of politics, religion, morals, science, art, literature or fashions, but any such resolution must carry with it only the weight of its individual supporters, not the weight of the organization. The members of that union are agreed on the subject of temperance, and their agreement on that topic is the only basis for their union in an effective organization. But a people who are united on temperance will, by all the laws of reasonable probability, represent many opinions on expansion, tariff or the rights of England in the Transvaal. The greater the number of issues the fewer will be the people who are agreed upon them. There are plenty of friends of temperance who want to work with the W. C. T. U. for temperance, but do not want to work with it for anti-expansion. Who can blame them if they prefer to seek an agency where they can work for one without sanctioning the other? The Prohibition party weakened itself in precisely the same way by espousing causes to which the friends of prohibition did not unanimously wish to commit themselves. Personally, the writer of this page believes in woman suffrage (under certain limitations), but he always considered it an injustice to brand as enemies of prohibition all those who were not willing to support a party platform including both prohibition and woman suffrage. The W. C. T. U. will gain power if it will keep out of politics and continue its noble work for temperance.

Of the recent experiments with wireless telegraphy none has been attended with such complete success, and has so strengthened the general belief in the practical value of the system, as those made in New York Bay in reporting the Dewey naval parade and the yacht races. A Marconi receiving instrument was located on the Navesink Highlands and a sending instrument on a steamer which followed the parade and the races. Messages were sent over a distance of fifteen miles, and, according to the testimony of official representatives of the army and navy who observed the experiments in the interests of the government, the system worked with as much regularity and certainty as could be obtained by the use of a wire. Rain, fog, intervening buildings and hills did not hinder the transmission of messages, and communication through greater distances is only a question of securing greater elevation for the instruments. It need not be expected that telegraph wires will all come down and submarine cables all come up very soon, by reason of this new discovery, but there are many purposes for which it will be highly useful in both peace and war. For instance, the present method of signaling between vessels, with flags by day and searchlight by night, is rather a crude arrangement, and it is here perhaps that wireless telegraphy will find its first practical application.

A. M. ATKINSON.

The sketch which we publish in another place, from the Wabash paper, of our departed brother, renders it unnecessary that I should do more than pay a personal tribute to my dear friend. I have known and loved A. M. Atkinson thirty years. He was my confidential friend and adviser. We shared each other's joys and sorrows. He was a true friend and could be trusted in the shadows as well as in the sunshine. He stood by his friends. He defended them against misrepresentation. He was a man who could be loved and trusted. I trusted him fully and never found him false or wavering. I have learned to prize such friends, and no man has too many of them.

As I said at Cincinnati before the convention, it seems to me that the characteristic quality of Bro. Atkinson was his large-heartedness. He loved his fellowmen. He loved his brethren. Especially did he love his preaching brethren. He was a friend to them all. Their burdens were his burdens. What preacher felt the pangs of poverty, in old age or sickness, who did not find a friend and a helper in A. M. Atkinson? He knew the preachers' lot and their special burdens as few men know them. He cared for the widow and the orphan. He was the friend of the friendless. His hand was ever wide open to relieve the wants of the needy. He loved the church—the whole, wide, universal church of God. His heart was big enough to take in every man and woman that loved the Lord Jesus.

He was a liberal thinker as well as a liberal giver. He read all our papers and kept up with the best thought of the times. He saw more in our great plea than many of his preaching brethren even seemed to dream of. He longed to restore the apostolic grace of liberality and care for the poor and needy. He wanted to see more emphasis laid upon the life and less upon mere dogma. He believed in going forward to larger and better things. When writing or speaking to me concerning the course of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in its plea for a deeper spiritual life, for Christian liberty and for advancement in the knowledge of divine things, his customary phrase was, "I follow your flag!" Grand man! Brave heart! He has followed the flag of his Captain beyond the firing line into the land of everlasting peace.

What a glorious ending God gave to his beautiful life! In the midst of his brethren, at the greatest convention in our history, surrounded by those whom he loved and who loved him, at the close of a tender and passionate appeal for higher consecration to the service of God, the Master whispered, "Come home!" and his liberated spirit went to be with the Lord. He would not have had it otherwise. "He walked with God and was not, for God took him." He carried the sorrows and troubles of his brethren until his heart was broken. He died for his brethren, and will live henceforth and forever in the affectionate remembrance of those for whom he lived and labored.

As it was my privilege to support his head when the spirit was taking its flight to God, so I hope to greet him among the immortals in the land where there are no widows and orphans, nor aged and destitute preachers. The benediction of his noble and consecrated life rests upon the brotherhood to-day, and its influence in death, more even than in life, shall go on blessing the church and the world forevermore. My tears are mingled with those of his bereaved family, to whom my heart goes out in tenderest sympathy. Good-bye, dear brother, faithful friend! Heaven will be more precious to me because you are there!

RADICAL CONSERVATISM.

There is such a thing as radical conservatism as well as radical liberalism. That is to say, there is a conservatism which fails to conserve, just as there is a liberalism which fails to liberalize. One may call it a false conservatism or a false liberalism, if he prefers, but the term radical seems to be not inappropriate as a term to characterize the quality of both these extremes. What we mean by radical conservatism is a position or attitude so utterly indefensible in the light of known truth as to put those who hold it out of sympathetic touch with the open-minded and open-hearted, who are willing to know the whole truth on every question. When a writer assumes that any view of the Bible, or of any particular book of the Bible, or of inspiration, or of revelation, which differs from the traditional view of these questions is "destructive criticism," and that those who hold such a view are "destructive critics," who are to be treated as enemies rather than as friends of the Bible, he classes himself among radical conservatives. It would hardly be too strong to call such a writer a destructive conservative, for such a position is well calculated to react in the direction of an opposite extreme.

It is morally certain that intelligent men cannot be held by the chains of tradition to views which were once popular, but which have now been surrendered by most free-minded, intelligent people. The man who insists on some ancient view of the atonement, for instance, like that which regarded the death of Christ as the purchase-price paid to Satan for the redemption of man, and who insists that that view is the scriptural one, and that to reject it is to reject the atonement, must be classed with the radical conservatives, whose views are destructive of faith as well as of a right understanding of the New Testament. The same thing is true of what might be called the amanuensis theory of inspiration. These are not safe views, neither are they conservative views, simply because they are old. They are dangerous views to be held and taught now as Bible truth, because to identify Bible truth with a theory that cannot stand in the light of truth and reason is very likely to prove disastrous to the faith of many.

It would be a sad revelation if we knew how many had lost faith in God and in His revelation through a false theology, which misrepresented God, and through a false view of the Bible, which misrepresented His revelation. There is a danger here that many fail to see. They do not realize that in backing away from what they regard as a dangerous position in front, they are liable to fall over a precipice in the rear which is equally dangerous. Because the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has recognized the danger in the rear as well as the danger in front, and has sought to avoid both by urging the importance of keeping our minds and hearts open to all truth, on the one hand, and on the other of exercising caution in the acceptance of any of the alleged results of modern investigation, it has not met the approval of either the radical liberals or the radical conservatives. We are glad to add, however, that it does meet with the commendation of the great body of sober-minded, intelligent readers and Bible students.

We would do well, then, to remember that there is a dangerous and dogmatic conservatism, which refuses to advance with the growing knowledge of the world, just as there is a dangerous and dogmatic liberalism, which insists on advancing faster than the facts warrant, and which sometimes assumes an air of infallibility in its conclusions, which is more becoming a pope than professed students of the Word of God. If we avoid these extremes and keep our eye steadily on Jesus Christ and allow no theory, whether ancient or modern, to come between us and the strictest allegiance to Him, we shall keep in the path of safe progress which will enable us, while holding on to all the treasures of truth in the past, to receive whatever new light God may have for us as we march forward into the future.

BRITONS AND BOERS.

The war is on in South Africa. How shall we regard it? It is easy to say it should not have been. This is a truism. Somebody makes a stupendous blunder and commits a stupendous crime where war is resorted to for the settlement of differences. Still, wars occur, and seem unavoidable to even a Christian nation at times. When we reach a plane of civilization where men are subject to reason on questions of national difference war will not be possible.

The present war in South Africa seems to us to be the result of a stubborn, blind, non-progressive, fatuous conservatism on the part of the Boers, particularly of President Kruger, and perhaps of a too radical method of procedure on the part of Mr. Chamberlain and the English war party. No one doubts that there were wrongs in the Transvaal, that should have been righted. It is not in human nature—certainly not in Anglo-Saxon human nature—to submit to taxation without representation very long. This, British subjects in the Transvaal and other uitlanders, or foreigners, have been doing for sometime. They petitioned the British Government for relief. An effort was made through diplomatic chanels to have these wrongs corrected, but in vain.

What tactical blunders were made by Mr. Chamberlain, whether a different method might not have succeeded in securing the needed reforms, is, of course, an open question. But it is clear that, attention having been called to these reforms, Great Britain must enforce her demands peaceably or otherwise, or surrender her supremacy in South Africa. She has large possessions there, which she holds for her own interests, it is true, but for the interests of Christian civilization as well. The whole of that region is infinitely better off with Great Britain's influence in the predominance than it would be without it.

Boers claim to be fighting for their liberty and independence. With this object all Americans sympathize. But it is no part of Great Britain's purpose to deprive the Boers of either their liberty or independence. She demands that the Transvaal Republic shall discharge its duties by granting the right of citizenship on reasonable terms, and equal political rights to all who make their home there. It may be questioned whether all her demands are equally just, but there was no apparent disposition to correct the wrongs on the part of Pres. Kruger and his legislature, the Volksraad. They sent an impossible ultimatum, when they should have sent a conciliatory note, pledging themselves to give their immediate attention to the abuses complained of. War was the result.

Those of us who justified our war with Spain on the ground that it was for the liberty and well-being of an oppressed though alien people, close to our doors, will be slow to condemn Great Britain for demanding the rights of her own people and enforcing her demand, when spurned, by her army and navy. Should she go beyond what is necessary for securing these rights, and maintaining her prestige as a civilizing agency in South Africa, she will have to reckon with the conscience of the civilized world, and particularly of her own citizens, who, like ourselves, are lovers of liberty, and will tolerate no oppression of a weaker nation.

HORACE BUSHNELL.

The life of Horace Bushnell was passed in the midst of one of the greatest theological wars that has been known in this country. It was during the Unitarian revolt in New England. In the conflict of thought which attended this revolt he was an active and prominent participant. The story of his life is, to a large degree, the history of the period to which he belonged.

A narative of these events, and of this man, has recently been given to us in a charming style, by Theodore T. Munger. The story of the man, Horace Bushnell, was told soon after his death, by his daughters. Dr. Munger writes of the thologian and preacher. But Bushnell was a thinker, a poet, a philosopher, a statesman, a scholar and a man of affairs, as well as a thologian and preacher. He knew the place at which to found a school, the region through which to build a railroad, the proper location for a city park. He was a man of affairs.

Horace Bushnell was born in Litchfield, Conn., April 14, 1802. He died in Hartford, February 17, 1876. He became pastor of the North Church, in Hartford, in 1833. For forty-three years he was a prominent figure in that city. During a portion of this time he was the most widely known and most distinguished citizen of the town. The name of Horace Bushnell added to the fame and honor of the city of Hartford. Every enterprise by which men are affected, in body, mind, morals or estate enlisted his interest. He was a servant of the people; and his service was appreciated. Almost the last thing of which he heard before he passed out of this life was the fact that "The Park," as it had been called, for many years, received the name of "Bushnell Park." This name was given to the piece of ground surrounding the State House as an expression of appreciation on the part of the people of Hartford, and gratitude for the service rendered the community by Mr. Bushnell.

Horace Bushnell was educated at Yale. After his graduation he taught school in Norwich, Conn. He spent two years in New York as one of the editors of the Journal of Commerce. After this he was a tutor in Yale College. He studied law and was admitted to practice. He received his special training for the ministry in the Theological School in New Haven. His trining for his great work as preacher and theologian was, for the time, most thorough.

Horace Bushnell was a prophet to the men of his time. He spoke to people of his day on questions in which they were personolly and vitally interested. Some of the topics on which he spoke, orally and through the press, were: "The True Wealth and Weal of Nations;" "Principles of National Greatness;" "American Politics;" "Politics Under the Law of God;" "The Oregon Question;" "The Day of Roads;" "Agriculture at the East;" "Prosperity Our Duty;" "Barbarism Our First Danger;" "The Founders Great in their Unconsciousness;" "Work and Play;" "The Age of Homespun;" "Society and Religion."

The last-named was a sermon preached in California while he was in the state in search of health. To Horace Bushnell California is more largely indebted for its great state university than in is generally known. Some of the subjects named above were treated in essays and addresses while others were the themes of religious discourses.

These topics indicate his nearness to the people. He served the people of his generation. In the treatment of even secular topics he spoke as a Christian. They were not sensational subjects, used merely to catch the crowd, but were questions of current and vital interest, on which the people needed instruction. They were treated in an earnest, dignified, scholarly manner. Horace Bushnell was a teacher.

One might think, to read the titles of his books on theology and religion, that he had no time for any other work than the composition and delivery of gospel sermons and the preparation of books on theology. The following will indicate the activity of his brain and the fruitfulness of his pen in these departments: "Christian Nurture;" "God in Christ;" "Christ in Theology;" "Sermons for the New Life;" "Nature and the Supernatural;" "The Vicarious Sacrifice;" "Christ and His Salvation;" "The Moral Uses of Dark Things;" "The Reform Against Nature;" "Forgiveness and Law," and "Building Eras."

Dr. Munger says that with the appearance of his book entitled "Nature and the Supernatural," in 1858, it became evident that "a fresh thinker had broken into the world of New England theology.

The theological world of Horace Bushnell's day in New England was not practical. It insisted on scientific correctness, whatever became of the sinners. A critic said that it was singular that while Bushnell seemed to not grasp the full import of the death of Christ, he made Christ in his preaching a far more living and effective person than the majority of those who receive it, i. e., the full import of the death of Christ.

Bushnell called no man Master. He founded no special party. He was born a Congregationalist. By pedigree he was a Puritan. Almost all the teaching of the Congregationalists of his day he called in question, denied or modified, but remained in their fellowship to the last. The sons of those who assailed him when he was living now praise him. It was easily possible for him to have founded a denomination, but he seems never to have thought of such a thing. There are men who call themselves, or are called, by his name. Horace Bushnell was simply a Christ man—as every Christian should strive to be. He was accused of being a Sabellian, Arian, Unitarian. His part in the Unitarian controversery was free from the spirit of the polemic. He seemed to live above the strife; yet his discourses and books dealt with the questions that were in debate. The greatness of the man is seen in this fact: He was a peacemaker. A few men, not more than two or three, would have saved the church from the sin of schism. Horace Bushnell was one of them.

It is evident from Dr. Munger's book that the Unitarian controversey was much broader than a discussion concerning the nature of Jesus and his relation to God. "The fundamental question at issue between Orthodoxy and Unitarianism did not pertain so much to the being of God as to the nature of man. The Unitarian movement was not so much theological as it was humanitarian. It was, therefore, incorrectly named. But for this error in the name how different and possibly how much happier the later history of New England theology might have been!"

Hour of Prayer.

THE DISCIPLE WHOM JESUS LOVED.

(Jno. 21:20-24; 1 Jno. 4:15-21.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, November 8th.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Love is the chief element in Christianity, and there is no higher designation possible than "the disciple whom Jesus loved."

Paul and Peter designated themselves as apostles of Jesus Christ. It was enough for John that he be known as "the disciple whom Jesus loved;" as the one who "leaned back on his Master's breast at the Supper" when the awful question was going around among his disciples, "Lord, is it I?" John's nature was susceptible of a strong and passionate love. He was perhaps not so logical as Paul, not so argumentative as Peter, not so practical as James; but he possessed an intuitive mind which went directly to the essence of things, and a heart as open and trusting as that of a woman. Love nearly alway selicits love. It is no wonder, then, that Jesus loved John, and took him into the innermost circle of His friends. Perhaps the highest proof of His love for John was the bequeathing of His own mother to his care while He hung upon the cross.

It is worth while, perhaps, to ask what were the elements of John's character that made him, in a special sense, loved by Jesus. It is well known that John was not always what he was when he wrote his Gospel and his epistles. He was, at first, a "son of thunder," possessing that fiery, tempestuous nature characteristic of the Galileans, when he first came in contact with Jesus. He had, however, that spiritual insight which we call faith that discovered in Jesus an ideal far above anything he had ever known before. His heart went out in ardent love and admiration for the pure and spotless Son of God, and by this love he was transformed into the humble, lovable, trusting John which we see in his writings. John gave himself up to the transforming power of Christ's love, and it was this love on the part of John for what is purest and best, and his ardent aspiration to be like the Master, whom he adored, that attracted the love of Christ.

It takes love to apprehend love. John saw in Christ an expression of the divine love and said: "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God abideth in him and he in God." This confession, in John's thought, carried with it the allegiance of the heart; hence he adds: "We know and have believed the love which God hath in us. God is Love; and he that abideth in love abideth in God, and God abideth in him."

It is characteristic of John to describe God as Love, because this is the controlling element in the divine nature. It was God's love that caused Him to give His only begotten Son that "whosoever believeth on Him might not perish, but have everlasting life." It is love that brings about that vital union between the soul and God which John describes as "abiding in God and God abiding in him." It is this love that triumphs over fear—the fear of the day of judgment, the fear of punishment, the fear of death.

But this love has its origin with God. "We love because He first loved us." The principle of love is from God, and He has taught us what love is and how to love. The practical phase of John's doctrine of love comes out in the thought that "if a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen cannot love God, whom he hath not seen. And this commandment have we through Him, that he who loveth God, loveth his brother also."

It is this that makes Christianity a social religion. It is this that makes human brotherhood a possibility. It is this that makes sociology a necessary accompaniment to theology. It is this doctrine which is receiving renewed emphasis in our day, for if our Christianity is vital it must lead us to caring for our fellowmen and helping them to a better life. If we are indifferent to the welfare of the poor and needy, that are all around us, let us not deceive ourselves with the idea that we love God or that the love of God abideth in us.

Finally, shall we not all strive to be such disciples as Jesus can love with the love of approbation? This involves purity of heart, sincerity of motive and unselfish service toward God and our fellowmen. In that great day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, it will matter little whether we are rich or whether we are poor, whether we are high or whether we are low, but everything will depend on whether we are disciples whom Jesus loves.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we hallow Thy name because Thy name is Love. We thank Thee for the gift of Thy Son, who brought us the message of Thy love and who has begotten in us love for Thee and for our fellowmen. Help us, we pray Thee, to love Thee with our whole mind and heart and soul and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves; and may we so minister to the world's need in the love which Thou dost inspire within us, as that we, too, shall be transformed into the image of Thy Son, that where He is we may be also. We ask this for His name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

The veiled skies, the dripping clouds, the falling leaves, the sighing winds remind us that Bryant's "melancholy days" have indeed come. It is not easy to tell just what makes these days "the saddest of the year," but there is, nevertheless, a certain feeling of sadness that does steal over the soul at this season of the year. Perhaps it comes from the very fact of decay which we see all about us. It may be that the withered leaves, drifting through the air like snowflakes, and the bare limbs of trees which but a little while ago were clothed in robes of green, remind us, all too forcibly, that "we all do fade as a leaf," that life's summer is followed by its autumn, and that autumn is soon followed by the winter of old age. But whatever may be the cause of the feeling, it is wholesome medicine for the soul. It is one of the lessons that God is teaching us in His great Book of Nature. It is good for us to be reminded that the earth-life is a very brief and fading thing, that appeareth for a little while and then vanisheth away. The solemn question with every thoughtful soul is, How can I make the best use of the brief time allotted to me here?

There is need now for special vigilance that we do not fall into a period of relaxation after the great Jubilee Convention to which we had looked and for which we had labored during the year past. It has been said, and perhaps was said during the convention, by some one, that he who once gains a magnificent view of some mountain height, though he come down into the valley again, never loses the inspiration of the mountain vision. If the recent convention was a Mount of Vision to any of us, if it helped us to a larger conception of the kingdom of God and its possibilities, if it enabled us to appreciate as never before the royalty of service and sacrifice, if we gained a clearer view of the world's great need than we had ever obtained before, we ought to carry with us the inspiration of these visions into all the lowly paths of daily toil and duty; we ought to gird ourselves for still greater sacrifices and for more undivided service to Him who hath called us into fellowship with Himself for the world's redemption. If our great conventions do not serve as moral dynamos to charge us with new spiritual energy and power, but are simply exhausters, by means of which our energy and zeal escape in the air, they would not be worth holding. The past, however, shows that they are dynamic in their influence, and start us onward and upward toward higher ideals and greater achievements. This ought to be true, in a special sense, of our Jubilee Convention.

When will we ever grow out of the conceit that we know better than God what is best for us? None of us, of course, would make this claim in words, and yet by our words and our actions as well we show that we cherish such a conceit. Else why do we chafe at God's providence? We would have our lives all sunshine; but God sends us cloudy days. "Into every life some rain must fall." We would have a smooth sea and a favoring breeze; but God sends us adverse winds, and causes our bark to be tossed upon angry billows. We would like to have all men speak well of us; but Christ said, "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you." We would like to escape the sorrows and disappointments of life; but our cups are drenched with bitterness and our eyes are often weary with weeping. Jesus was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Administering comfort to others all His life, He Himself died of a broken heart. It marks a distinct stage in spiritual growth when we have learned not to murmur at God's way with us, but to accept His leading as the very best thing for us. Then, and not until then, can we pray, "Not my will, O Father, but Thine be done!" Gethsemane's agony was only a prelude to the ascension from Olivet to coronation and eternal kingship.

If there be one lesson that stands out clearly and distinctly above every other in the teaching of our past history, and at the recent convention, it is that which is expressed by the prophet in the words, "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." That is to say, whatever success we have achieved has not been due to any inherent might or power within ourselves, but to the Spirit of God, working in us and through us, for the accomplishment of His great purposes. This is the note we sought to emphasize before the convention, and we desire to emphasize it after the convention. All pride of numbers, of wealth, of social or intellectual power, or of correctness in religious theory, will prove a serious hindrance to the work which the Lord wishes us to do. We must put ourselves more fully and truly under the leadership of Christ, and follow Him whithersoever He would lead us, if we would meet the demands of this age or secure the approval of God. What the Lord Jesus is waiting for is a body of people that is willing to be used by Him for the triumph of His kingdom in the world. Are we that people? Are we willing to put away everything that prevents us from being used by Him as the vanguard of a mighty advance movement to take possession of this world for God and righteousness? If we ponder these questions awhile they are likely to drive us to our knees in humble confession, and in earnest petition for divine clemency, and for a larger indwelling of the divine Spirit. If the great convention has had the influence to humble us, to make us recognize our dependence upon God for success, and more determined to work in close fellowship with Jesus Christ, then indeed it was a great convention, not in numbers and enthusiasm alone, but in its far-reaching results upon our future life and growth.

Questions and Answers.

What are the "two immutable things" of Heb. 6:18? C. E. Rosenstein.
Howard, Kan.

God's promise and oath.

In Acts 8:5, referring to the preaching of Philip in Samaria, it is said that "when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ they were baptized, both men and women." In the 15th verse it states that when Peter and John came down they "prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost, for as yet he had fallen on none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." In the 17th verse it is said they "laid their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost."

1. Were they baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and if so, why did they not receive the Holy Ghost before Peter and John laid their hands on them?

2. In Mark 16:17 it is said, "And these signs shall follow them that believe," etc. Why do not these signs follow now?
H. P. Read.

1. The converts in Samaria were, no doubt, baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus and received the Holy Spirit according to Peter's promise in Acts 2:38. The laying on of the hands of Peter and John was probably for the purpose of imparting some special power of the Holy Spirit for a special purpose. This seems a most natural explanation, inasmuch as we know that the apostles' hands were not thus laid on all disciples, nor was the gift of the Holy Spirit limited to the apostolic age.

2. The signs that were to follow the apostles, and those to whom they imparted special gifts of the Holy Spirit, were for the purpose of confirming the Word in the establishment of Christianity. These "signs" do not follow now because they are not necessary for the confirmation of the gospel, whose fruits abound in every Christian land, and whose divine nature and regenerative power are attested by nineteen centuries of Christian history. These "signs" belong to the childhood period of the church, and to regard them as necessary to-day is to ignore the multiplied proofs of Christianity on every hand.

1. In your answer to my question sometime ago you say, "The question is asked by one who sees no place for baptism in the process of evangelization and salvation." I look upon Christian evangelization and salvation as a moral process by which men are brought into the moral likeness of Christ; but you evidently use the word evangelization to denote the mere numerical increase of a sect. Do you not?

2. You say that "the outward act of baptism gives notice to the world that the person baptized has passed the line and is on the side of Christ." Water baptism commits the persons baptized to the sect that baptizes them and gives notice to the world that they have passed the line from one sect to another, but not to the side of Christ. Do you suppose that the world will take one outward act of a lifetime as evidence of having passed the line that divides Christians from those who are not Christians? W. H. T.

1. No, we do not use the word evangelization in any such sense. We used it in the sense of preaching the glad tidings of salvation to the people and permitting believers to enter into the enjoyment of its blessings and its promises through compliance with its commands. Paul was evangelizing on his missionary tours when he preached the gospel to the people and received into the churches those who believed on Christ, confessed Him and were baptized into His name. They were not added to any sect, but "to the Lord," because they believed on Him and were baptized in His name in token of their surrender to His authority.

2. It seems impossible for this querist to conceive of a condition of the church that is not sectarian. He seems to regard baptism as an institution devised by a sect to increase its numbers instead of being a divine ordinance. No one, we suppose, is so foolish as to hold that the mere outward act of baptism possesses any moral value in itself. There must be a living, vital faith in Jesus Christ. When this faith exists there is a desire on the part of the believer to obey every command of Christ. But Christ has ordained baptism as an open and outward confession before the world, of surrender to Him, and it is therefore a sign to the world that those who submit to it have united themselves with Christ and with His followers to live a Christian life. Of course, if the life does not conform to this profession men will lose faith in its sincerity, but this does not disprove the statement that baptism stands as a general mark of distinction or line of demarcation between those who profess and those who reject Christ.

1. What would you call a Sunday school organized by a Sunday-school missionary sent out by one of the denominations, which is using its literature? Is it a union or denominational Sunday-school? How may we distinguish between a union and a denominational Sunday-school?

2. Which temple was the more magnificent, Solomon's or Herod's?

1. A Sunday-school, organized by no matter whom, if managed under the auspices of one denomination, using its literature and in co-operation with other Sunday-schools of that denomination in missionary work, we should say was a denominational Sunday-school. The distinction between a union and denominational school is that the former is made up of pupils and teachers representing different religious bodies, among whom there is an agreement to conduct the school on union lines without denominational peculiarities. In some places this seems to be about the only kind of a Sunday-school that is practicable. All Sunday schools should be as free from the denominational spirit as possible, and confine themselves very closely to the teaching of the Word of God, and especially in bringing the pupils to Christ.

3. The former was more magnificent as a structure, but the latter was made more glorious by the coming of the Messenger of the Covenant, even Christ, who taught within its sacred precincts.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

JAPAN.

A. MCLEAN.

The convention held in Indianapolis in 1881 urged that Japan be occupied at the earliest moment possible. The first missionaries sent to that country were Mr. and Mrs. Geo. T. Smith and Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Garst. Mr. Smith was a graduate of Bethany College and a minister of recognized ability. He was serving the historic church in Warren, O., at the time of his call to that field. He had served the churches in Bucyrus and Swampscott. Mrs. Josephine W. Smith was born in Cornwallis, N. S. She was married to Mr. Smith soon after he left college. Mr. Garst was born near Dayton, O. He received his education in the Iowa Agricultural College, in the West Point Military Academy and in Butler University. He received his commission from the hand of General Grant. For several years he was in the regular army on the frontier. Mrs. Laura DeLaney Garst was born in Hopedale, O. She received her education at Uniod Springs and Rochester, N. Y. After their marriage Lieutenant and Mrs. Garst thought much of mission work, and contributed liberally to its support. At one time they had it in their hearts to go to Africa as missionaries, at their own charges.

These four workers sailed from San Francisco for Japan on the 27th of September, 1883. On their arrival they engaged rooms in the Temperance Hotel in Yokohama, and began immediately the study of the language. They remained in that city until they were able to take care of themselves in the interior. They found the treaty ports well supplied with workers. Mr. Smith said in his humorous way that there were more missionaries in the foreign concessions of Japan to the square inch than there were in any other part of the world. After looking over the whole land they decided to begin work in Akita. This place is on the Northwest Coast, and is about four hundred miles from Tokio. Akita has a population of 40,000; the province of which Akita is the capital has a population of 600,000. There were then no missionaries in that province. Most of the people had not heard the name of Jesus. For some months the two families lived in a Japanese house as one family. They had all things in common. The Japanese were greatly amused when they saw these men and their wives walking arm-in-arm on the streets. They had never seen it on that fashion. Four months after the mission was opened there were two baptisms. Before the missionaries could intelligently answer the question, What must I do to be saved? it was asked by penitent believers. Two months later there were four more baptisms. These baptisms created no small stir. A church was organized and the ordinances were observed. The following spring Mrs. Smith died. She and her infant child were buried in the Buddhist cemetery at the edge of the town. Her saintly and gentle life had not been lived in vain. Her death caused some who had been hesitating to decide for Christ. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions asked the Mission Bands and the Rope holders for funds to erect a memorial chapel in Akita. That property was deeded to the Foreign Society. The next year Miss Calla Harrison and Miss Kate V. Johnson joined the mission. They had been successful teachers in the public schools of Madison, Ind. They volunteered to serve the Lord Christ in Japan.

While carrying on work in Akita the missionaries did not neglect the surrounding country and towns. They made long preaching tours from time to time. They diligently sought to evangelize all that part of the empire. The first out-station was established in Honjo, a town twelve miles distant containing 30,000 without any gospel privileges. There a number were added to the Lord. About the same time some work was done in Tsuchizaki, the port of Akita. A convert who had served Mr. Smith as cook removed to Arakawa, a silver mining town. There he preached the gospel and won some of his associates to the faith. The believers built a small chapel and paid for it out of their own scanty earnings. They continue to meet to break bread and to exhort one another to hold fast the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end. Other churches were organized in Innai and Shonai. Meanwhile, preaching services were held every week in Akita. Sunday-schools and other services were held in different sections of the city. Women were gathered in Bible classes and taught. The labors of the missionaries were not in vain in the Lord.

In 1888 Mr. Smith returned from a visit to America, whither he had gone the previous year. He had been married to Miss Candace Lhamon, and she accompanied him to the field. Miss Lhamon had served the Woman's Board in Ohio as its organizer. She visited the churches to form auxiliaries and to generate and foster missionary interest and zeal. She was known far and wide as a most effective worker and speaker. Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Snodgrass and P. B. Hall went to Japan on the same boat. Mr. Snodgrass was a graduate of Kentucky University and of the College of the Bible. At the time of his appointment to Japan he was serving the church in Ashland, Ky. Mr. Hall was educated in Milligan College and spent some time as a city evangelist in Washington and Maryland. After these arrivals it was deemed expedient to scatter the forces. Mr. and Mrs. Garst and Mr. and Mrs. Snodgrass and Miss Kate Johnson moved to Shonai, a place of 25,000 people, and the center of a vast and neglected district. There a chapel was built to accommodate the worshipers. The other missionaries made Akita their home and the base of their operations.

Two years later it was decided to make Tokio the central station. Tokio is the capital; it has a population of 1,500,000. It is one of the great cities of the world. It was a good thing in many ways that the workers went first to Akita. Their actio was one of the causes that led to a mor general dispersion of the missionaries ove the empire that took place at that time Prior to their settling in Akita most of th missionaries in Japan continued to live i the treaty ports. Now all parts are oc cupied. It was a good thing, too, for th workers themselves. They were able t preach sooner than if they had remained i a large city where they would have bee more independent and where the audience are more critical. Nevertheless, Toki became the center of all the work in Japar From Tokio the workers can easily go ou in all directions. The fact that they liv in the capital gives them a standing in th smaller towns that they could not other wise have. They have evangelized hun dreds of towns. They have sold and give away much literature. They have opene charity and Sunday-schools. They hav held meetings for women and Bible classe for all who can be persuaded to attend They have prepared tracts for genera distribution, and have done whatever they could to advance the interests of th kingdom.

About the same time Miss Lodusk Wirick joined the mission. She graduate from Drake University. The Belle Ben nett Fund supports her. For the first term of service she preferred to be independent Since her return she works in connectio with the other missionaries and is paid through the Foreign Society. Miss Wirick built a chapel in Tokio out of her savings One interested traveler said he was more impressed by the sight of that simple house of worship than he had been by any of the cathedrals of Europe. A Japanese evangelist does most of the preaching in this chapel. Miss Wirick conducts a charity and a Sunday-school. In 1892, E. S Stevens, Dr. Nina Stevens, Miss Lavenia Oldham, and Miss Mary Rioch entered Japan. Mr. Stevens was educated at Ada, O., and in Kentucky University. Dr. Stevens was born in Augusta, Ky., and took her medical degree in Cleveland, O. Miss Oldham came from Mt. Sterling, Ky. She was an experienced school-teacher and an active worker in the church. Miss Rioch came from Hamilton, Ont. Before her appointment she demonstrated her fitness for missionary service. Since the autumn of 1895 Mr. and Dr. Stevens have been stationed in Akita. There are several churches in that district in c Japanese evangelists. He visits churches from time to time and sets in order the things that are wanting and exhorts the believers to cleave to the Lord with full purpose of heart. He goes with his helpers into sections that have not been visited by any worker and preaches the glad tidings to as many as will listen. Dr. Stevens is doing the work of a medical missionary. She gathers the women together and teaches them how to care for their own health, and how to care for the health of their children, and how to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Miss Oldham and Miss Rioch have their home in Tokio. Miss Oldham conducts three Sunday-schools, two charity schools, two Bible classes for women and one English Bible class. Miss Rioch has charge of the Girls' Home and Training School, conducts a Charity School and a Bible meeting for women. Outside of the government offices Sunday is not observed in Japan. Most of the people are extremely poor. They believe they would starve if they rested one day in seven. Many will not attend services in the chapels until they are somewhat interested. The women in the mission visit the people in their homes and invite them. They explain their object in living in Japan.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Guy went out in the autumn of 1893. They are both graduates of Drake University. Mr. Guy has charge of one chapel, teaches a Bible class, teaches a class in English in the Young Men's Christian Association and does many other things to win the people and to aid the cause of missions. From time to time he goes on long tours throughout the country. He spends as much as six weeks on some of these tours. He holds series of meetings where there are churches and evangelizes where there are none. He also edits the Missionary Magazine. Mrs. Guy has charge of her home, conducts a charity school and a Bible meeting for women. In Japan as in other fields much time and attention must be given to inquirers. They may call before day or late at night. They may call when one has very important work on hand. He must stop and hear their troubles and perplexities and help solve them. If he shows any irritation he will lose his influence with them and with all their friends and acquaintances. Many hours out of every week are spent in this way.

Two years later Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Madden were sent to Japan. They both came from Kansas. Both were students in Bethany; he graduated. On Field Day he took most of the prizes. Mr. and Mrs. Madden live in Sendai, the largest city in the northern part of the empire. They are now building a home of their own. The money has been furnished by a good woman in West Plains, Mo. Besides the work in Sendai Mr. Madden has the oversight of the work in Fukushima. This place is twenty-five miles away. Hasegawa San teaches and preaches in Fukushima. Akozu is a country district not far from Sendai. There are six or eight groups of believers in that district. Kawamura San works in this field. Mr. Madden visits both places as he can find time and preaches for days at a time at each. The same year that Mr. Madden went out Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Pruett were engaged by the society on the recommendation of [illegible] missionaries in Japan. They went out as independent missionaries. On reaching the field they discovered that no provision had been made for their support. It was necessary for them to teach English in Japanese schools to earn enough to live. They had little time for real missionary work. They asked the society to assume their support and to put them to work. This was done. They are now in Osaka. This is the second city in the empire in respect to population, and the first in respect to business. There are a million souls within the limits of Osaka. There are 25,000,000 within the radius of one day's journey from the center of that city. Most of these people do not know their right hand from their left in religious matters. Mr. Pruett works Shizuoka as an outstation. A good work has been begun at that point. Two years ago Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Marshall, of Minnesota, left their home and friends and kindred to give their lives for the redemption of the Japanese. Mr. Marshall was born in Nineveh, Ind., and was educated in Butler University. He taught in Excelsior College and preached for some of the churches in that part of the state. He made rapid progress in the study of the language. He was a valuable addition to the force. He taught and preached through interpreters. In April, 1898, Miss Bertha Clawson left Angola, Ind., for Akita. Most of the time since has been devoted to the acquisition of the language. The Angola church regards her as their missionary. They furnish the money needed for her maintenance. The other churches in Steuben county paid her passage and gave her an outfit. Last September Teizo Kawai went from Des Moines to serve as an evangelist in Akita. He took a thorough course in Drake University. He is doing good service.

The Japan mission has suffered from the loss of several of its workers. Mr. and Mrs. Smith returned home in 1892 and did not again enter Japan. Last December Mr. Garst died. He had been in the field for sixteen years. He mastered the language as few other missionaries have done. He loved the Japanese and delighted in preaching to them He had influence with the leaders of thought and with the statesmen of the country. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall found it necessary to come home because she could not stand the climate. Others will take the places of those who left and those who died. Miss Carrie E. Goodrich sailed on the 19th of September of the present year to do kindergarten work in Tokio. P. A. Davey went on the same ship to do evangelistic work. Others will be sent to occupy the stations that have been opened and to open new stations. Now that the new treaties have gone into effect the Japanese are more disposed to listen to the gospel than they have since the Chinese war.

In forty one places the gospel is preached regularly. It is preached irregularly in many more. There are eight organized churches; in these there are 611 members. The missionaries number twenty, and the assistants of all kinds twenty-five. In the twenty-three Sunday-schools there are 269 pupils enrolled. There are eight day schools and 381 children in attendance. The students for the ministry number six, and those receiving special biblical training fifteen. The society owns eight church buildings, two schools and eight homes.

A PLEA FOR THE HOMELESS.

BY GEORGE DARSIE.

The cause of Church Extension appeals to our favor and liberality on many grounds. And it were hard to say which of its appeals is the strongest. Doubtless some will be more impressed by one and some by another. But I am safe in saying that it makes no appeal that is not sufficient of itself alone to fully justify the claims of this great work upon us.

1. To start with, it asks our help because it secures the gains of the evangelist. It makes his triumphs real and lasting. What is the good of storming a fort if you don't mean to hold it? Critics say that this has been our folly in the Philippine war—that we have captured cities upon cities, strongholds upon strongholds, only to abandon them to the enemy after they were captured. Such a policy is even more short-sighted and foolish in waging our war for Jesus Christ. Bishop Galloway, of the Methodist Church, says that sixty per cent. of their converts in the West are lost for lack of church houses. The very same thing is more or less true of every church. The Smiths must be closely followed up by the Muckleys. The work of the evangelist must be supplemented by the work of the contractor. The overwhelming disproportion of churches to church buildings among us is the legitimate outcome of our slowness to catch and use the Church Extension idea. And it is a situation full of menace to our cause. Our gains cannot be held and secured without the church building. To ignore its need is to fight as one that beats the air. It is largely to squander our time and toil and money. If you want your nail to stick, you clinch it; if you want your string to remain tied, you knot it; if you want your swarm of bees to stay with you, you hive it; and equally so, if you want your new congregation to live and flourish, you must house it.

2. Then, too, a church building is a pledge of good faith to a new community. The people erecting thereby say, "We are here for a permanent work, we have come to stay." Mere oral promises do not speak to men half so loudly as brick and mortar, or corner stones and shingles. These are to public confidence even more than good collateral to a bank cashier. They not only get the money, but better still, they get the people. A good corner lot, secured early, and a neat chapel on it, appeals in a strong and practical way to every enterprising citizen in a new town. He likes to see business in Christianity as well as everywhere else. It is an instant pasport to his favor.

Six years ago our Extension Board did what seems to me the most enterprising thing ever known among our people. At an expense of a little more than $200 it sent E. F. Boggess on an exciting horseback ride into the Cherokee Strip, starting with the crack of the gun at twelve o'clock noon on the opening day, with a horse previously trained for the purpose, thousands of others contesting with him, to secure desirable lots for church buildings in all the leading centers of population in that rapidly growing section. In consequence, we are to-day not only the strongest religious body in the Strip, but of all Oklahoma Territory. That of itself won large measures of confidence and good will for our people. By the way, why has none of our poets ever put that ride into verse? With the lofty spiritual aim behind it, why is not the ride of Edgar Boggess as much entitled to such perpetuation as the ride of Paul Revere, or of Phil Sheridan?

3. And then, did you ever think of this, that there is never any omissionary or anti-missionary spirit in a church upon which our Extension Board has set its seal? And for very good reasons. It knows too well the story of its own thralldom to listen for one moment to the siren song of congregational selfishness. It has felt too vividly the thrill of brotherly fellowship and of helpfulness to be charmed by such a song. And it is but too well aware that that song means for it either the Scylla of chronic covetousness, or the Charybdis of spiritual desolation. It has already learned the noble lessons that it is more blessed to give than to receive. That such a church may be counted on as a liberal helper in all our missionary enterprises we would naturally and easily conclude. That it always is such a helper we have the abundant demonstration of actual experience. One such church, therefore, is worth fifty churches that lack the missionaay spirit. For it has imbedded in it the expansive spirit that will in time make it the mother of fifty other churches like itself.

4. The wise method of our Extension Board of helping only those who help themselves is well calculated to stimulate the grace of giving in those to whom its aid is extended. The proportion between the sums raised on the spot and the sums donated or loaned by the way of help has again and again shown itself to be nearly three to one. Last year forty-seven of our congregations received in the aggregate $25,000 to aid them in buiiding. As a result those forty-seven congregations raised on the spot over $90,000, each dollar given thus calling out nearly three other dollars. Last year the Congregationalists helped eighty-eight churches to build, expending for the purpose $119,400. The value of the church property thereby secured is placed at $391,751, every dollar given thus promptly becoming $3 28. The Methodist Church has extended loans to three thousand three hundred and fifteen churches in all, the aggregate sum loaned amounting to $2 213,-021.38. To-day the church property resulting is valued at $12,000,000! No doubt this sixfold increase is partly due to appreciation of values, but at least the half of it is the instant and universal trebling of the original loan. And so all around the same tale is told. Give a dollar to Church Extension and three other dollars (or nearly so) at once jump out of somebody's pocket to keep your dollar company. Your dollar more than trebles itself within say a month from the time you give it. I have often heard of paying investments, but three hundred per cent. profit in one month beats the very best I ever heard of.

5. And that is by no means all or even the most that can be said. Your money goes into a perpetual fund. It is then given out as a loan and comes back every five years to be given out again and do the same work over and over forever. That, you see, distributes the three hundred per cent. profit through a period of five years, making it an average annual profit of sixty per cent. Three hundred per cent. in one month is great, but sixty per cent. to the end of time is greater still. In addition we must remember that this fund is guarded with the utmost care and caution. Every loan is secured by a first mortgage, the title to the ground on which the church stands is thoroughly investigated and the safety of the investment made a matter of primary consideration. It is indeed a proud record for our Extension Board to be able to say, "Not one dollar of our loans has ever been lost." We talk about some things being "as good as old wheat in the mill," or "as safe as government bonds," and this is one of them. And right here is where the beauty of the annuity feature comes in. If one wishes to leave a certain amount to Church Extension, but needs the income on the amount during his lifetime, he can pay the amount over right now and have a guaranty absolutely safe and sure of six per cent. per annum for the rest of his life; and he can thus have the happinees of seeing his money begin at once its long career of usefulness and blessing, making its sixty per cent. every year for the benefit of the struggling churches to which it is loaned, and enabling him thus far at least to administer his own estate, and to know to a dead moral certainty that over this portion of it there can be no litigation after he has passed away. In view of advantages so manifest I am not surprised that liberal sums are coming in constantly for the Annuity Fund, the year and a half just past having brought the sum of $17,000. But I shall be greatly surprised if the coming year does not prove for this feature of our extension work a time of special enlargement.

6. Nor must we forget the fact that we have but one Extension Board, while we have more than one hundred missionary societies, general, state, district and county, with scores of independent evangelists, all engaged heart and soul in making disciples and forming congregations needing houses of worship. It somewhat relieves the responsibility on this board that a few of these societies do a certain amount of work in the erection of churches, and also that about one half of theee young congregations are fortunate enough to be able to build without outside aid. And yet, when all is told, nearly one-half of them are compelled to ask help of our Extension Fund or go homeless through long and weary and hopeless years. If this stupendous fact by itself does not demonstrate the absolute necessity of this fund, it were hard to tell what a demonstration really is. Yea more: if it does not place upon our conscience an overwhelmieg sense of obligation to give that fund our loyal, liberal and unending support, it were hard to tell what an obligation really is. In one word, the burden of responsibility on that fund is so great thaI I cannot see why every church in the land which can and yet refuses to give it such support is not devoured by the undying worm and the unquenchable fire of self-condemnation.

7. In scores of instances this fund has saved our cause from downright destruction at strategic and important centers of influence. It has just finished saving our Central Church at Toledo, O., by prompt and vigorous measures, when there was no other possible hope for it, and thereby saving our people also from serious discredit. Only a few months ago it did the same thing for our church at Huntington, W. Va., when it was on the point of being sold under the auctioneer's hammer, and the agent of another religious body was on the ground ready to snap it up. All that shielded us from fatal and disgraceful loss in these two growing cities was our Extension Board and its brave and energetic secretary. It is impossible to exaggerate the value of these splendid achievements, not only to our cause in those important centers, but to our cause at large, in giving it prestige, in ministering to the self-respect of our people, in helping them to a better understanding of the power and usefulness of Church Extension and in vastly multiplying the number of its friends and supporters. And yet, these are only sample illustrations. Time would fail me to call the roll of all the churches that to-day would have no existence among us but for this fund. It is a moderate estimate to say they can be numbered by the score. That interesting page in a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST headed, "What the Beneficiaries say of Church Extension"—beneficiaries scattered over thirty-seven states and territories of our great land—tells the tale with unequaled power. They more than any others know its value, and they more strongly than any others have testified thereto.

SOME STRANGE THINGS ABOUT INSPIRATION.

JAMES H. BROOKS.

A brother from Illinois writes, saying: "I was looking over my CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST this morning, and saw your article on 'Degrees of Inspiration.' I thought I would write you and ask you this question: 'Do you believe that God inspires men today as he did in Bible times?' I would like to hear from you on that subject."

How God inspires a man—this, I should think, belongs to the unrevealed things. If so, we cannot become wise above what has been written. Perhaps this "how" may just as well be put down as "No. 1" in the list of strange things in inspiration. But some one will say: Did not men speak from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit? Yes; "and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding" (Job 32:8); cf. 1 Kings 3:5-15; 4:29). But "how?" See Job 35:11; Ps. 3:6. But how? Cf. Dan. 1:17; but still how?

Some one says, I think Jesus and James make it plain in Matt. 11:25 27; Jas. 1:5. But how? Paul and Jesus teach us that whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth (Heb. 12:3, etc.; Rev. 3:19). However, there are as many theories about his "general and special providences" as there are in consciousness, evolution, inspiration, or as there are "pseudo sciences."

We are told that "revelation is an extraordinary and supernatural discovery made to the mind of man, whether by dream, vision, ecstacy, or otherwise." The vision of Isaiah, the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem (Isa. 1:1); the words of Jeremiah, the son of Hilkiah, of the priests that were in Anathoth in the land of Benjamin, to whom the word of the Lord came, etc. (Jer. 1:1, 2); moreover, the Spirit lifted me up, and brought me into the east gate of the Lord's house (Ezek. 11:1), and the word of the Lord also came unto me, saying, Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house (12:1, 2). But how was all this done?

Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams wherewith his spirit was troubled, and his sleep brake from him, and the dream he could not recall. . . . . Then was the secret revealed to Daniel in a night vision. Daniel blessed the God of heaven, . . . for thou hast made known unto us the king's matter. . . . . This is the dream, and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king. . . . . The king answered unto Daniel, and said, Of a truth it is that your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of lords, or kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldst reveal this secret (Dan. 2:1 47). How was it all done?

It is said of John "the dipper," "And he shall go before his face in the spirit and power of Elijah, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to walk in the wisdom of the just." How did John receive the information imparted to us, say, John 1:31-34? Or Matthew that which he records in 1:18 25? We say the Spirit revealed it to him. Certainly, but how? Take the promise that Jesus made to the apostles (John 16:5-7; 14:15-17). Now read Acts 2:4, 33, 38, 39. Peter had been immersed in the Holy Spirit and was speaking as this Spirit gave him utterance (v. 4). In commenting on verse 39, Prof. J. W. McGarvey says: "We may remark that the universality of this promise, while very plain to us who read it in the light of subsequent revelation, was understood by Peter and the other apostles to include the Gentiles only as they might be circumcised. This is an instance among many in which inspired men, while speaking the words which the Spirit gave them, did not themselves adequately apprehend their import. (New Commentary on Acts.) Italics supplied in above. This fact stated in the italicized sentence may be put down as "No. 2" of the strange things in inspiration.

"Paul, alluding to his vision and revelation (2 Cor. 13:1-7), speaks of them in the third person out of modesty, and declares that he could not tell whether he were in the body or out of the body. Elsewhere he says that he had received his gospel by a particular revelation (Gal. 1:12); again, that he did not go to Jerusalem after his conversion by the mere motion of his own mind, but in consequence of a revelation (Gal. 2:2)." All strange. . . . . It is proper to add that only when acting as an apostle, or when preaching the gospel, or writing for Christ, can Paul or any one else properly be said to be under the influence of inspiration. When not acting as an apostle, or acting merely for himself, there is no evidence that Paul was any more effectually protected against error or blunders or sin than any other discreet and prudent Christian. He may have been, to be sure; but if so, the fact is not known. But whenever his acts concerned Christ, or he acted officially, then even a fault was not allowable. Confessedly, this places the matter of revelation on high ground, but not too high to be perfectly safe. (Lard's Commentary on Romans, p. 15).

The careful reader and studious will raise not a few questions on this excerpt. I mention only one, viz., How can one tell what parts of Paul's or any other's "sacred writings" are inspired and what not? Which is free from error and which may possibly contain error? Have we no safer authority for the inspiration of a Bible pamphlet or book or writer than that the author claims to be inspired, or that he claims that a part of his message comes from God? In his letters Paul claims that certain things he enjoins are by authority or commandment and certain other things by permission; he says sometimes, I give it as my opinion (1 Cor. 7.1-15). As to his own writings, do we have only a "thus saith" Paul as to whether certain sayings are by way of permission commandment (1 Cor. 7:6), and do we have only his "say so" as to whether he or the Lord gives the charge (v. 10)? Cf. Rev. 1:1,2,9, etc. "The Scriptures of the Old and New Testament have been accepted by the consensus of Christian judgment through centuries of investigation, trial and criticism as inspired by the Holy Spirit." Again, "It must be conceded that not only the reality, but the measure and manner of the Scriptures must be learned from their own testimony." Is this the nearest an "absolute rule" that man has for determining what is from God and what from the will of men? If so I move you that we put this down as the "No. 3" in the list of strange things in "revelation" (?). I have heard much and have thought on the subject of "interpolations." The genuineness of a passage then is to be determined by "a consensus of Christian judgment"—a "counting of noses," as it were! "Under the name of Holy Scripture, or the Word of God written, are now contained all the books of the Old and New Testament which are these." Then follows the list of "pamphlets" that are found in the "authorized version." "All which are given by inspiration of God to be the rule of faith and life." How do we know these are inspired of God, and only these? "The books commonly called apocrypha, not being of divine inspiration, are no part of the canon of Scripture," etc. How do we know they are not inspired? The consensus of Christian judgment in five centuries hence can hardly be what it was a century or two ago. From the "Biblical Criticism" department of the Christian Standard I clipped the following about four years ago: "Bro. J. Fraise Richard, Washington City, sends me three questions which he desires me to answer, not for his own benefit, but for that of many who frequently propound them, though they have been answered many times:

"Why does the Bible contain just the books now included and not also those usually called apocryphal? The answer as respects those called the Old Testament apocrypha is given by Josephus, who knew, and who speaks the mind of the Jews on the subject. After enumerating the books which they believe to be 'divine,' reaching in the dates of their composition from Moses to Artaxerxes, king of Persia, he says: 'It is true, our history has been written since Artaxerxes very particularly, but hath not been esteemed of like authority with the former of our fathers, bacause there hath not been an exact succession of prophets since that time.' This shows that the books received by the Jews were received because they were written by prophets, or inspired men [as the Jews supposed]; and the reason that others were not received as 'divine,' though accepted as reliable histories, was that they were not thus written [as the Jews at that time supposed and believed]. As regards the New Testament, the same fact determined the acceptance and rejection of books. If the book was known to have come from the pen of an apostle, or other inspired man, it was accepted spontaneously by the disciples. If there was doubt on this point, the book was held in doubt until this point was settled. It was precisely on this ground that some very early Christians doubted the propriety of accepting 2 Peter and some other epistles. This is all found to be true by reading the writings of Christian authors which have come down to us from the second and third centuries." Will the young reader please reread the above, and study it carefully? As to the Old Bible, the Jews accepted such "sacred writings" as he deemed came from the pen of "prophets, or inspired men." Now it so happens that "the Jew" thinks the New Testament books were written by uninspired men. On this ground he denies their authenticity. Once more. The same fact determined the acceptance and rejection of the books in the New Testament, etc. If a book was known to have come from the pen of an apostle, or other inspired man, it was accepted spontaneously, we are told, by the early disciples. How could the disciples know its "divine" authorship and not the Jew? How did it happen in some instances that some of the disciples held a book in doubt while others accepted it unhesitatingly? And now, even, how does it come that some call in question the claim that a certain writer produced a book while others "spontaneously" accept it as coming from a divine pen? Indeed, there is here room for "quotation marks" not a few. Perhaps we might all put down "No. 4" on the list of strange things, in this connection. "The authority of the Holy Scriptures [the same canon], for for which it ought to be believed are obeyed, dependeth not upon the testimony of any man or church, but wholly upon God (who is truth itself), the author thereof; and therefore it is to be received, becanse it is the Word of God." But in view of certain fads "herein before mentioned," who can tell what is the Word of God, what is and what is not inspired?

"No doubt there are portions of the Scriptures which contain more inspiration than others [why?], because more was needed to produce them [how do we know?]." We are told that the "Scriptures themselves will attend to this discrimination of," etc. Strange how the Scriptures can themselves tell which portion are more or less inspired! We see and hear strange things in this age!

One apostle finds hard things in the writings of another apostle (2 Pet. 3:14-16). Paul writes to Timothy, "And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness," etc. (1 Tim. 3:16—which see) To the church of God at Corinth he says, For now we see in a mirror darkly; I know in part now (1 Cor. 13:12). To the saints at Philippi he would say, Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect; but I press on (3:7-14). John, the beloved disciple, had many privileges, but he tells us it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. We know that, if he shall be manifested, we shall be like him; for we shall see him even as he is (2 John 3:1-3). How does he get such assurances of knowledge? How do we know he has it? How can we know? Do we have any evidence save his own? What besides his own statement do we have that Christ sent and signified his revelation by his angel unto his bond-servant, John (Rev. 1:1-3)? The last strange thing I mention, is about the writings on inspiration. They conflict. This might be expected. Some of the writers would seem to disfellowship others whose theories conflict with their own. This is not brotherly; its spirit is not fraternal; its influence is not kindly. Much of the said writings is of the destructive order—iconoclastic. Such is evermore easier than the constructive character. It is difficult to form and maintain a theory in theology. What seems plausible to-day is absurd to-morrow. "Theology" is said to be a human science, therefore comes within the realm of philosophy. "The nature and the degree of inspiration are questions" in the scope of human philosophy; and as long as we really think and act concerning them as "questions between Christians themselves," we, too, shall say, and mean what we say—In judgments merely inferential we reach conclusions as nearly unanimous as we can; and where we fail, exercise forbearance in the confidence that God will lead us into final agreement. In matters of opinion, that is, matters touching which the Bible is either silent or so obscure in its revelation as not to admit of definite conclusions, we allow the largest liberty, so long as none judge his brother, or insist on forcing his own opinion on others, or on making them an occasion of strife.—Isaac Errett. I have requoted this in conclusion, not for the benefit of the theologue, the fathers, or "the would-be" scientist (?), but for the young who desire to be made free, and who rejoice always in the true freedom of every man who trusts in Him who said, "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

Corinth, Miss. Oct. 12, 1899.

Our Budget.

—Pure religion assimilates readily with everything but moral evil—sin.

—Read R. U. Uptodate's satire on up-to-date people and religion in this paper.

—The will of God is being done on earth as it is in heaven. Wireless telegraphy has come to stay.

—Wheeling Through Europe will be resumed in our next issue. The copy came in to-day, but too late for this paper. Bro. Briney's reply to Bro. Jones will also appear next week.

—The Home Mission Board of the Maritime Provinces want to engage an evangelist for missionary work. Those making application for this field are requested to address W. A. Barnes, secretary, 228 St. James St., St. Johns, N. B.

—Gen. Lee's refusal to permit his name to be used as the president of a wealthy corporation in New York City, at a salary of $50,000 a year, shortly before his death, largely explains his greatness. Would that all men had such a conception of honor.

—Russia seems to have grown tired of being a back number in the list of civilized nations and is coming abreast of the times. An exchange says that she has decided to begin the new century, Jan. 1, 1901, by adopting the Gregorian calendar, and so keeping time with the rest of the world instead of being eleven days behind as at present.

—In mentioning the list of speakers at the conference of pastors and evangelists at the late convention, we inadvertently omitted the name of Geo. F. Hall, of Decatur, Ill., who made one of the addresses, a synopsis of which, together with a cut of the speaker, appeared in the Commercial Tribune. No doubt there were other speakers whose names we omitted to mention, for it was too large a convention to report fully.

—Just as we go to press a dispatch announces a serious reverse to the British arms at Ladysmith, where the left column of the British command, together with eight guns, fell into the hands of the Boers. Gen. White had advanced to meet the enemy which greatly outnumbered his forces, but has been driven back to Ladysmith and presumably is taking refuge behind the intrenchments awaiting reinforcements. Gen. White telegraphs with admirable frankness that he himself formed the plan in the working out of which the disaster occurred, and that he alone is responsible. The news excites great alarm in England for the safety of Gen. White and his forces until reinforcements can be hurried up.

—We are in receipt of a communication from T. Nelson Kincaid, of Hot Sprfngs, Ark., in which he speaks of the importance of permanently establishing our work in that place, which is visited by so many hundreds of people from various parts of the United States. It is his desire that they hold a tent meeting in the business part of the city in order to get our work and plea before the people. We hope it will be in the power of our general board to render some assistance in the good work. If any reader of this, however, should feel a special interest in the work in that place, let him communicate with Bro. Kincaid with a view to assisting in the meeting.

—Not a little is said from time to time in religious and secular papers about the utility of street cars for funeral purposes. It is suggested that suitable cars be built for such occasions and that this would eliminate a large part of the funeral expense in the present system. Except in such instances in which the house from which the funeral takes place and the church in which the services are frequently held are adjacent to a street railway line, especially the former, there will yet remain a great inconvenience if left only to this kind of service. Again, the cemeteries are usually so large that the conveyence of a casket and the body of mourners to the grave would often be a great inconvenience. These things, together with the commonness or, as some would say, "the cheapness of the thing," will, we predict, put the popularity if not the probability of this much-needed reform some distance in the future. Undertakers and liverymen would also discourage the method. And yet to many it would be a blessing.

—So far as we have yet seen the Observer, of this city, has made the most liberal and courteous editorial notice of the Jubilee Convention of any denominational exchange in our office. We have frequently had occasion to commend the spirit of fairness in the Observer and wish that the same might soon characterize all religious journals that claim to stand for the truth and the Master. There is nothing to be gained by keeping back the knowledge of progress in any part of the Master's kingdom —The very large and interesting convention, of the state of North Carolina, held in Wilson, October 24-27, was fully reported in the Daily News, of that city. There was a large attendance of delegates and also of preachers, among whom were some of our national missionary secretaries The address of B. A. Abbott and of A. McLean are mentioned as particularly strong. During the convention John K. Jinnett, of Beauford, and Chas. Massengill, of Dobbersville, were ordained to the ministry of the Word. Like all the conventions of the year, this one seems to have been full of hope for the future of the churches Everything seems to be getting into line for a great forward movement.

—"The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip" will hold its fourth annual convention in Baltimore, November 17-19. This is an organization for the benefit of young men in the various churches, and they have secured some prominent men to address the convention, among which we find the names of President McKinley, Judge Brewer, John Wanamaker, Josiah Strong, Joshua Levering and others. The topics cover all the various forms of church work for young men. They are divided into two general topics, the Church and Men, and the Kingdom and Men. Copies of the program, and also of Brotherhood literature, may be obtaided free and postpaid by writing to the general secretary, the Rev. C. E. Wyckoff, Irvington, New Jersey.

—The will of Cornelius Vanderbilt makes what seems like liberal bequests to several religious and philanthropic institutions, but compared to his vast estate they are small. The largest was a bequest of $200,000 for a church in St. Bartholomew's parish, New York City. The public will hardly approve of his treatment of his son Cornelius, who because of his marriage to a woman not approved of by the father as a suitable wife for his son, was, as millionaires would say, practically disinherited, receiving only about a million and a half. The brother to whom fell the bulk of the estate, about fifty millions, out of the generosity of his heart, however, gave him six millions, that he might be equal with all the heirs except himself. Great is the mystery of aristocracy! The ways of the rich, like the way of God, are past finding out!

—According to more recent developments the gift of $6,000,000 from Alfred to Cornelius Vanderbilt was not an outburst of brotherly love, but a concurrence to the demands of the attorneys of Cornelius, in order to a settlement of their father's estate according to his will; or before the will could be probated. It is said that the younger brother desired the will to stand as his father left it that the punishment of his elder brother intended by the father should be meted out. This prerogative was hardly conferred upon the younger brother in the transfer of paternal blessing from father to son and he should have hesitated to even indicate such a desire upon his part.

—If the young people of the church to day would spend half the energy in keeping away from the danger line in moral and spiritual affairs that they spend in seeing how near they can approach it without losing their Christian character their usefulness in the church would be greatly enhanced.

—One of the strong addresses of the Jubilee Convention was that of George Darsie on Church Extension. This address was sent to us for publication by the Church Extension secretary, G. W. Muckley, and a portion of it appears in this paper. It is headed "A Plea for the Homeless" and will be concluded in the next paper.

—The United States District Court in Iowa has recently decided that mortgages assigned without revenue stamp as required by the revenue act of Congress are invalid. Every assignment of the same mortgage must be restamped for each assignment as the first. This bit of legal information may be of importance to our readers. Editors, of course, seldom attain to the dignity of mortgagees.

—The great religious councils of the present age are very unlike those of the former centuries. Their chief end was to pass upon some dogma, doctrine, or article of faith, whereas to-day creed making is seldom mentioned. The councils to-day are larger, more deliberative, more practical, more concerned about what men are than what they believe. This was particularly noticeable in the Pan-Presbyterian Council in Washington, the Congregational Council in Boston, the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, and the Endeavor Convention in Detroit. The days of creed making and heresy-hunting seem to be about numbered.

—The Christian Missionary Magazine for October contains minutes of the 62nd annual missionary convention, of Missouri, held in Jefferson City, Oct. 2-5, and is of interest to every Disciple of Christ in the state. The next issue of this magazine is to contain a list of Missouri preachers for the use of Mr. C. M Platt in sending out clergy half-fare credentials for 1900. On this account the magazine will go to press December first. It is important that the list contain the name of every accredited preacher in the state. Any preacher's name not on this list will find trouble in getting his half-fare permit next year. See that your name is there and send along 25 cents for the magazine. Write to T. A Abbott, Cor. and R. R. Secretary, 1123 Oak Street, Kansas City, Missouri.

—At the General Conference of Universalists in Boston last week it was decided not to attempt to start new churches in the West, but to send out their ablest men to encourage those already in existence. The medicine to be administered to these dying churches by these more experienced doctors is to be larger injections of the missionary spirit. The Universalists are not the only churches which have suffered for the want of this spiritual tonic; there are others. But even these are learning from observation, and the time may come when they will also find it necessary to proclaim the entire counsel of God upon all things vital to a presen and a future salvation. Every religious body should have at least a reasonable apology for its existence.

—Preachers who are troubled for an audience generally attribute the fault to the worldliness of the people. If it be pointed out that certain preachers always have crowded houses they then attribute the phenomenon to the sensationalisms of the preacher. It seems never to occur to them that perhaps the fault may, in part at least, lie at their own door. That their sermons may be cold, dry, antiquated treatments of impracticable theories, or their style monotonous, their manners crude, their language and perhaps their delivery bad. Such preachers ought to remember that there is no law to compel the people to be bored Sunday after Sunday with such a gimlet.

—Under the auspicious management of the C. W. B. M. a school or chair for English Bible work is to be established in Calcutta, India, in the near future. The work will be placed in the hands of W. H Forrest, of Ann Arbor, Mich., and N. M. Ragland, of Fayetteville, Ark.

—Admiral Dewey is becoming the possessor of some valuable presents Even now he can boast of a $50,000 mansion, a $50,000 cup, a $5,000 watch, a $10,000 sword, a $50 cane, etc , etc. The circumstances under which he received these costly presents may perhaps make it difficult for him to appraciate the biblical saying: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." A surfeit of earthly gifts sometimes deadens the spiritual susceptibilities of the receiver, although in this case, as upon all former great occasions, Admiral Dewey may still prove to be an exception to the rule.

—An effort to have the missionary council of the Episcopal Church, in session in this city last week, pass a resolution in opposition to the seating of Congressman Roberts, elect from Utah, in the next Congress, failed. The resolution was introduced by Bishop Tuttle, but ruled out of order as irrelative matter by the chairman. This is the first instance that we know about wherein such a resolution before a Protestant religious body has failed since Roberts' election And for moral reasons the failure of this dignified body of bishops and clergymen to express themselves on this subject is to be regretted.

—Our readers will be glad to learn that the Disciples' Divinity House of the University of Chicago is receiving its share of generosity along with other educational enterprises. A note just received from the dean of the House informs us that by the will of Bro. John L. Davis, of Chicago, the Divinity House will receive one-half of the proceeds of his estate which, according to conservative estimates, will realize for the House not less than $50,000. The will provides that the money is to be used for a building to bear the donor's name. This fact puts the perpetuity of that enterprise beyond question and will enable it to accomplish much good for our cause in connection with that great university.

—The St. Louis Christian Endeavor Union has announced a meeting in the near future to discuss the needs of the union, what lines of work it may prosecute, etc. We are glad of this consciousness of the need for greater usefulness in the Master's service. A union of such resources ought to be a great factor for righteousness and doing aggressive work for the Master in a great city like this. Christian Endeavor and Bible-school unions should all be bound together and animated by higher motives than personal social enjoyments. Let these unions supplement the churches in aggressive city work on evangelical, missionary and reformatory lines. Or if the churches will not lead off, then let the unions take up the Christian's burden.

—The Evangelical Alliance of St. Louis at its sitting on last Monday adopted a resolution protesting against the seating of Congressman-elect Roberts, from Utah, in the next Congress. With such universal protestation coming up from every quarter of the land it seems hardly possible that polygamy will gain the recognition of a representative in our national Congress. But nothing should be taken for granted in the case. Without vigorous opposition this man will assuredly be seated in the next Congress. To prevent this the Reform League, Washington, D. C., is using its utmost endeavor Anti Mormon literature is being sent broadcast over the land. 50,000 clergymen are to be furnished with an entire set of Anti-Mormon tracts, and 700,000 leaflets to the Endeavor and other societies. Let others join in the work and this blot will not be put upon our national records.

—The Evangelical Alliance, of St. Louis, in its regular monthly meeting in the Odd-Fellows Hall on last Monday, was of unusual interest. Three great religious assemblies were reported. (1) That of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, recently held in Washington, D. C., was reported by Dr. B P. Fullerton; (2) that of the Congregational International Council, recently held in Boston, and (3) that of our own, the great Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, by the editor of this paper. Each speaker was given twenty minutes for his speech. Such a comparison of results in religious work was not only of deep interest, but greatly helps the cause of Christian unity in the land.

—One of the hardest lessons for a congregation to learn is that it should not consume all of its resources upon itself; that it owes a duty to others. The horse that can barely move himself about, however fine, the locomotive that can only propel itself along the rail, however wonderful, is of little value. Even a family that consumes its entire resources upon itself is unwise. A church, like any sensible man or institution, ought to raise its resources to the highest degree and keep its living expenses down to the lowest notch consistent with its situation, duties and external demands. It is easy to raise the salary of the preacher, the choir and other expenses to absorb all that the congregation gives or can give, however rapid its growth. A congregation as well as the individual Christian should have some experimental knowledge of the law of sacrifice.

—In the midst of all the compliments now being given to the Jubilee Convention it will do us no harm, perhaps, to read a criticism on certain features of it. We therefore print an article elsewhere by Mrs. A. A. Forrest, which strikes a little different note than that of laudation. The criticism, as it seems to us, lies against the convention, as such, and not against any particular persons. The delegates had it in their power at any time to shorten up discussions on some topics in order to give greater consideration to others. We are inclined to think, however, that it was the very bigness of the convention and the multiplicity of things that demanded attention that prevented certain subjects from receiving more prominence than they did, rather than any indifference to them. It was to have been expected that a good deal would be said about the financial success of the year's work, even though the money secured is not available for present use. The secretaries worked very hard for this increase and deserved thanks for their zeal and labor. If any mistake has been made in methods they will be quick to learn from these and profit by them in the future. The objection made by one or two speakers, that the success of the past year should prevent us from making any effort to perfect our organization, was not well taken, and the fact that the motion against which it was urged did prevail shows that the delegates generally did not sympathize with it.

—Bro. Garrison:—Allow me to express to you my appreciation of your article in the August number of the Coming Age, entitled "Why I Am a Disciple" I recently came across it and have read and reread it It is a fine, terse statement of great facts. It ought to be in leaflet form and scattered in our meeting. VERNON J. ROSE.

Newton, Kan.

We copy the foregoing in order to say that the publishers of the Coming Age have generously put the article referred to in a neat little tract and have sent the author, at this office, a few hundred copies for distribution. We will be pleased to mail a copy to any one who will apply for it, enclosing a stamp for postage.

—That all men do not look through the same glasses at given objects is well illustrated in the following extract from a communication from a well-known brother. In the nature of things our conventions must become more representative of the entire work of the church if we are to grow at all in grace and good works:

Truly, we are a great people. That is to say, we are growing. We actually allowed the benevolences of the church to have an entire afternoon session with the provision that those interested would go off to themselves and not disturb the missionary interests. Will not some one please tell us what is the mission of Christianity? If theory is not to be put into practice where is the profit of it to mankind? While the brethren split theological hairs and try to diminish our numbers by "excommunicating" each other, the sisters are practicing "religion pure and undefiled."

DEAR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—When in the evangelists' and pastors' convention in Odeon Hall at Cincinnati, some one took my Bible, that I prize very highly as a present from my class of young men when pastor in Valparaiso, Ind. The finder will be rewarded if he will send it to my home address, Neptune, Mercer county, O. J V UPDIKE.

Lowe, in the Christian Church, Sheffield; Bro. T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, officiating. Their home after Nov. 16th will be at 805 Cypress Ave., Kansas City.

The First Church, Paris, Tex., did a graceful thing in sending its pastor, James M. Crutcher, to the Jubilee Convention, defraying all his expenses. Such action makes a preacher feel all the more determined in his efforts to promote the interests of the church.

W. W. Wharton, late of Nora Springs, Ia., has removed to Jacksonville, Ill While on his way to the latter place he stopped over at Marble Rock, Ia., and delivered a series of lectures or studies on the "History of the Church," which are said to have been highly appreciated.

F. O. Fannon, who had been conducting a protracted meeting at the Second Christian Church, this city, had to close his work there on account of sickness. He was not able to preach in his own pulpit last Sunday night, and is still confined to his bed. We hope to report his recovery, however, by our next issue.

The assistant editor of this paper preached to the Compton Heights Christian Church, this city, twice on last Sunday. Brother Moore, the pastor, will return this week to his work in that part of the city. He has a splendid audience of young people in that church.

On Monday night of the present week, the assistant editor of this paper united in marriage Mr. Harry N. Friday and Miss Edith M. Fefee, both of this city. The writer has known Miss Fefee from her childhood, buried her with Christ in baptism, and now enjoys the additional pleasure of having united her in marriage to a young man of much excellence and promise.

The church is in fine condition and another man is needed to take up the work. We have a Boys' Brigade of 43 members with full equipments. "Quit You Like Men."

Uunder the above title the Wabash Daily Plaindealer has a long sketch of the lamented A. M. Atkinson, whose home was in that city. We make the following extracts from it:

He was an idealization of the phrase he so frequently employed, a "full-grown citizen," a representative of all that is best and purest in his business, church and home relations.

No one who ever lived in Wabash left a greater void in the community. A careful, shrewd business man, he had a real pleasure in the acquisition of wealth, but that end attained he obtained far more enjoyment in its dispersion among the many church societies, the church itself, and private charities.

Fifteen years ago he informed the writer of this, who shall ever be proud of the fact that Capt. Atkinson was one of his warmest personal friends, that he had no ambition whatever to build up a fortune. "I have protected my family with ample insurance," said he, "and am satisfied that so long as I live it shall be well provided for. What more could a man desire? We can't take our money with us when we go, and my doctrine is, when we have been blessed with prosperity we should do good with our means while we live. If more men who are in receipt of good incomes would follow this plan I am sure the world would be infinitely happier."

To the very last he adhered strictly to this article of faith and expired even as he was so adjuring his fellows in the business meeting at Cincinnati.

No man was ever more loyal in his personal friendships. Strong in his prejudices he scrupulously avoided controversies with individuals he did not like, but he was a thick-and-thin supporter of his friends, and even with the odds against him he generally silenced criticism by his vigorous defense of those who had won his esteem and confidence.

In these days of hypocrisy and deceit his was a refreshing candor. He spoke his mind freely on every question, public and private. There was no uncertainty as to his attitude on any issue and he was ever found battling indefatigably for what he believed to be right. There was no sophistry, no backing and filling, no trimming in his make-up, and though his impulsive frankness might at times irritate those who differed from him, all conceded that he was animated by no selfish motives in his positive declarations, and that having taken a position which his clear, quick judgment pronounced correct, only indisputable proof that he had erred would induce him to veer.

In his business affairs he was the soul of honor. Methodical in all he did he left no room for misunderstandings, the bane of commercial life. He exacted rigorous compliance with the terms of contracts from others and imposed the same upon himself. Once a verbal agreement was made with him, its observance might be counted upon with all certainty. There was no trace of the trickster in his broad nature.

He loved the church, and in his conversation rarely failed to touch upon matters affecting its policy, or refer to the men and women with whom he labored in the vineyard. It was largely through his efforts that the present Christian Church edifice was erected, and the congregation, when it was young and struggling in the early seventies, would doubtless have disintegrated but for his generous contributions. He gave liberally to the education institutions of the denomination, to mission he was a lavish contributor, and the trials an difficulties which beset the pastors, eking ou a bare subsistence and with no hopd of a livelihood in old age, appealed strongly to him an aroused his interest in the plan for the susten tation of these clergymen, which now exists a the Board of Ministerial Relief. He was th founder of this organization, endo sing it wit $5,000 and devoting many months of his tim in traveling all over the United States, urgin the communicants of the church to contribute The success of this board may be justl ascribed to Capt. Atkinson's earnest efforts and it was the pride of his life.

His home life was ideal. He adored hi wife, son and daughter, whose welfare an happiness were his constant solicitude Nothing in his power to grant was asked b them in vain, and the touching affection thu exhibited was fully reciprocated by the objects His was a household in which the perfection o felicity was approached as nearly as possible i this world. No jar nor discord was there. . .

It is estimated that all told he has practicall given away, in the course of his useful life, no less than $100,000, and the good that has ac crued from this beneficence surely constitute for him a treasure laid up in heaven which wil never fade away. . . .

The loss to Wabash as a community by hi death is irreparable. Not in generations wil his like be seen again in this community, an the afflicted family in their profound sorro have consolation in the knowledge that thei grief is shared by the people of the whole city

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Alonzo Melville Atkinson was born at Colum bus, Ind., February 8, 1833. When quit young he moved to Indianapolis with hi parents. While residing in the capital city h learned the bookbinder's trade, and worked a the business until he enlisted in the 16th regi ment Indiana volunteers, August 12, 1862 Eighteen days after his enlistment—Augus 30—his regiment participated in the battle o Richmond, Ky., and Captain Atkinson, ther a private soldier, was severely wounded. H was discharged shortly after the engagement and as soon as he recovered from the effects o his wound sufficiently to permit of his travel ing, O. P. Martin gave him a commissio with the rank of captain and put the Christia Sanitary Commission in his charge. H worked faithly in this capacity until the clos of the war. While engaged in the sanitary commission work he was connected with the Freedmen's Bureau, which was organized by the government for the purpose of looking after the thousands upon thousands of liberated slaves.

In this, as well as in all other subsequent ap pointments, he performed his work cheerfully conscientiously and to the entire satisfaction o all concerned.

Captain Atkinson was married twice. His first marriage occurred February 8, 1854, hi twenty-first birthday. Of this union one chil was born, who died in infancy. November 5, 1864, he married Mrs. Nancy E. Burns.

Three children were born to them—two o whom, Howard M. Atkinson and Mrs. Mayme Howe—together with the bereaved widow survives to mourn the loss of a kind-hearted noble Christian husband and father, to whom the entire populace of the city, who recognized in him a public benefactor and an honorable upright man, tender their sincere sympathies.

Jubilee City Letter.

AFTERMATH.

The thousands who came up to our spiritual feast have gone, carrying with them fragrant memories of the pilgrimage to the Queen City. Our staid old town was quite taken off its feet. But few expected it. The business element of the city smiled knowingly when the "enthusiasts" told them what was coming. But they have now just caught their breath after the surprise and are telling us many sweet things about ourselves.

THE STOKERS.

After all was over the dust-begrimed crew who "stoked" the ship Zion for that week's beautiful spiritual voyage emerged from their coal jackets. They all came forth smiling and happy in the knowledge of duty well done. The ship seemed just to sail herself, and that is a great compliment to her crew. They heard little of the programs, slept little, worked hard, ate hasty pudding, etc., ad infinitum, but are counting their privilege great. Among them all there was one man about whom little has been said and who would have even less said. That is the chairman of the entertainment committee, Bro. Justin N. Green. For months he has toiled ceaselessly to make homes ready for thousands of strangers and provide for the contingency of other thousands. This was a great task, but it was done with that quiet that marks successful industry and counts a work well done the greatest reward.

ISAAC SELBY.

The Jubilee people were permitted to hear this gifted man but once. He made a few minutes' talk at the closing consecration service. It is with deepest regrets that his host of admirers see him sail in a few days for his far-away Australian home. Few men are more gifted with logic and eloquence than Isaac Selby, and it is but just to say that his wife is a helpmeet fit for him. She lectured at the Richmond St. Church a few evenings ago to a large audience and quite captivated them. Bro. Selby gave his farewell lecture at that church last Sunday afternoon. There is room for him and need of him in this great country could he but stay until the churches learned of him. Every college in the land should hear his course of lectures on "From Atheism to Christianity." His spirit commends him to opponents and his reasoning wins them.

WM. DURBAN.

Among our distinguished brethren from afar none met a more cordial welcome than Wm. Durban. Thousands know him through his "English Topics" in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He lectured in the Norwood Church the evening before leaving for New York City and was greeted with a full house which listened in rapt attention for nearly two hours to his unconventional telling of things seen in his travels. It was a delight to listen to a traveler who knows so much of what he observed. In it all Bro. D. has seen "the other side of things." Being a man of versatile learning there clusters around every object of his observation the glamour of time with its tradition and romance. His audience were not subjected to the narrative of the conventional globe-trotter, but to the freshness of the man of literary tastes. He has traveled much, but not professionally. He has turned vacations into studies of peoples and lands, going to them from a busy life in pulpit and editorial sanctum. So the hearer gets the freshness, the "change of air" brought to the traveler in the journey. He has looked through the chronological telescope backward to the dim land of legend, then forward to the land of dreams. Human sympathy instead of iconoclasm touches all and the natural yet justifiable pride in Anglo-Saxon superiority constantly appears.

Bro. Durban counts Englishman and American one. He compliments the American free church and prophesies that the great battle in which he is battling will be over ere long and Englishmen too will not be compelled to pay where they do not wish to pray.

New York Letter.

Among the urgent appeals placed before the American Christian Missionary Society, at the Jubilee Convention, those coming from the East were not the least important. It has often been said that the Eastern section of the United States is not so promising (as a mission field) as other parts of our country. Perhaps a few facts and figures concerning New York State will not be amiss, as the situation in this state represents quite well the condition through the North Atlantic section. The population of New York State is 6,500,000, and for every two cities of 8,000 people in other parts of the country without a church of the Disciples of Christ there are three of the same size in New York destitute of the plea they make. In other words, three-fifths of all the cities of 8,000 in the United States destitute of our teaching are in the Empire State. Where should we go to evangelize the cities? Where should three fifths of city evangelization efforts be placed? But some one will arise and say, "New York is not doing anything herself." Listen: New York's 8,000 Disciples gave more than $10,000 for missions outside the state last year. Is not this comparatively liberal? If all the states had equaled this we would have offered a million and a quarter for Foreign Missions last year. New York is doing something for missions. Our state gave in 1893 $149 for American missions, and in 1899 we gave $3 016, an increase of 1,920 per cent. Is this growth excelled in any other state? Is it equaled? In the past six years the membership of our churches has more than doubled in New York State, and mostly by conversion, too, as our missionary offerings show. And more than 75 per cent. of this gain has been made in the city churches. In the year 1897, when we recorded the largest growth throughout the country—a net gain of 4 per cent.—in that same year the gain in New York was 17 per cent. Do not these figures show that the Empire State is a promising field for evangelistic efforts? What is true of New York is also true in large measure of all the North Atlatic states. A man of wide observation, familiar with the facts, a nonresident of our state, says: "One convert in New York State is worth more than fifteen in Missouri or Illinois, as a working factor in the evangelization of the world." Should we not hasten, then, to save New York in order that we may the more quickly reach and redeem others? If these statements are true it is urgent that our national mission boards should turn their attention immediately to the great and neglected East.

The Rev. James Chrystal is giving at the Amity Building, in New York, a course of special lectures on "Irenics and Christian Union." Among the interesting topics are these: Need of a Complete Restoration, The Decisions of the Six Great Ecumenical Councils, Their Decision an the Son's Two Natures, on the Divinity of the Holy Ghost, on Creature and Relative Worship, on The Eucharist, on the Mode or Modes of Baptism, on The Design of Baptism, on The Subjects of Baptism, and their Decision on Church Government. The object is to prepare the way more thoroughly for the reunion of Christian people. After a lecture of thirty minutes, each time, ten minutes will be allowed for the submission of written questions and twenty for the giving of answers to the same. Doubtless this method will make the lectures practically valuable to those who are interested in these topics.

Rev. Daniel C. Potter, a former pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle, of this city, has just secured a judgment for $8,000 against the New York City Baptist Missionary Society, in the Supreme Court, of Queens County. After long and bitter struggles Dr. Potter was ejected from the parsonage of the Tabernacle, about two years ago, and sued for $100,000 damages on the ground that he had a judgment against the property. The counsel for the missionary society will endeavor to have the decision set aside, so the end of this ugly trial is not yet. Christian people, especially ministers, missionary societies and churches make grave mistakes when they go to law with one an other if it can possibly be avoided

Cortlandt Myers, of the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, in a recent discourse on "Christ Behind the Counter," gave utterance to these words, over which we should seriously think:

The tendency to deception is increasing in the tremendous competition of business life. Clerks are staining themselves with the blackness of falsehood, and offering the excuse of compulsion. In order to sell the goods we must do it, and in order to keep the place we must sell the goods. The most frequent word is "bargain," and every time it is uttered it carries a lie upon its back

There are no "bargain counters;" they are blood counters. You cannot sell or buy something for nothing in this world It costs somewhere. There must be fraud or loss some place. If the lie is not in the store the loss is in the sewing woman's blood in the tenement. This false method of transacting business shatters the very foundation of society, destroys hope of real prosperity and closes the doors of heaven against the guilty. The owner cannot relegate the responsibility to the superintendent, and the department cannot cast it upon the clerks, and the clerk cannot talk compulsion.

No man is forced to do wrong. He can suffer first—yes, he can die first. Truth is elemental in character. A lie strikes at the very center of a man's life. It is not a small sin. There is no trifle in sin It is great beyond all boundary lines. A clerk may damn himself or herself for a yard of calico or muslin.

Among the impressive lessons enforced by the great Jubilee Convention the following may be mentioned as worthy of reflection:

(1) The numerical greatness of this people represented by the throngs assembled at Music Hall. It was a host, and yet, a very small fraction of the mighty army for which it stood. (2) The strong, pure character of the men assembled. A more splendid body of men would be difficult to find in all the world. (3) The unanimity of sentiment, the oneness of faith, unity of object and aim were among the impressive lessons indicated in all the deliberations. (4) The undying confidence of all in the simple gospel of Christ as the only effective remedy for all the sorrows and sufferings of the human race. (5) The inexpressible joy that characterizes the fellowship of redeemed men and women, giving themselves wholy for the redemption of the lost. (5) The perennial enthusiasm, wholesome and unselfish, that is engendered more and more by the work of Christian missions. And (6) the deep devotional life produced by the gospel, especially by the frequent observance of the Lord's Supper. This was made manifest by the very solemn and spiritually precious communion service on the Lord's day. The impressions of this convention will abide. S. T. WILLIS.

Kansas City Letter.

Well, the convention season is over at last, and it is now in order for the peripatetics to settle down at home for a while and look after their flocks. In truth, the burden that is put upon the busy pastor, in the matter of attending conventions, is heavier than even he realizes, except when he sits down and counts the cost in time and money. Many a pastor pays out more money in this way than the average rich member of his congregation pays for missions, and then gives an equal sum outright to the various missionary boards, local and general, at the regular annual offerings. He thus duplicates the giving of those who are many times as able as he is. It may be said that he ought to stay away from the conventions if he cannot afford to go. But he cannot stay away and fulfill his duty to his congregation and to the cause of Christ in general. There are many in his flock who would complain if they knew that their pastor ignored the meetings where other ministers were wont to be. Two things ought to be done by our churches: they ought to pay the fare of their pastors to these conventions, and their rich members ought to vastly increase the size of their offerings, so that the sacrificing pastor would not feel that he is bearing a double burden without producing any appreciable effect upon the wealthy of his people. These sentiments have forced themselves upon me with unusual emphasis, quite recently, from conversations I have had with some of our self-denying preachers who have been prevented from attending our missionary meetings by sheer poverty; and some of them are preaching for churches which are able to send them te these gatherings easily, if they would.

It has been my privilege to attend two great state conventions during the last few weeks, those of Kansas and Missouri. They were notable occasions. The enthusiasm was at high tide, the Spirit of the Lord was manifestly present to unify their counsels, and the business of the Master was despatched with promptness and skill. We are learning how to do things these days in missions as well as in merchandising.

But the Jubilee Convention! Were you there? If not, the opportunity of a lifetime was lost. Read what our papers have to say about it. Get all you can out of the delegates from your church upon their return. And then the half will not have been told. The Cincinnati brethren did themselves proud by their complete preparations for the great gathering and the admirable way in which the throngs were handled. Every person on the program, so far as known to me, was present for duty, and the speakers showed, for the most part, careful preparation. The average of the addresses was very high. There was little to criticise and very much to approve and applaud. If I might be allowed to offer one slight criticism it would be upon one or two of the speeches concerning the place of our own country in the world's civilization. It was two or three times emphasized that since there were only about one-third of our population communicants in the churches, the other two-thirds numbering fifty millions, were non-Christian and hostile to religion. This was repeated over and over by one good and intelligent brother who forgot for the moment, no doubt, that a very large proportion of these fifty millions of nonchurch members are little children, too young to assume church membership, but most of whom will do so at the proper age. Our problem is difficult enough, without magnifying it by thoughtless statements like this. But there was very little with which to find fault throughout the whole convention. Never has the tide of Christian patriotism risen so high as at Cincinnati. Such addresses as those of Brethren Cowden, Darst, Philputt and Wilson could not fail to inspire us with a stronger passion for the evangelization of the world. The addresses of Bros. Lord and Garrison on Jubilee day proved complementary each to the other, the former testing again the foundations on which our fathers and we have built, and the latter pleading for the largest Christian liberty in thought and speech, not inconsistent with the authority and teaching of Him who is both the chief corner stone of the foundation and the headstone of the completed temple. They were two splendid addresses and enthusiastically received by the vast audience. Bro. E. L. Powell's masterly address on "Missions the Crowning Glory of the Country" will be long remembered by those who heard it. It was a classic.

Not least among the enjoyable features of the convention was the music led by the splendid choir under the direction of Bro. A L. Fillmore, of Allegheny, Pa. We were often lifted near the throne of our Heavenly Father upon the tide of sacred song. And the solos of Mrs Princess Long, of California—what heart does not thrill at the memory? Such a voice consecrated to the worship of God has in it infinite possibilities of good.

Despite the rule of the convention, that delegates should bear their own expenses, many of the hospitable homes of Cincinnati and vicinity were filled with guests. It was the good fortune of the writer and his wife to enjoy the Christian hospitality of Dr. J. D. Collins and family, of Covington. We had formed their acquaintance at Macatawa Park, where the Doctor and his good wife have been spending their summers for several years. Their exceeding thoughtfulness for our comfort gave us a nobler conception of Christian hospitality.

These notes would be incomplete without mention of the special CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST train on whice we journeyed to the convention. The "Big Four" railway did everything possible for the comfort and pleasure of their passengers, and the trip was delightful. Good cars, smooth roadbeds, fast time, toothsome lunch and accommodating employees combined to make our day's trip one long to be remembered.

Good-bye Cincinnati and the great Jubilee Convention! All aboard for the convention of 1900 in Kansas City! W. F. RICHARDSON.

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 25, 1899.

A Long Acquaintance.

DEAR CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST:—Now that ye editor is home from the Jubilee Convention with his mind full of good things, with his heart full of compassion for all contributors, I feel that I may have a chance to tell the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST how much we think of it here in Carthage. First, in my own home it has been a constant visitor. When but a little girl I remember of my father, Isaac Bellew, taking The Echo. I would watch for the paper too, and as soon as father would lay it down, would pick it up. I remember those pages well to-day, and from that time until to-day I have been a reader of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST; very few numbers have I missed. And once I remember ye editor holding a meeting at Burnside, some five miles from our place, and father promised to take us to the meeting Saturday night. With what childish interest I watched for Bro. Garrison to come in at the the door.

I got acquainted with a great many brethren by reading their letters in the paper, and a delightful acquaintance it has proved to me. I have since met some of these brethren face to face, but I knew them first by their letters. About four years ago I was at church in a strange city and I noticed a lady shaking hands with a number of people, myself among the number. Taking my hand she said: "Younkin is my name." "Not Sister Younkin of the Orphans' Home!" I exclaimed. "Yes," she told me. She was a stranger in the house, too, not knowing any one in the house; but I had found a friend and I shall never forget the evening spent with Sister Younkin. Let me place one flower on Sister Younkin's grave.

But our home is changed now. Mother has passed over the river and our brother, too, leaving us lonely sometimes, but not discouraged. Father still takes the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and peruses every number with interest. We shall expect a treat in the next number. We that did not go to Cincinnati will be anxious to hear the reports of those that did go.

Our work here in Carthage moves right along. Our pastor, Bro. Scofield, is too well known for his good work to need any mention here. We have a fine Sunday-school and good attendance at prayer-meetings.

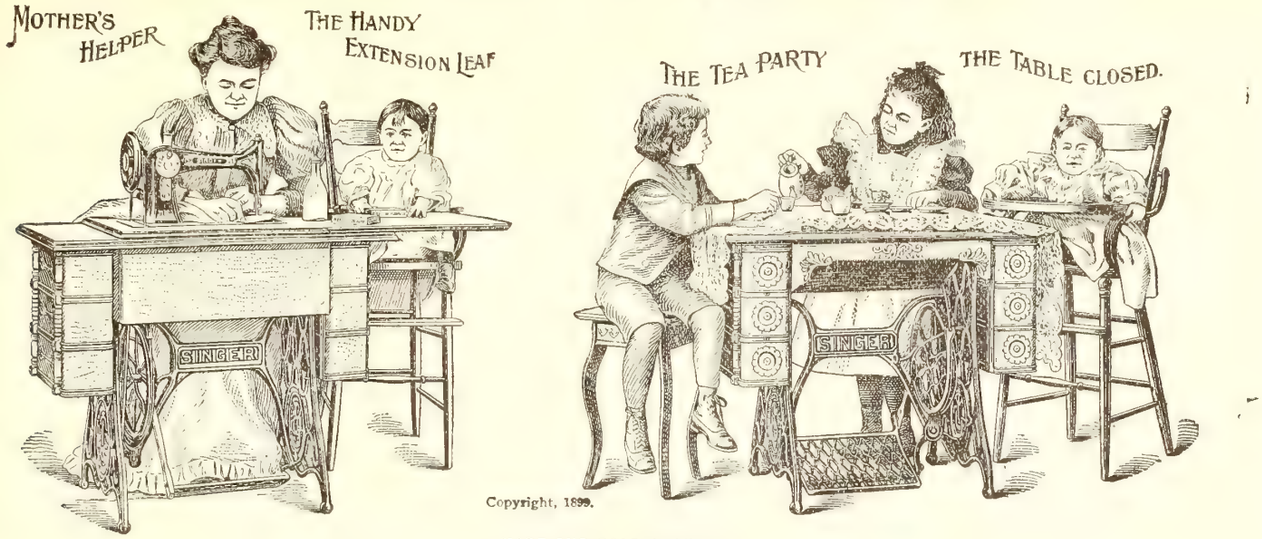
Pretty Hands,

Hands delicately moulded and daintily white are among the chief of woman's charms. When such hands are marred by eruptions, their very beauty draws attention to the repulsive disease. Humors which break out on the body begin in the blood. Soaps and salves may cover up a humor but they can't cure it. There is a cure for salt-rheum and other eruptive diseases, caused by a corrupt condition of the blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures these diseases perfectly and permanently It carries off the poisons which cause disease. It makes the blood pure and rich. It increases the quantity of the blood supply by increasing the action of the blood making glands. It makes the skin white and clear by making the blood pure.



"Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or other intoxicant.

MISS HATTIE L. JUDSON—NO. 2.

"Turn, then, my heart—thy home is here,
No other now remains for thee;
The smile of love and friendship's tear,
The tones that melted in thine ear,
The mutual thrill of sympathy,
The welcome of the household band,
Thou mayst not hear, nor feel, nor see."

Once settled in her Indian home Miss Judson entered on the life and the experiences of a missionary with ever-increasing devotion. She had no regrets over the sacrifice she had made in going to live in the shadows and the sorrows of a heathen land. She cast no wistful, melancholy look back to the home she had left behind. Since the hour of her conversion she had grown in favor with God and man. Like the beloved John, who leaned his head on the bosom of his Lord, she had passed into the inner circle of believers and her heart was full of peace. She had a closer walk with God and a sweeter fellowship with our Lord than do those who follow afar off, as did Peter on the sorrowful way to Golgotha. The many are called, but the few are chosen. Life on the mission field had for Miss Judson high aims and high issues. These she sought to impress on the hearts of others. Herein was the secret of her consecration. She had experienced in her own heart and life the joys and the elevating influences of our holy religion. She knew whom she believed. She also believed the gospel the best hope of the world. A woman who had gone to India as a missionary was asked why she had not gone before. "Because till now I had not experienced a religion that was worth passing on to others," was the reply. What the poets teach in song they first learned in pain.

Mr. G. L. Wharton says of Miss Judson as she appeared on her arrival in Hurda: "She was a happy, healthy, strong young lady. She applied herself diligently to the acquiring of the language, which she learned thoroughly. From the time of her arrival her good, congenial spirit and good sense, along with her happy, hopeful and cheerful disposition, made her presence helpful in all our work. She seemed good for many years' service in India." Mr. A. McLean says: "She was one of the most devoted and consecrated workers we have ever sent out. She did a fine work in India. She had good health, a cultivated mind and a cheerful spirit. She had tact, and got along smoothly with all her associates and with the natives. She worked in the schools and in the homes of the people. The girls and the women came to her frequently for medical treatment as well as for instruction. She took some lessons from Dr. Durand and was able to treat simple diseases effectively." Hurda, the city in which Miss Judson began her missionary career, is a place of sixteen thousand people. There was only one European family there, excepting those employed about the railways. She took the place in the school room made vacant by the death of Miss Sue Robinson, who went out to India from St. Louis. Miss Judson says of her work in this new field: "My school is increasing slowly. I have twenty-four scholars. They are rather wild and do not understand what they must and must not do in school hours. The Lord has graciously spared the lives of the four girls who have had to undergo the pain of smallpox. I have been especially kept while going among the children who came from disease-infected homes, and when visiting the girls, trying to alleviate their sufferings as much as possible. This afternoon two of our girls were baptized. Janki has been ready two months to confess her faith, but I thought she would better wait in order to be better informed. The girls are young in the faith, and will need a good deal of teaching and training. The inspector of police brought a girl of twelve or thirteen years to me. Her husband had turned her out of his house. She told me that he and his mother tied her hands together and hung her to the ceiling; then they beat her with a stick. The child is a Brahman of the third caste. When she first came she would not eat any food of ours, nor would she use the water we brought for our use. She has, however, overcome all her scruples, and took her food with my little Christian girls. She has begun to read and to sew. I am teaching her about Jesus her Savior. I am sure, if she stays with us, she will give herself to Christ. I am praying for leading into some plan by which I can be able to tell the poor, ignorant mothers about the love of Jesus. I also pray for the light to enter the darkened homes through the Bible verses and hymns which the children learn in school." This gifted young woman made her school both a means of teaching the children and reaching the parents. In this she fulfilled the beautiful promise in the Evangel of Isaiah, "A little child shall lead them. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. The eyes of the blind shall be opened. The ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. The lame man shall leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing. In the wilderness shall water break out and streams in the desert." The children have a special invitation to come to Christ, for they are made the standard of entrance into his kingdom. The promise is only to those who are converted and become as little children. To receive one such little child in Christ's name is to receive him. The children are the hope of the gospel in every land. This is especially true in India, the Gibraltar of missions. The schools and the orphanages in pagan lands are doing more for the final triumph of the gospel than any other agency. A Hindu said to a missionary: "I expect to live and die in the faith of Hindooism, but I also expect my grandchildren to become Christians. For this reason I wish you to send out more missionaries to tell us all about this religion." The good seed of the kingdom sown in the hearts of children by Miss Hattie L. Judson will continue to bear fruit long after the heathan temples of Hurda shall have fallen into ruins.

"Let us watch awhile the sowers,
Let us mark their tiny grain,
Scattered oft in doubt and trembling,
Sown in weakness and in pain.
Then let faith with radiant finger
Lift the veil from unseen things,
When the golden sheaves are binding,
And the harvest anthem rings."

Good Health vs. Bad Roads.

The new food law, which prohibits the sale of alum baking powders, bestows a double advantage upon the public. First, in protecting the people from a food which is dangerous to health; second, in aiding to build and pay for good roads throughout the country. The penalty provided by the law for selling an article of food containing alum is $100, each offence, which goes toward the making and maintenance of good roads in the country where the fine is collected.

For both these reasons all classes of the community will do what they can to aid in the enforcement of so good a law.

Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism.

D. H. Bays, 205, Champion St., Battle Creek, Mich :

Dear Sir:—Yours of August 9th has been duly received My statement, that you did not know what the Spaulding theory invoved, was made because your book indicates nothing to show that you ever heard of Spaulding having written three manuscripts; the first of which simply outlined the story and is the one now in Oberlin The second was prepared for the printer; the plot of the story changed as to place from which Indians came here, and the names changed to suit the change in the plot. This is the one which furnishes the basis for the Book of Mormon.

The statement that you had made no investigation worth mentioning was based upon your suggestion that the total want of similarity in names between Spaulding's Manuscript and the Book of Mormon was evidence that they had no connection. If you had made any investigation worth mentioning you would have found the absolute identity of the very unusual names in the Book of Mormon with the second Spaulding Manuscript was originally one of the principal evidences of the connection between the two. If you had known these facts, and those which necessarily go with them in the study of the question, the Oberlin Manuscript, instead of convincing you that there was no connection betwen the two, would have furnished many confirmations of the theory that the Spaulding Manuscript was the basis of the Book of Mormon.

Mrs. McKinstry made no investigation worthy of mention, not even as much original work as you did. If any evidence was needed as to Mr. Davidson's superficiality it would be shown by the fact that she knew of the existence of the Oberlin Manuscript, even at the time she wrote, and she was not sufficiently earnest in her search for truth to secure its possession as she probably might have done. If you had made very much original investigation in the matter you might, in the publications of the Utah Church, have discovered some few circumstances which would have supplied the only missing links in the evidence of the connection between the Spaulding Manuscript and the Book of Mormon.

I cannot establish these facts except by hearsay evidence, which Greenleaf would bar, and yet I do not know of any historical fact not now within the knowledge of living witnesses that can be established by any but hearsay evidence. Barring the question of the hearsay character of the evidence, I believe that a case can be made out much stronger than the circumstantial evidence upon which many a man has been hung.

Permit me also to add that your little sarcasms about my "rich store of information" are wasted on me I happen to possess a library covering considerably over one thousand books and pamphlets on the subject of Mormonism, and I chance to know something of the contents of those books. Similar statements to the one which you make concerning the Spaulding Manuscript have been quite often repeated, and are usually made by persons who have not even read Mrs. Davidson's and Mrs McKinstry's evidence.

If I have leisure I may in the near future write a short essay on the origin of the Book of Mormon, and if I do I shall take pleasure in sending you a copy. Of course, it would be hard in a letter of ordinary length to cite the evidence from which my impressions are made, and would involve the spending of more time than it is possible for me now to do.

I have before now known men to preach for a lifetime without having the least bit of critical knowledge of their religion, and while I am satisfied from your book that you are better informed than many who attempt to write on the subject of Mormonism, I still believe that there is evidence upon several questions which you have overlooked and which has made you reach wrong conclusions. While on the whole I think your book will do good, I do believe it might have been more free from error.

Yours very truly,

A. T. Schroeder.

REPLY.

A. T. Schrodder, Esq , Salt lake City, Utah:

Dear Sir:—Replying to your favor of the 14th ult., permit me to say that while I thank you for your promise of future aid and suggestion, yet candor compells me to say that I not in the least disappointed—in fact, your letter contains only about what I had reason to expect. I very much regret that, from "a library covering considerably over one thousand books and pamphlets on the subject of Mormonism," you are unable to furnish me with a single fact in support of the old, exploded "Spaulding Manuscript theory" of the orgin of the Book of Mormon.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY
Chicago St.Louis NewYork Boston

In justification of your statement, that the writer of "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism" "did not know what the Spaulding theory involved," you remark that the statement "was made because your book indicates nothing to show that you ever heard of Spaulding having written three manuscripts." That there is nothing in my book to indicate that I had ever heard that Spaulding had "written three manuscripts" is certainly true, and for the obvious reason that in that work I deal with facts rather than fancies and unsupported assertion

I was, at the time my book was written, fully aware that such assertions had repeatedly been made, but as I have never been able to obtain the testimony of a single witness in support of the claim, I have unhesitatingly dismissed it as an idle speculation.

You assure me that the first of these manuscripts "simply outlined the story and is the one now in Oberlin." The second, you assert with equal gravity, "was prepared for the printer," while in the third "the plot of the story changed as to place from which Indians came here and the names changed to suit the change in the plot;" and this, you assure me, "is the one which furnishes the basis for the Book of Mormon."

This is a very pretty "theory," and somewhat ingenious, but where is the evidence to support it? When and where were these "three manuscripts" written? By whom were they preserved after Mr. Spaulding's death? And how did they all so mysteriously disappear from view? Indeed, it is but legitimate and fair to all parties concerned to ask why at least one of these alleged manuscripts was not produced long ago, and thus forever silence the defiant voice of the Mormon Church which, for the last fifty years, has been clamorous in its demand for proof upon this point.

I confess myself not a little surprised that an attorney, trained in a school of justice to weigh and determine the value and admissibility of evidence, should ask a candid public to decide so grave a matter upon the bare assertion of an interested party, without the shadow of evidence to support it.

If "three manuscripts" ever existed, why not produce the evidence to prove it? Why not induce that library of "over one thousand books and pamphlets" to yield up some of its hidden treasures of knowledge upon this point, and settle this mooted question once for all? Mormonism for more than half a century has been demanding the production of the "Manuscript Found" that it might be compared with the Book of Mormon. Since the discovery of that now historic document, and the further unquestionable fact that it bears not the slightest resemblance to the Book of Mormon, the wonderful discovery has been made that Solomon Spaulding wrote "three manuscripts!" While you affirm very dogmatically, as others have done before you, that Spaulding wrote three manuscripts, yet, like your predecessors, you offer not a single fact in support of this claim. In the face of these significant facts, you with characteristic pertinacity assert:

"If you had made any investigation worth mentioning, you would have found that the absolute identity of the very unusual names in the Book of Mormon with the second Spaulding Manuscript was originally one of the principal evidences of the connection between the two."

Here we have the assumption that a "second Spaulding Manuscript" actually existed, and from this assumed premise you jump to the conclusion that the names were "absolutely identical" with those in the Book of Mormon. My objections to this statement are—

1. The existence of a second manuscript is asssumed, not proved

2. If such manuscript really existed, no proof is offered to show the "absolute identity" of the names with those in the Book of Mormon.

Hence, until you establish the alleged fact that such "second Spaulding Manuscript" had a bona fide existence, and that the "very unusual names" found in the Book of Mormon are "absolutely identical" with those found in the so-called "second Spaulding Manuscript," a fair-minded, just public will reject this new-fangled "Spaulding Manuscript theory" as the merest vagary of a prejudiced mind, and wholly without the slightest foundation in fact. I do not say that the "three manuscripts" had no actual existence; but I do say that if such manuscripts ever had anything more than an imaginary existence somebody knows it; and if somebody knows it, why not have that somebody step upon the witness stand and boldly testy to the fact? But why pursue this question further, since you admit that it is only a "theory"—a theory, too, supported by such a class of evidence which, as a lawyer, you well know would be rejected by any court in this broad land of ours. Acknowledging the fact you say:

"I cannot establish these facts except by hearsay evidence, which Greenleaf would bar."

In concluding this paragraph you remark that—

"Barring the question of the hearsay character of the evidence, I believe a case can be made out much stronger that the circumstantial evidence upon which many a man has been hung." (Italics mine.)

This may be true, but it must be borne in mind that many an innocent man has been hung upon purely "circumstantial evidence," and it is a principle of law from which there is no deviation that a guilty man may better escape the punishment due to his crimes than that an innocent man should suffer the extreme penalty of the law. Hence, juries are always instructed to give the prisoner the benefit of a doubt. But, of course, I need not remind an experienced attorney that there is a vast difference between "hearsay evidence" and "circumstantial evidence." The former Greenleaf peremptorily excludes, while the latter is declared to be the "best evidence" of which any case is susceptible, for the assigned reason that circumstances cannot lie, provided that all the circumstances are considered.

Concluding your letter you remark:

"I have before now known men to preach for a lifetime without having the least bit of critical knowledge of their religion, and while I am satisfied from your book that you are better informed than many who write upon Mormonism, I still believe that there is evidence upon several questions which you have overlooked and which has made you reach wrong conclusions."

If, as you seem to think, I have, through lack of information, "reached wrong conclusions," permit me to say that I am always open to conviction and stand ready to correct any and all errors of the past. And if, as you assert, "there is evidence upon several questions which I have overlooked, and which has made me reach "wrong conclusions," I shall esteem it a favor alike to myself and the public if you will furnish me the evidence which has led you to this conclusion, and I shall take great pleasure, I assure you, in making such corrections and emendations as shall be justified by the facts.

As a lover of truth, purity, good government, liberty and law, I have the right to expect your co-operation in a matter frought with so much importance to all concerned. It becomes a duty alike to yourself, to posterity, and to society that you speak out and give us such facts as may be in your possession relative to the question now under consideration.

That I stand with the class of preachers you name, who have "preached for a lifetime" without a "critical knowledge" of what they preach, may, I confess, be true; but of this others must judge. However this may be, I feel quite sure, if I know myself, that I desire all the light possible upon any question that pertains to Mormonism, and shall only be too glad to avail myself of any facts and figures which you may be pleased to offer.

"While on the whole I think your book will do good, I do believe it might have been more free from error."

In this statement I fully concur. Thanking you for the modest compliment you pay me, permit me to say, in conclusion, that I shall hail with joy any additional light my friends may afford me—yourself with others—and shall studiously endeavor to make the second edition of my book all its friends could wish.

A copy of your proposed "Essay on the Origin of the Book of Mormon" will be very thankfully received.

Very truly yours, D. H. BAYS.

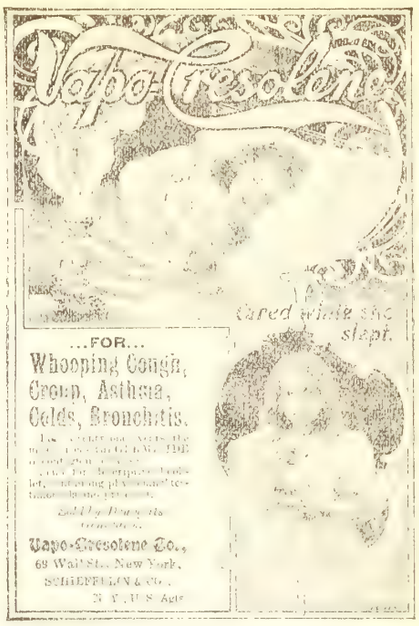
Up-to-Date Religion in an Up-to-Date Town.

I do wonder if there will be any daily papers in heaven to read when we get there! If there are not I fancy it will be a dull place for many of our church members, especially on Sunday. Shut up all day to religious reading, and especially to reading the Bible, I imagine will be pretty dry business for some of us.

I do not know that I want to go to heaven unless I can have a good large supply of daily papers to draw nourishment from and while away the time on Sunday. About all the religion I can stand is one sermon per week, and that must not be more than thirty minutes long at the outside. Life is too short to allow one who wants to make the most possible out of it to devote any more precious time to religion than that in this day and age, when daily papers are so numerous.



I like short sermons so that I can get out early and have plenty of time to read the Sunday Times. And I very well know that this is the feeling of many of the members of our church. They are so constructed that they cannot stand too much religion. And any way they want to keep up with the times. That is me exactly, you know that religion in this age of progress, to many of us, is a very dry affair, and we want to get along with just as little of it as will possibly do. In this busy age of daily papers, if we keep up with the times we cannot afford to waste too much precious time on religion. That is the reason why I have quit taking our own church papers. I could neither afford the time to read it nor the money to buy it. I am taking six daily papers and cannot afford to spend money for any more reading-matter. When I attend one meeting on Sunday and then read a half dozen daily papers, I have little or no time left to read the Bible or any other religious literature, and to tell the truth, very little inclination, even if I had the time.

Last Sunday morning when I was on my way to church I saw one of our deacons making for home as fast as he could. He had been to the news stand and had procured a fine, large, fat edition of the Sunday Times and was going home to feed his famishing soul. The deacon is one of our wide-awake business men, who believes in keeping up with the times. He is a devoted husband and father and staid at home all that day in the bosom of his family, feasting on the rich bill of fare served up for all such spiritually minded Christians in the Sunday Times. One of the elders took the deacon's place at the Lord's Supper, and after some search a teacher was found for his class in the Sunday-school, and in this way we managed to pull through and thus give the deacon a chance to cultivate his mind and post himself in what pertaineth unto this world.

A great many more of the members of our church had to stay at home that day. Out of a membership of two hundred we had an audience of forty-nine, counting two baby's and six little girls. Many of the members had got behind with their reading, owing to the fact that it had been fair week, and they had to attend the horse races and to stay at home and make an effort to catch up with their reading. The people of our church are an intellectual people, peculiarly so, and cannot stand to have anything come between them and the reading of the daily papers—not even their religion. They will keep themselves posted in what is going on in this progressive age, even if they have to stay at home on Sunday to do it. And this propensity to read is not confined to the members of our church. It is a peculiarity of the people of our town, and affects the members of all the other churches as well as ours. Hence, we have one of the most up-to-date towns in the whole Northwest. Strangers who come to our town notice this peculiarity right away. Especially is this true of strange preachers, who chance to fill our pulpits. They see at a glance by the smallness of the audiences that greet them on Sunday that our people must be great readers, and on this account abreast of the times.

One evidence of the up-to-dateness of our town is the fact that we have no less than twenty-three lodges in it and all well patronized. Nearly all church members belong to some lodge, and many of them to five or six, and are scarcely ever absent from a lodge meeting. I know some church members who attend as high as three lodge meetings in one night. Our people are very liberal too in the support of their lodges. This up-to-dateness of our town all comes from the fact that the people read (and especially on Sunday), and in this way keep themselves posted in what is going on in this progressive age.

Reflections on the Treasurer's Report of the A. C. M. S.

A striking feature of the Jubilee National Convention was the continuous enthusiasm of a great success. The effect of the collections made by the American Christian Missionary Society was tremendous, and before the convention closed pretty much everything was judged in the light of collections. Perhaps because a year previous it had seemed so improbable, the $100,000 was declared a praiseworthy success. The tendency seemed to those interested more in the other side of the service which a National Convention may furnish to its people to be to smother the attempt to deal with unsettled questions in the enthusiasm of self-satisfaction with present attainments. In fact, not much that didn't lead sooner or later to large collections was worth while to be said. So far as this enthusiasm furnished courage to go on and was based on a clear conception of the real ground for enthusiasm it was wholesome, but so far as it was an uncritical flag-waving demonstration it was not. To prove that large receipts taken by themselves may be misrepresenting, it is interesting, by way of example, to analyze the report of the treasurer of the A. C M. S.

In the first place, the report is too abstract and general to give all the information looked for. The report ought to be more detailed. The Church Extension report covers nearly three times as much space and is complete enough to be intelligible to the uninitiated. But as the report stands, the salaries to missionaries, which may be taken as representing the real missionary work of the board, together with the B. N. E. E. work and the German mission work, amounts to $38,125.75. The special funds cannot be used here because it is impossible from the report to find how much may really be considered as belonging to the board's receipts, since the funds sent from these districts are partially returned to them. For instance, the Tonawanda Church sent $1,000 to the board, and $900 was returned at once to it. But, liberally allowing for this, the working capital of the board for this year is not over $40,000. The expenses, including secretaries' salaries and administrative expenses, are $16,017.56. Some of the missionaries spent part of their time, however, in the field in behalf of the board, so that part of their salaries should appear in the last sum rather than the first, making the real amount available for general missionary purposes even less than $40,000. In other words, $40,000 is practically all the money the A. C. M. S. and B. N. E. E. had to use during the current year. Only a few of the persons at the National Convention felt $40,000 as available when $100,000 was being read. Of course, more than $40,000 will sometime be available, but most persons, whether they ought to or not, got the impression that in some way $100,000 was now in available form, and therefore that the society was in a position to do more than twice as much work as in the previovs year. Further, the amount of the special funds was all credited to the general receipts, while really, when funds are at once returned, it meant nothing at all for the general missionary work. It doesn't detract from the great value of the annuity plan that it can't furnish receipts now, or that it means less money to the treasury because of the interest which has to be paid during the lifetime of the donor. In the same way it may easily be wise to expend money somewhat out of proportion to the receipts because of the education of the people gained thereby, which in the future will mean larger collections, provided this expense is incurred in creating the real, fundamental interest and intelligence desired, and not an inflated enthusiasm which will react in the future to the injury of the cause. It is not a bad thing within certain limits to arouse interest in a certain locality by refunding part or all of the collections taken there to the local work, but it hardly ought to reach the point where the National Society goes to the trouble of receiving and sending back practically the identical sum of money, since we have local boards which can dispense such funds. At least it ought to count for little in a statement of the money coming into a national society for national work.

Nothing is to be said against these facts provided they are given as wide a circulation as the announcement of the large receipts. In other words, it ought in the National Convention to have been made as clear to the people that the real working capital of the A. C. M. S. was about $40,000 as that the collection transcended the $100,000 mark set at the previous convention. The treasurer's report should have been found in every seat where the report of the secretaries was found. And this not to detract from tho real glory of the report, but to have the situation thoroughly understood. And this in the long run will place the board and the secretaries in the best light. Because of the large receipts the outlying districts in need of funds came jubilantly to the secretary for more help. When refused for lack of funds it was naturally disappointing to the good effect of the announcement before the convention. And if the work which can be done this year doesn't increase in proportion to the increase in the announced receipts there will be another disappointment, and all will have to be explained to the next convention. So that really, even to those who are most anxious for success in numbers and money alone, the effect produced by the announcement of the large receipts may not be lasting. But the particularly bad effect was the prestige it was used give to the board as a thing by itself apart from and in a sense above the people which really constitute it. This was noticeable in the business session, when the measure for unification of missionary forces, a measure which a representative Disciple says is sympathized with by all pastors of anything like large churches, was effectively argued against because it seemed to reflect on secretaries and societies which had succeeded in raising so much money. It was thought by many under the circumstances to be discourteous to even discuss an important question from any but the secretaries' and society's point of view. Other measures which many Disciples at least think very important were much more easily laid on the table, so far as they did not conform to the wish of the present administration, because that administration could show large receipts. Whenever a delegate argued against a measure, not on the merits of the question, but on these personal grounds, it showed the bad effect of creating the impression of the $100,000 collection. In the midst of our flag-waving and cheers and general patting on the back it ought to be remembered that our most serious problems are now upon us. These issues ought to have received serious and definite attention at this past convention. But instead one whole business session and half of another was devoted to the question of credentials and national political policies, and the rest of the second session to disposing of some of the most important issues without anything like sufficient discussion. There seemed to be no expression of a general desire to deal with our difficulties oursolves or even to think we had any. It was sufficient to determine these by the desire of our administration, which had succeeded in raising so much money, while because of the very nature of human limitation it is not going to think of all the advances which are necessary for our best growth. The work of education could have been made more popular under other circumstances. The unification movement would have been an important issue otherwise. These issues, which are regarded as highly important for and germane to our national gatherings by many of our most prominent men are constantly shoved aside by the machinery of the conventions and their place taken by expressions of enthusiasm over more or less inflated reports of our successes. Because of personal prestige secured by the great financial successes, this was more easily done than otherwise would have been likely. This is due to the ease with which people are lost in any kind of success. In the midst of our successes—and a great deal of credit belongs to the society and secretaries—we should have been in a position to count the costs and survey new fields of usefulness. It ought not make a particle of difference with the free discussion of disputed questions. There was certainly no success which warranted the attitude of the last convention toward these other interests, nor to warrant our conventions in the future in wholly following the paths already laid out.

Some Things.

About the Jubilee. What will we be at the Centennial?

Not a legislative act passed. Did not meet for that purpose. Had no right to. Did not need any new law. The law of the Lord is perfect.

How many sermons did our people preach in and near Cincinnati on that Lord's day? It should be made a matter of record and history.

President Loos don't know any reverends among us. May his tribe increase.

It was a very clean convention. I saw only two men smoking, and one of them was a very old man, a kind of a back number, and the other had no badge on. I think he was not of us. It must be confessed, though, that now and then there was a breath worse than—well, I have no comparison.

What a host of mighty men we have!

The addresses were of a very high order. So were the ladies' hats, but almost all of the ladies took off their hats.

Cincinnati did herself proud in entertaining.

The committee on resolutions gave us a very good one on the drink evil and army canteen. A few years from now we will have a better. Large bodies move slowly.

How the heart leaped for joy when we heard the reports! What wonderful achievements! Forward is the word. There must be no backward steps.

Carlinville Convenion.

The churches of Macoupin and Montgomery Counties, Illinois, will meet in convention in Carlinville, November 8, 9. A good program has been prepared for this convention, but a large attendance from the churches is essential to its success. We are informed of this convention by Paul H. Castle, and shall hope to hear of good results.

Deserted His Family.

DEAR BRETHREN:—It has become our painful duty to inform the brotherhood of the Church of Christ that our former pastor, J. H. Moore, has deserted his family without cause, leaving his wife and four little children in destitute circumstances, that his conduct previous to leaving was unbecoming a Christian and a reproach upon the church. Therefore we warn any church from employing him until he changes his life and rights the wrongs he has done his family and the church. Any information as to his wereabouts will be gladly received by the undersigned. By order of the official board of the Church of Christ.

State Mission Notes.

Word comes from F. M. Hooten that they are at work on their state mission collection, have a goodly sum in hand and will raise more than Bolivar ever did before for this great work. This is the thing of which Bro. Hooten is guilty wherever he goes.

So, also, the message comes from J. B. Marley, who has just taken charge of the work at Poplar Bluffs, that they will send in their full apportionment next month; this, too, in spite of the fact that they are spending a great sum of money in repairing and renovating their house. But, you see, Bro. Marley has been at work in the destitute fields, and he knows the need of prompt action in the premises.

Then L. J. Marshall, of Palmyra, says: "You may look for a big collection for state missions from Palmyra next month." You can just set it down that when he says anything he means every word of it.

But these are not alone. W. F. Turner, of Joplin, says: "We will be in line for this next year for state missions." C. C. Hill, of California, says we can depend on him and his church, and Bro. Melvin Putnam, of Sedalia, sends word that they will be in line. These are a few that we have heard from, but they indicate the trend.

Immediate help, however, is needed, that the work may not lag at all. Next month is STATE MISSION MONTH, and we are looking forward to its collection with a great deal of expectancy. Why not lift the state mission collection then and get it out of the way for the rest of the year? This will place the money in the hands of the board and they can plan accordingly. This will be far better than to have us "guessing" how much you will send. A personal letter has been sent to every church in the state, telling the amount apportioned to them for the coming year's work, and asking for immediate action on the same. It was resolved at the state convention to raise $10,000 for this work this year. This apportionment has been made on that basis. If it is not as much as you can pay, will you not tell us? If it is more than you ought to pay, won't you please write and tell us how much you can pay? We must persuade each church to contribute something for this work this year.

Our Baptist brethren persuaded 300 more churches to contribute to state missions this year than last. Will we admit that they love Missouri or the dear Lord better than we do? Will we allow them to do more to bring Missouri to Christ than we will? Will we allow them to so work in this state that they will again the position of leadership which they lost to us? What does the brotherhood of Missouri say? Let your answer come in shape of acceptances of the churches' apportionment for the year. Give us the means, and the work shall be done in a glorious way.

Yours in His name, T. A. ABBOTT.

FIFTH DISTRICT NOTES.

The time is at hand for the collection for state and district work. The time is at hand to exemplify the teaching of the Master, "Bear ye one another's burdens." Many weak churches in this district are in great need of help. Many all over the state are in a perishing condition. Brethren, are we willing to sacrifice just a little now in order to answer these calls of God's children?

The success of our collection for state work will depend mostly upon the character of the leadership of our preachers. The brethren can be depended upon to give something if the preachers will present the facts and ask for a response.

The district board has its hands tied for the present. We cannot move out and plan for greater things until we know how much the brethren want this done. We shall judge by their collections how solicitous they are in the matter and will act accordingly.

We want to put an evangelist in the field, assist in locating preachers with needy churches and assist a few churches to hire evangelists for special evangelistic efforts.

Brethren, tell us during November that we can go ahead and plan for a great work during the coming year.

We feel by putting special emphasis on county co-operation that we can use the district money to great advantage.

Do not call upon the state or district for aid until your county co-operation has expended every means to reach the needy places within its jurisdiction.

If possible, take up your collection Nov. 5, and if it is not possible then, do it just as soon as possible thereafter. The district board is anxious to know at once what it can do.

Big Bills—But No Benefit. Mrs. Annie Sukovale, of Sidney, Neb., writes an interesting letter in regard to her mother. She says: "Mother had been sick for two years with a serious stomach trouble. She was unable to eat hardly anything, she had a pain in her left side and in her breast. Two doctors treated her without result. One of them called the sickness neuralgia of the heart. They were unable to do anything for her, but they did not forget to leave behind big bills for the services. About that time we heard about Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer and decided to use it. When she had taken the first dose, she said, 'I can feel that medicine through my whole body.' The Blood Vitalizer cured her completely. We leave the doctors alone and use the Blood Vitalizer." SOUTH DAKOTA.

Castalia, Oct. 25.—Have been here in a meeting three weeks. Plea is new and strange. Only eight decent nights. Three confessions. Good interest. Expect to stay another week. We don't predict, we only work, hope and trust.—R. D. McCance.

CALIFORIA.

Riverside, Oct 23.—We began work with this congregation June 12th. Eleven have been added by letter and statement to date. Raised balance of our apportionment for Foreign Missions, made an offering to Home Missions and exceeded our apportionment for Church Extension. The church is alive to every good word and work.—A. B. Houze.

INDIANA.

Wabash, Oct. 23.—I recently preached three sermons at Moscow, O.; five persons, all men, confessed Christ and were baptized into his death. We thank God.—L. L. Carpenter.

Anderson, Oct. 23.—Two added at East Lynn, at our regular services yesterday.—Arthur McKown, pastor.

Indianapolis, Oct. 26.—J. M. Canfield is again in the evangelistic field. He has just closed a meeting at Mooresville, with 44 accessions.—E. B. Scofield.

Indianapolis, Oct. 26. — The meeting in Mooresville, resulted in organizing a church, with 47 members, and a Sunday-school, with 54 members, and a pastor secured.—J. M. Canfield.

NEBRASKA.

North Bend, Oct. 21.—Our meeting is still at high tide; 24 added up to date. This has been a "red-letter" week. Special services. Next will be "rally week." Everything pushed. The town is talking and we are preaching. Bro. Atwood is dealing the gospel out in strong doses —F. Howard Sweetman, singer.

Alma, Oct 13.—We have fairly good audiences and Bible-school and C. W. B. M. Are going to begin a protracted meeting Nov. 10, with Bro. Speck, of Council Bluffs, at the helm. About the 1st of January, 1900, we expect to begin a meeting at Republican City. We are looking forward to these meetings with much interest and desire for the salvation of souls.—E. L. Poston.

IOWA.

Wapella, Oct. 20.—Four added at Atalissa, as part of the results of a two weeks' meeting —three confessions. Bro. I. H. Fuller, of Burlington, has just located in Wapella. I go to Burlington, Oct. 22 —Charles Blanchard.

Siam, Oct. 19.—I am in the second week of a meeting with 20 confessions and one by statement. Fine interest. I can hold another meeting before returning to the Pacific Coast if arrangements are made soon.—Cal Ogburn.

Batavia, Oct. 25.—Meeting starts out here with fine audiences. Bro. Lowe, the pastor, is leading the song service. My time is taken until about Jan. 1st. Those wishing to correspond concerning meetings to begin about that time and later can address me here.—Lawrence Wright, evangelist.

OKLAHOMA.

Last night (Thursday night, Oct. 19) Bro. D. T. Broadus, of Belle Plains, Kan., commenced a meeting at Antioch Church, eight and a half miles north of Nardin, Kay county, which is expected to last several weeks. We have a good house of worship at Antioch. Bro. J. J. Broadbent is preaching for the church, and I learned from him that the church and Sunday-school are in good condition. There is a meeting in progress at Nardin, conducted by Bro. J. W. Hall, late of Kentucky. Bro. Day, a new man in Oklahoma, is looking for permanent work. Hope he will find it at Blackwell. This is the most central, the largest and the most rapidiy growing town in Northern Oklahoma. It has three railroads, and just now there is strong effort being made to establish a normal college there. I understand that our brethren in Brosman, about 10 miles northwest of Blackwell, are having a meeting conducted by Bro. Hunter. The writer filled (?) the pulpit at Arkansas City last Lord's day. Was called there to preach the funeral of Sister Maggie Dobbs, who died on Friday, Oct. 13. The funeral, however, was preached in Oxford and not in Arkansas City, and by Bro. W. S. Rehorn, and not by the writer. Hence, I attended the 11 A. M. services in the city, and by request of Bro. Sorey and others preached for them. Bro. Sorey is a young man just from Eureka College, Illinois. From the size of the audience that was present and the attention and interest I should think that the cause in Arkansas City is doing very well. Of course, I am aware that I have crossed the line, but have not wandered very far away.—R. W. Robertson.

ILLINOIS.

Charleston, Oct. 23.—One added yesterday by baptism—student in new Normal School.—W. L. Harding, clerk.

Jacksonville, Oct. 23.—Four great audiences here yesterday and five additions; four by confession.—Wallace Brockman.

Pekin, Oct. 23.—All departments of the work doing well here. Ten added since last report. Four yesterday.—J. T. Alsup.

Sciota.—Bro. Ellsta is in a good meeting here with 49 additions to date.—Ante McHenry.

Allenville, Oct. 23.—Elder Herman held us a 12 days' meeting, resulting in 25 additions; 24 by baptism and a general awaking of the community.—J. W. Mathers.

Blandinsville.—J. S. Clements will conduct a series of meetings at the Old Bedford Church, beginning Oct. 29th. A. R. Adams will fill Bro. Clements' pulpit during the meeting.—A. R. Adams.

Watseka, Oct. 23.—Last Lord's day was an unusually glad day with this congregation. Both the morning and evening services were given up to the Jubilee Convention echoes Having had 14 representatives at Cincinnati (among whom were five elders and their wives and one deacon), we were enabled to easily arrange our programs. At the two services six talks were made. I shall be greatly disappointed if great good does not come of these meetings. I shall give a report of the convention at Milford, Oct. 25. One added here since last report.—B. S. Ferball.

ARKANSAS.

Independence, Mo.—I am on the zinc field again, with headquarters at Mt. Home. Here we have a congregation of from 50 to 75. At present they are without a preacher. Several of the leading business men, heads of mercantile companies, are members. Bro. Howard is teaching in the public schools. He teaches and preaches in a substantial way. He and Prof. Truman are pioneers, coming to this country in the sixties. They have stood by the cause until they have won. We have congregations at Arkana, Gasville, Buford, Big Flat, and Lone Rock in this (Baxter) county. These have good houses, and some have splendid congregations. Some are able to pay a fair salary. I think most of them do not have regular preaching. Bro. Welch is in a meeting at Buford; meeting one week old, with fine interest and 10 additions. I spent Sunday night with them. Bro. George and Bro. Henly are rendering valuable assistance in the meeting. Bro. Rose recently held a meeting at Mt. Home with 25 additions. He is now in a meeting at Lone Rock, assisted by Bro. George, a pioneer preacher. Have not learned results. Mt. Home is a beautiful mountain town, the county-seat of Baxter County, one of the finest and richest counties in Arkansas. It has several good brick and stone business houses, four good frame churches and some splendid residences. The Baptists have a fine brick college and stone music hall. This would be a pleasant place for a home in the winter. Fishing is exceedingly fine in the White and Buffalo Rivers.—G. W. Webb.

KANSAS.

Arkansas City, Oct. 23.—Three additions today; two by letter and one by confession, all adults. The work is gaining in interest. God is blessing our efforts.—M. Lee Sorey.

Highland, Oct. 20.—This date finds the writer at this place assisting the pastor, L. S. Ridenour, in a meeting. There were two confessions and three baptisms at the services last evening. The outlook is very promising, but we must return to Reserve to-morrow.—Melancthon Moore.

Hamlin, Oct. 21.—I began here last Tuesday, the 17th. A hard battle is before us. Immorality prevails. Closed after two and a half weeks at Newark, Mo., with nine added. Baptized one man 68 years of age. The church was stirred up to her duty and Bro. J. T. McGarvey is called as pastor for one-half instead of one-fourth time. Next meeting at Norton. —W. S. Lowe, evangelist.

Smith Center, Oct. 24.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at Stuart on Oct. 22; seven baptisms, one reclaimed, one by letter. Five were added to the church at Smith Center during September; four by statement, one baptism. The work in Smith county is moving along nicely. —A. L. Drummond.

Olathe, Oct. 23 —Four noble young men came out last night and made the good confession. It was an impressive scene. One man restored two weeks ago. Work prospers.—C. H. Hilton.

Bluff City, Oct. 26.—We have just closed a meeting, conducted by Bro. Frank Talmage, which resulted in 17 additions to the church. This was a grand meeting considering local conditions.—W. V. Williams

The church at Norton, W. G. Menzies, pastor, begins a protracted meeting Nov. 5th.

Ft. Scott, Oct. 25.—We have just closed a meeting at Mapleton, we found the congregation at that point in very bad condition. They had no preaching for about three years, no Sunday-school for over two years and the brethren were badly discouraged. We closed a three weeks' meeting last Lord's day with the congregation in good working order, and pastor's salary raised for one year, one-half time. Full board of officers. Eight additions; three by confession and baptism, five by statement. Sunday-school going and greatly encouraged. I think that small places like Mapleton are too much neglected by our preaching brethren. There are numbers of such points where much good can be accomplished if we will give a little of our time. Brethren, the Macedonian cry is continually coming to us from like places.—T. R. Overton.

MISSOURI.

Tavern, Oct. 23.—Eleven additions thi month by baptism and two otherwise.—Chas. E. Dunlap.

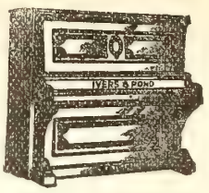
Tarkio, Oct. 21.—Our meeting here seven days old with nine additions. Fine outlook.—A. R. Hunt.

Canton, Oct. 20.—Closed three weeks' meeting at Mt. Sterling, Ia.; 28 additions.—A. N. Lindsey.

Bucklin, Oct. 23.—M. M. Goode assisted B. C. Stephens in a meeting at Rushville with 11 additions to date; 10 baptisms.

Kirksville, Oct. 20.—There were five additions to the church here last Sunday, and four the Sunday before.—H. A. Northcutt, pastor.

Tipton, Oct. 23.—Fifteen days here. Eight confessions. Continue. Harold E. Monser is an active and efficient pastor. I go to Colby, Kansas, next.—Vernon J. Rose.



Louson, Oct. 23.—I have just closed a meeting at this place; nine additions, eight by confession. I go from here to Mt. Ayr, Iowa, to take charge of the work in response to a unanimous call from that people.—L. C. Snow.

Plattsburg, Oct. 23.—Oct. 22nd the writer closed a 12 days' meeting at New Market, Platte Co., where he has been pastor for the last two years. In the 12 days there were 27 additions to the church; 24 by baptism.—Wm. C. Thompson

Nevada, Oct. 23.—Closed a two weeks' meeting with the church at Walker last night; three baptisms. Bro. Hill, our pastor, is in a good meeting with the home church. We are expecting and working for great results. Bro. H. takes hold of the work here like a veteran and his services are highly satisfactory to all. —S. Magee.

Billings, Oct. 19.—Our meeting here continues with growing interest; 23 additions to date; 16 by baptism. We have recently organized Christian County into a co-operative work and employed T. A. Foster as evangelist for his full time. He is in a fine meeting at Riverdale with nine confessions and two from Baptists to date. House will not accommodate the audiences.—T. J. Yokley, Pres. of Co. Work.

Maysville, Oct. 25.—Our work began here Oct. 15th. We hope to accomplish a good work here. We had good audiences last Lord's day; one confession. We give the 3rd, 4th and 5th Lord's days to Maysville, and the 1st and 2nd to Princeton. We shall live at each place half the time, but call Maysville our home. We begin at Princeton, Nov. 1st. This divided service is the first I ever undertook, but I hope to bring one or both of these churches to an "all time service" within a year We shall not "housekeep," but board.—H. S. Gilliam.

The Secret of the Flowers.

MRS. ADA M. ESTES.

They bloomed and bloomed all summer,
And we thought they only play;
But they could hold their secret
When their petals flew away
And disclosed the snuggest garner,
Where tiny seeds they keep,
When the Autumn stopped their blooming
And the flowers fell asleep.

Through long summer days and dewy nights
They've ever busy been,
Unfolding their bright corollas
And sucking pollen in.
And in their tiny workshop,
In closests dark and deep,
They filled the smallest corner
Before they fell asleep.

Mister Bumble Bee, saucy rover,
Called it a shameful sin,
Wooing so long at their portals
And never a peep within.
The honey bee 'most guessed it,
When drinking their nectar sweet,
And watched for the rich surprises
When the flower fell asleep.

Behold! from the loftiest treetops
Down to the grassy sod,
Each one being true to duty,
And loyal to Nature's God,
From millions of bursting carpels
The shining seed balls peep,
Since the Autumn stopped their blooming
And the flowers fell asleep.

Old Mother Earth gently called them
To come to her and rest;
From leaf-bud to tiny rootlet
They had done their very best.
And when the warm winds of April
Unto the valleys sing,
They will rise from her bosom rested,
And wake at the call of Spring.

A Heroic Boy.

BELLE M'FUTERS.

Away in the Far West lived a family of four. The father and mother were hard-working, Christian parents. The son was a tall, stout boy of eighteen years and the daughter was a frail, slender girl of about sixteen. We will call the boy Fred and the girl Ada. Fred dearly loved his sister Ada, and did anything he could to make her life pleasant. From birth she had been an invalid. There were few schools where they lived, so as you may know they knew little about books. They had a neat little cabin in the edge of a wood. At this time there were plenty of Indians where they lived The Indians were not hostile, but, of course, they disliked being driven away to new camping grounds whenever new settlers came. Their chief was a fierce-looking Indian and always wore a long yellow and green stripped robe. Fred disliked the Indian very much. But Ada was quite often found at their camp, much to the dislike of her brother Fred. Whenever she went to their camp she took the squaws a string of colored beads or something good to eat. The white people had built a round-house or a sort of garrison to protect them in case of an attack by Indians. If the people could just get to this garrison they were safe. Fred and Ada lived half a mile from the garrison, and as Ada couldn't walk so far she had to be carried by her father. One day a squaw, named Redbird, came to their camp and told them the chief, Flyer, had called a council and was about to make an attack on the whites. Redbird was very fond of Ada and wanted to save their lives if possible, so she had come to warn them. Ada's mother hastily put up a lunch, which she gave to Fred, who started with it and his sister for the garrison. They had to cross a deep stream of water, which was much swollen by the recent rains. When Fred came to this stream he was puzzled to get across. But he thought he could swim with Ada on his back till his father and mother came along. So he started, and by hard work nearly reached the opposite side when he saw two Indians approaching the water. He saw that they would be captured, and so he prepared to look ahead for a chance of escape. The Indians came up and captured them, the strongest one taking Fred. They were about two furlongs from the garrison and were going through a forest. Fred was walking behind his captor when he happened to see his only chance of escape. His captor's scalping knife was behind him in his belt. Fred managed to secure it and plunged it into the heart of the Indian. The remaining Indian sprang on him and grappled with him. The Indian was beginning to get the best of it, for Fred was nearly exhausted, when suddenly the Indian tripped and fell. Instantly Fred sprang on him and with one blow of his knife killed him!

Then, hastily taking Ada on his back, he ran for the garrison, which he reached in safety. His parents who were already there cried for joy when they saw their children, unharmed, except a few slight bruises. I think Fred was a hero, and I'm sure Ada must be very proud of such a brother.

The Difference.

She was a woman, worn and thin,
Whom the world condemned for a single sin.
They cast her out on the King's highway
And passed her by as they went to pray.

He was a man, and more to blame,
But the world spared him a breath of shame,
Beneath his feet he saw her lie,
But raised his head and passed her by.

They were the people who went to pray
At the temple of God on a holy day.
They scorned the woman, forgave the man;
It were ever thus since the world began.

Time passed on and the woman died,
On the Cross of Shame she was crucified;
But the world was stern and would not yield,
And they buried her in Potter's Field.

The man died, too, and they buried him
In a casket of cloth with a silver rim,
And said, as they turned from his grave away,
"We have buried an honest man to-day."

—Arthur Lewis Tubbs, in the Ram's Horn.

Via Dolorosa.

Resent the fact as we may, the path that ends in final victory, whether for the man or for the world, is a Via Dolorosa. And the world by such means, and in spite of all, is becoming a better world. There are more men than once there were that are not afaid; more men than once that are ready to be a dying sacrifice, and, what is still better for this generation at least, a living sacrifice. And by so much the world is being lifted toward the consummation for which men pray, and out toward which runs the purposes and pledges of Almighty God.—C. H. Parkhurst.

The Saloon the Mouth of Hell.

Does any one doubt this? Let him read the following extract from the report of the grand jury of Chicago. Having investigated the saloons, they made out and published the report, which, in part, reads as follows: "Repeatedly witnesses before us have testified to the fact that in saloons which are the resort of thieves, hold-up men and dissolute women, robbe ies and burglaries are planned; and criminals with well known records issue from these vile dens to waylay men, women and children. In many cases saloonkeepers and saloon employes serve as receivers of stolen property. In no less than six cases before this grand jury it was shown that murders were committed either in saloons or as a result of saloon influence. The police, when striving to detect criminals, at once visit the saloons, proving that those officers are aware of the character of the men who habitually fill them.

"The fact is, that in the opinion of competent men whose duties call them to the consideration of crime in Cook County, seventy five per cent. of the criminal offenses committed within the county are traceable directly or indirectly to the saloon, and the further fact is that the greater portion of the expense for the administration of justice and the regulation and punishment of crime is caused by the evil of drink. All these facts are ample evidence that there should be immediate and stringent measures adopted for the suppression of the frightful evil and influence of open saloons."

The worst of all in this array of infamy is the fact that every one who is fairly well informed as to the purpose and work of the saloon knows that this terrible indictment is only too true. The statement is made not by "cranky prohibitionists," or "long-haired," "wild-eyed" "temperance fanatics," but by plain citizens, commissioned by the court to investigate and make report under oath of the facts and conditions they find.

The saloon is a God-blaspheming, law-defying, man-destroying institution, that will sooner or later destroy this republic if not itself destroyed. In the name of all that is precious and sacred, why do not the Christian people get together, concentrate their efforts and forever overthrow this foul foe of God and man?—Religious Telescope.

The Old, Old Story.

He was one of the fellows
That could drink or leave it alone,
With a fine, high scorn for common men
Who were born with no backbone.
"And why," said he, "should a man of strength
Deny to himself the use
Of the pleasant gift of the warm, red wine
Because of its weak abuse?"

He could quote at a banquet,
With a manner half divine,
Full fifty things the poets say
About the rosy wine;
And he could sing a spirited song
About the lips of a lass,
And drink a toast to her fair young worth
In a sparkling, generous glass.

And since this lordly fellow
Could drink or leave it alone,
He chose to drink at his own wild will
Till his will was overthrown.
And the lips of the lass are cold with grief,
And her children shiver and shrink,
For the man who once could leave it alone
Is a pitiful slave to drink.

General Tom Thumb.

St. Nicholas for November contains an interesting article about this midget man and other little folks from which we reproduce below the concluding part of the article:

"Hoping to renew his former successes, in 1857 the energetic showman again sailed for England. Tom Thumb accompanied him, and soon Mr. Barnum began to retrieve his fallen fortunes.

"The General continued his exhibitions in different European cities, while Mr. Barnum made trips here, there, and everywhere, until, in 1861, we find them all back in America.

"In December of this year Mr. Barnum received at the museum a visit from a wonderfully small dwarf named George Washington Morrison Nutt.

"Mr. Barnum immediately conferred upon him the title of 'Commodore,' and procured for him ponies, miniature coachman and footman, and a little carriage that when closed resembled an English walnut. General Tom Thumb was at that time traveling in the South and West. He had grown quite stout, and, singularly enough, Commodore Nutt bore a striking resemblance to the General as he looked a few years before. Many thought that General Tom Thumb and Commodore Nutt were one and the same.

"On the principle, I suppose, that two dwarfs are better than one, and to refute the unbelievers, Tom Thumb's Western engagement was brought to a close, and the two mites were exhibited together at the museum. Advertisements headed 'The Two Dromios,' and 'Two Smallest Men and Greatest Curiosities Living,' drew many visitors; and soon after Mr. Barnum heard of another dwarf, a very pretty little woman calling herself Lavinia Warren. Her home was at Middleboro, Massachusetts, and Mr. Barnum soon made an engagement with her which was to last for several years. Lavinia had a sister, smaller than herself, named Minnie, and she too was soon persuaded to join the group of midgets; and Tom Thumb, Commodore Nutt, Lavinia and Minnie Warren formed a marvelous quartet as one could wish to see, and their exhibitions were attended by as many people as the museum could accommodate.

"On February 10, 1863, Miss Livinia Warren and General Tom Thumb were made man and wife at Grace Church in New York. Commodore Nutt and Minnie Warren acted as best man and bridesmaid. And these two were married somewhat later.

"General Tom Thumb and wife held a large reception at the Metropolitan Hotel. The bride and groom, on their wedding tour, went to Washington and visited President Lincoln, and then settled down to private life, the General having made enough money to warrant his retiring from business.

"Tom Thumb had been too long accustomed to the excitement of a public life to care for retirement. In a few months he made business arrangements with Commodore Nutt and Minnie Warren, and the four soon found themselves again in the show business.

"On June 21, 1869, the 'General Tom Thumb Company,' as it was called, started from New York on a three years' tour around the world.

"The journey of the four midgets was really most remarkable. They traveled 55,487 miles, gave 1,471 entertainments in 587 different cities and towns, in many latitudes and climes, and never lost a day nor missed a single performance through accident or illness; and they coined money all the way.

"From this time on we hear of Tom Thumb sometimes quietly resting in his home in Bridgeport, sometimes giving entertainments in various cities. He and his wife were frequently seen in New York, and were present in 1881, when Mr. Barnum opened his 'Greatest Show on Earth,' at Madison Square Garden.

"Tom Thumb died in Middleboro, Massachusetts, on July 15, 1883. He was laid to rest in the beautiful Mountain Grove Cemetery of his native town. A slender shaft of marble, surmounted by a life-size statue of himself, marks his resting-place, while near by is the massive monument of granite over the grave of his old friend and manager, Mr. Barnum."

"Now Be Good."

In the course of the celebrations attending his arrival at New York, Admiral Dewey met Governor McMillin, of Tennessee, dna said he had a good story to tell him.

"It's about one of your boys. During one of the land battles outside of Manila one of the Tennessee regiments was engaged in skirmishing. One of your soldiers had been shot at twice by a Filipino," said he, "and both shots missing, the Tennessee boy became disgusted at the poor marksmanship of the Filipino, ran over to him, and gave him a good spanking. 'Now go home and be good.'"

Governor McMillin promised to spread the story throughout his state.

To Clean Lace.

When lace is soiled, even the very finest, such as honiton and point, you can clean it by being careful in this way: sew the lace upon strips of muslin and roll it tight around a smooth glass bottle and fasten securely Make a suds by adding a teaspoonful of Gold Dust Washing Power, and put the bottle in this to soak for several hours. If the water looks soiled, make fresh suds and repeat this process, patting the lace frequently between the fingers and rinse in several waters; then dry the lace on the bottle with a soft towel.

IT CAN'T BE DONE.

No One Can Remain Well, No Chronic Disease Can Be Cured Unless the Stomach is First Made Strong and Vigorous.

This is plain because every organ in the body depends on the stomach for its nourishment. Nerve, bone, sinew, blood are made from the food which the stomach converts to our use,

How useless to treat disease with this, that and the other remedy and neglect the most important of all, the stomach.

The earliest symptoms of indigestion are sour risings, bad taste in the mouth, gas in stomach and bowels, palpitation, all gone feeling, faintness, headaches, constipation; later comes loss of flesh, consumption, liver and heart troubles, kidney diseases, nervous prostration, all of which are the indirect result of poor nutrition.

Any person suffering from indigestion should make it a practice to take after each meal one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, allowing it to dissolve in the mouth and thus mingle with the saliva and enter the stomach in the most natural way. These Tablets are highly recommended by Dr. Jennison because they are composed of the natural digestive acids and fruit essences which assist the stomach in digesting all wholesome food before it has time to ferment and sour.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists, full sized packages at 50 cents. They are also excellent for invalids and children. A book on stomach diseases and thousands of testimonials of genuine cures sent free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

The Value of Adversity.

The air from the sea of affliction is extremely beneficial to invalid Christians. Continued prosperity, like warm atmosphere, has a tendency to unbind the sinews and soften the bones; but the cold winds of trouble make us sturdy, hardy and well braced in every part. Unbroken success often leads to an undervaluing of mercies and forgetfulness of the giver; but the withdrawal of the sunshine leads us to look for the sun.—Spurgeon.

An Open Hand.

An inveterate drunkard once asked a Quaker whether he knew of a method whereby he could cure his dominant vice. "Friend," answered Broadbrim, "it is as easy as keeping thy hand open."

"How can that be?" said the drunkard; "every man can keep his hand open, but as to abstaining from liquor, that's quite a different thing."

"I will tell thee, friend," quoth the Quaker, "when thou hast gotten a glass of gin in thy hand, and before thou dost raise the tempting liquor to thy lips, open thy hand—and keep it open. Thou breakest the glass, but thou breakest not the law of sobriety."

The Smallest Book.

The smallest book ever printed is the story of Perrault's little "Hop-o'-my Thumb," lately published. The book is one and one-half inches long by one inch wide and one-quarter inch thick. It can be read only by the aid of a microscope, but is complete in every way and has four engravings.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

We have seen this item from time to time in various papers. It is not correct. We have an English Dictionary, 384 pages, legible without a microscope to those with good eyes, which is only one inch long, three-quarters of an inch wide and a quarter of an inch thick. It is bound in imitation morocco (the genuine would have been too thick), and is inclosed in a silvered case with a glass front, with a ring so that it can be worn as a watch charm.—Herald and Presbyter.

Some Interesting Dairy Statistics.

"Keeping Cows For Profit" is the well-chosen title of the newest work on practical dairying to come under our notice. We understand that a large issue of this little publication is being gratuitously circulated with the compliments of The De Laval Separator Co., 74 Cortlandt St., New York, which concern offers to send a copy to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST upon request.

The book treats of dairying as a manufacturing business and discusses its problems from the standpoint that every dairy farmer is just as much a business man as though engaged in any other manufacturing or commercial undertaking.

The book begins with a brief review of the history of dairying, shows the relative percentages of the various component parts of the different dairying products, takes up the production and marketing of such products in one form after another, and closes with a pertinent reference to private dairying.

In an historical and statistical way it tells much that is interesting. We learn that dairying is of most ancient beginning, going back at least 2,000 years before Christ, but that in a commercial form it is most modern, being scarcely more than the development of the last generation. We learn that in 1898 the dairy products of the United States were $500,000,000; that there are some 17,000,000 milch cows in the U. S.; an annual consumption of 1,750,000,000 gallons of milk; 1,500,000,000 lbs. of butter and 300,000,000 lbs. of cheese; and that 1899 prices of all dairying products, especially butter, have been considerably higher than for several years past.

We find that the average U. S. yield of milk per cow is less than 4,000 lbs. a year, and only about 130 lbs. of butter; while to be profitable the milk yield should be from 5,000 to 6,000 lbs., and the butter production never under 200 lbs. In this connection it is authoritatively stated that fully one-half of the butter produced in farm butter making, by the practice of the older dairying methods, is made and marketed at an actual loss to the maker.

The book fairly teems with practical facts and epigrammatical expressions appealing to the dairy farmer.

Passenger or Freight.

The railways of India had lately a curious problem to decide. It was whether a man who applied for passage from the far north to a distant southern shrine should be accepted at passenger rates or charged as freight. He had heavy iron bands upon his wrists, ankles and neck; heavy iron girdles about his chest and loins; heavy iron chains swung in multitudinous festoons across his chest and back; heavy iron chains wound around each limb, and finally, an iron cable fastened to his waistband and terminating in a heavy iron ring; while he carried an immense iron pin and a hammer with which to drive it into the ground when he chose to stake himself out for the night. It was estimated that he carried upon his person no less than two hundred pounds of metal, and the conclusion of the railway authorities was that he must pay both for passage snd for freightage of his "junk." It proved that he was a pilgrim upon his ourney to expiate his sins; and, finding it would be impossible to reach the shrine of his chosen intercessor with his articles of penance on, he wished to go near enough to make the balance of his journey practicable. Accoutred as he was, he presented a graphic picture of the conscience burdened by its sense of sin. He was seeking in the pains of his body to atone for the sins of his soul.—The Interior.

The Wonderful Merits of Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney and Bladder Remedy

By Special Arrangement, Every Reader of the "Christian-Evangelist," to Prove for Themselves the Wonderful Curative Properties of the Famous New Discovery Swamp-Root, May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely FREE by Mail.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these useful organs.

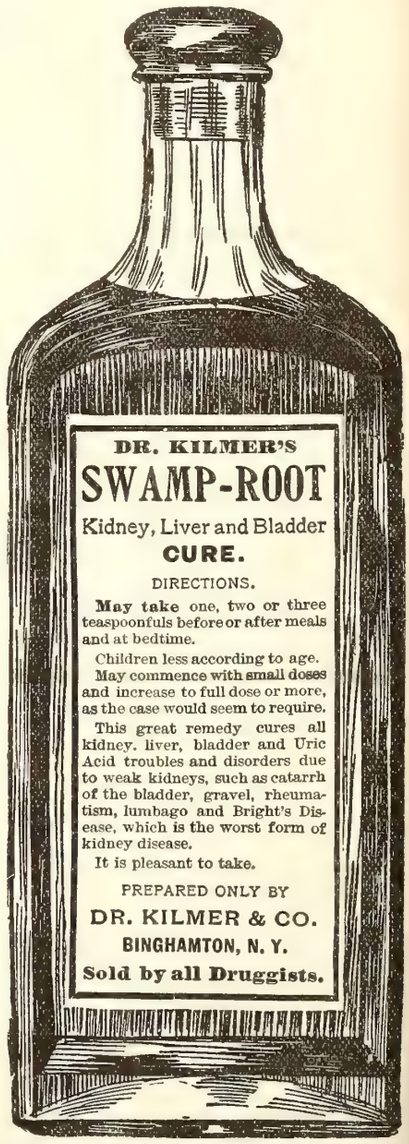
What more natural?

The kidneys filter and purify the blood.

Your other organs may need care, but your kidneys most, because they do most.

If you are sick, begin doctoring your kidneys, because as soon as they are well they will help all other organs to health.

The immediate symptoms and first proofs of weak kidneys are pain or dull ache in the back, rheumatism, dizziness, headaches, nervousness, heart trouble, pain in the limbs, bloating, sallow complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, bladder irritation, suppression of urine, obliged to pass water often day and night, worn-out, tired feeling, lack of ambition.



If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp Root is the great medical triumph of the 19th century; discovered after years of untiring effort and research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer.

It is pleasant to take, and can be purchased at most drug stores or medicine dealers in fifty-cent or one-dollar bottles.

Make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

The famous new discovery, Swamp-Root, has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless, too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of Swam-Root.

One-half the 50 ct. size—one-quarter the $1 00 size.

The great kidney remedy, Swamp Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to kindly mention the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

IT takes a great deal of courage simply to be yourself, and yet to be yourself is the line of power. We are all the time thinking that if we act and speak or feel as others do, we shall be right; but once in a while, in a moment of illumination, it comes over us that we are not just like anyone else, and that we have to act and think and feel according to our nature.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Red Box Clew—VI.

Frank Douglas was thrilled with pleasure. She read what Vega had written upon the slate as if she dared not believe her eyes. But when she looked up, she saw that the deaf girl's face had changed. It was no longer cold and sour, but shy. Frank impulsively threw her arm about her companion, and they sat for awhile in close embrace. Then Vega asked, "What would you like to do?" It gave her a throb of joy to ask the question, as she realized that she might make another happy. She never thought of the happiness of her brother and sister, because they always treated her as if she were a burden. They did what she commanded because their mother saw to that, but they manifested no interest in her. She felt that Frank needed her, and it was a sweet thought; she had long ago ceased to think of herself save as an unfortunate, miserable drag to other people. No wonder she had moped, and had been dull and imperious! And all the time she had been thirsting for a little human companionship; and she had been given everything but that.

Frank took the slate and began to write, and Vega reflected how differently others took the slate—impatiently and with hasty hands; and how they always wrote as few words as would express their meaning. But Frank wrote lovingly, with a bright smile. And Vega wondered that she had ever hated the slate over which the pure, patient face was bending. Frank wrote, "I suppose you are used to the brook, but I do so want to play in it, for I have never been real close to a brook in my life; I mean close enough to touch the water." Vega was surprised. Why any one should want to play in a brook, and what one could do with a brook in the way of getting entertainment, mystified her. She answered doubtfully, "I suppose a person would get wet."

Then Frank's face lit up with a reckless, bold thought, and with a hand that trembled from her audacity, she wrote, "Let's go barefooted!"

"Go to the house and bring a towel," said Vega briefly. Not that she had any desire to go barefooted. It had been more than a year since she had so disported. But she had determined to let Frank have her way, and since Vega did not desire to do anything, why not please her friend? She waited in the summerhouse feeling strange and light-headed, as if she was going to have a fever. What a curious feeling it gave her, to think of somebody else's pleasure!

In the meantime, Frank reached the house and entered the back way. "A towel?" said Mrs. Dew, looking with wonder at the girl's glowing face. "What's the matter?"

"Oh, we are going barefooted in the brook," said Frank breathless and happy. "And oh, Mrs. Dew, I was never barefooted in my life, except sometimes in my bedroom, when I was playing the rug was a pond. And when I think that sure-enough water will be splashing over my toes I feel like laughing aloud."

"Well!" exclaimed the housekeeper. "And do you mean to say that Vega is going to play!"

"Of course she is." And Frank ran away just as Mrs. Clarmont peeped in. "What's that?" the mistress demanded sharply.

"They are going barefooted," said Mrs. Dew; they are going to play in the brook."

"Mercy on us!" cried Mrs. Clarmont. "This comes from hiring a child, nobody knows who, with common ways. They are too big to go barefooted!"

"Nobody can see them down in the grove," said Mrs. Dew, drawing in her mouth as was her custom in certain moods.

"But the idea of turning out their—their toes and heels to the air!" cried Mrs. Clarmont. "This has affected my nerves, Mrs. Dew! I have not raised my daughters to splash about with their legs in the open country!"

"Say the word, ma'am, and I'll run down there and put a stop to it."

"Yes, and have Vega mope about for a week. No, indeed. I am not accustomed to crossing Vega, as you know. But I am disappointed in Fanny; I shall go and tell Clara how common she is." And Mrs. Clarmont slammed the kitchen door. Ronald was reading as he sprawled on a sofa, while Clara was giving her attention to some fancy work. Mrs. Clarmont announced the news with a tragic air. "What do you think? That Fanny has actually inveigled Vega into going barefooted!"

"And did Vega want to do it?" inquired Clara. "I can't imagine her wanting to do anything! Well, for mercy's sake don't stop her! If it would please the child to stand on her head, I'd help hold her up!"

"That Bob is a bright girl," said Ronald, looking up. "Here we've nearly run ourselves distracted, trying to trump up an amusement for Vega, and none of us hit on the barefoot idea!"

"It's low," said Mrs. Clarmont. It's—it's common."

While Frank was taking off her shoes and stockings, she really could not help from laughing and shivering with delightful anticipation, and Vega could not help from catching a little of the joyous infection. So even she smiled as she followed suit. And they waded up and down the branch. It was fun when they came to the bridge, because you could just step off of it into the water as if you were a horse that didn't care how wet he got himself. There were places where the sun got through the treetops and reached the water, a good deal tangled up, and shone there peaceful and placid. There was one place where the banks came close together and rose high and abrupt—quite higher than their heads. And in this narrow channel the water ran deep and dark; oh, it quite came to their knees, and you had better hold your dress well in that place! Then there was another place, just the opposite of that; for here the channel grew broad and the banks ran away from each other, and looked like they would never come close together again. And in this place there was a broad sandbar where you could paddle out of the water and make deep tracks and run the fine sand through your fingers, and dig a great hole in no time. Further down the pasture a high rock bluff rose from the stream, and about half way up, a cold, thin line of water spouted out and fell into the brook below with a song that had no rest-notes. And that was a spring, such as Frank had often read about. Now she saw it with her own eyes, and caught some of the water in her own mouth! And Vega drank from it too, just for fun, not because anybody was thirsty.

They kept the slate on the bank, where it would not get wet, and whenever they moved their quarters, they would move the slate. Now Frank had a great idea, and ran out of the water to write, "Let's build a dam!" Vega said. "We can't." But Frank nodded her head with rapture, and wrote, "You know, Rollo did." And Vega in much perplexity said, "Who's Rollo?" Then Frank wrote, "A boy in a book. And I think two girls not in a book could do as much." Well, at that Vega laughed, —it had become wonderfully easy to do that sort of thing—and they set to work. They selected a place where the water was not too strong, nor the banks too far apart. They dug up rocks with their fingers and placed them carefully across the brook till it began to quarrel among them at being interrupted. For a brook is a good deal like some people. But as the rock wall rose high, the quarreling stopped, and on one side—the upper side—the water rose and rose till the dam made it pretty nearly five inches higher than the other part. Think of that! Then you could wade in the dammed—in part, and feel the water come up all about you. And there was one place where they had dragged a great rock out of the bottom, leaving a "step-off." And it was fun to step into the "step-off" and pretend to be surprised and frightened, just as if you didn't go to do it! A funny thing about the dam was that you couldn't make it tight enough to keep back the stream, and you couldn't force the water to rise above those five inches—it would get through somehow, nobody knew where. They concluded it was much easier, after all, for Rollo to build a dam in a book; only they doubted if he had half as much fun. Fun? Yes, Vega had really and wonderfully enjoyed herself for several hours—for all the morning in fact. For they were making a flour mill on the sandbar when Clara Clarmont came down to tell them it was dinner time. They washed off the mud from their feet—each had been vying with the other in seeing how much they could get to stick on—good, black, slippery mud; and having found a broad stone at the margin, they stood on that (it was as large as the top of a table) and dried themselves on the same towel. But at the house they separated and Frank went to the kitchen. Vega startled the others at the dinner table by saying, in her loud voice (for being deaf, she couldn't know how to pitch her tones), "Mother, after this, Frank is going to eat with me, or I with her!" Of course, nobody thought of opposing Vega, but disgust appeared in the face of Mrs. Clarmont, vexation in that of Clara, while Ronald stared in surprise. Mr. Clarmont did not look up; he was as silent and cold as ever. Mrs. Dew had watched the two girls as they came up from the meadow. She had noted the happy look on Vega's face. "Little girl," she said, putting her motherly arm about Frank, "How did you like it?"

Frank's eyes sparkled with joyful tears. "I just prayed, and God made it all right," she said.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE RISING WALLS.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

Nehemiah, the king's cupbearer, had received the message from his countrymen in Judah regarding the waste and desolate condition of Jerusalem, and his prayer for divine mercy upon his people and for success in the undertaking which he proposed, had been uttered. Soon after King Artaxerxes one day noticed the pale and careworn expression of his chamberlain and inquired the cause. Nehemiah rehearsed in the presence of the king and the queen-mother the story of his unfortunate people and secured in reply to his silent prayer for a favorable moment in which the matter should come to the king a commission to visit Jerusalem and an order upon the royal forest-keeper to provide timber for the rebuilding of the gates of the castle, and passes to the royal governors beyond the Euphrates for the safe conduct of the chamberlain and his company. Moreover, the king granted him an escort of Persian soldiers to insure his safe arrival at Jerusalem. Thus equipped, Nehemiah started from Susa and made the journey to Judah. Upon his arrival he remained three days in quietness and then started out at night to reconnoitre the city and discover possible means of rebuilding it. He found it impossible to make the circuit of the city on horseback and was compelled to dismount in order to see all points of the old wall. He told no one of his purpose, so that he was unhindered; but the next day he called a meeting of the leading men of Jerusalem and laid upon their hearts the necessity of building the walls. Not since the days when Jerusalem had fallen under the hands of Nebuchadrezzar had there been any attempt to erect these battlements. The temple had been built and Jerusalem had slowly taken on some semblance of life once more, but her position was singularly defenceless, and Nehemiah saw that if she was ever to be strong it must be by the rebuilding of her walls. The result of the meeting was a resolution to rise up and build, and they set to work at once in accordance with this purpose.

The third chapter of Nehemiah presents a striking picture of the process by which the walls were repaired and built. The entire circuit of the city had to be provided for, because it was useless to build on one side, leaving the other parts exposed. They began at the sheep gate and posted workmen around the entire circuit of the city, including such points as the tower of the hundred, the tower of Hananel, the fish gate, the old gate, the broad wall, the tower of the furnaces, the valley gate, the dung gate, the fountain gate, the pool of Shiloah by the king's garden, the house of the warriors, the ascent to the armory, the tower of the king's house near the court of the guard, the water gate, the east gate, the gate of the overseer, back again to the sheep gate, from which the beginning was made. Many sorts of people joined in the enterprise. There were those who came in the city from outside and assisted their brethren in building the walls. Such were the men of Jericho, of Tekoa, of Gideon and of Mizpah. There were also various orders of the inhabitants who worked in sections, such as the goldsmiths, the priests, the Levites and the nobles, while many individuals who are mentioned by name wrought in the work opposite their own houses. Some are expressly mentioned as refusing to join in the enterprise, such as the nobles of Tekoa, who declined to follow the leadership of their ruler; but for the most part the people worked gladly and in the incredibly short space of fifty-three days the walls were completed.

But this was not done without serious opposition from without. The neighboring peoples regarded with jealousy the attempt of Jerusalem to secure rehabilitation. Three leaders particularly—Sanballat, the Horonite; Tobiah, the Ammonite, and Gesham, or Gashmu, the Arabian, with their allies from among the Pilistines, were anxious to retard and prevent the work as far as possible. They saw that Jerusalem's prosperity would be dangerous to them. At first they only cast contempt upon the enterprise, which had been so long neglected that it was considered impossible. If the Jews had never sought to rebuild their city during all the years that had followed its destruction, it was scarcely possible that now they would be successful in their undertaking. They saw that the Jews were weak and that the city was so desolated and ruined that only the most arduous labors could accomplish its restoration. Therefore they were sceptical when they heard the report that the attempt was to be made. They did not believe that a wall sufficient to keep out a jackal could be built. All this Nehemiah tells us in his personal memoir, which is thus shown to be of the highest historical value. The governor himself breaks out here and there into personal appeal to God in the writing of his journal, because of the dangers around him and the taunts to which he is subjected by the people. But nevertheless, he had inspired something of his own courage and energy into the Jews and they gave themselves with enthusiasm to the work, and thus the first condition of success was met.

Several obstacles stood in the way of success. There was, first of all, the discouragement of the people after they had undertaken the work and saw the amount of rubbish that had to be removed before a beginning could be made at building the wall. They felt that no strength was left for the really important work, because all the laborers were exhausted in the removal of the debris. Then again their enemies outside were constantly planning to take them by surprise, and they had to be on their watch day and night. And then in the third place, the Jews who dwelt at a distance were besought by their friends at home to return, and thus the working force in Jerusalem was reduced. Nehemiah considering these difficulties took a resolute stand in the matter and armed his people for conflict with any enemy that might present itself. He encouraged the rulers of the different sections of Jerusalem and held out to them the comforting assurance of God's presence and protection. These measures and others which the energetic and enthusiastic governor devised stayed the complaints and encouraged the people. Night and day the work went forward. The walls were guarded as they slowly rose and the artisans themselves stood side by side with the soldiers, or even themselves bore arms, while Nehemiah went from place to place with a trumpeter in constant attendance, so that if there should be an attack in this quarter or that, he could meet it and summon all available forces to defend the walls.

Nothing could more forcibly illustrate the splendid abilities of Nehemiah than such a work as this. He was just the man needed in an emergency of this character. His devotion to his people had encouraged him to abandon for the time his high position in the court at Susa and to give himself to the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Now on the ground, in the midst of dangers and discouragements that would have appalled a smaller nature, he rises sublimely to the great task and by every artifice and device that a resourceful mind could invent he kept his people loyal, baffled his adversaries and brought his great enterprise to a complete success. Such men are needed to day as much as in Nehemiah's time. They are needed to lead in the enterprises of the Church of Christ. They are needed in missionary work, in Sunday-school work, in Endeavor work—men who do not know what failure is, men of prayer and consecration, who first of all get themselves right with God and then go forward to the accomplishment of the divine will. Such men cannot be defeated. The work is not theirs but God's and they are the efficient means of its succesful prosecution.

THE truth of the matter is, there are so many mixtures of Zinc, Barytes, Whiting, etc., sold under misleading brands of "White Lead" and "Pure White Lead," that in order to obtain Pure White Lead it is absolutely necessary to make sure that the brand is right.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 12.

THE LIVING BREAD.

(John 6:26-35.)

These people seemed to have some inkling of Jesus' meaning when they said, "Lord, evermore give us this bread." It was not merely daily satisfaction of hunger that they craved. They wished evermore to be satisfied. And is there not, then, in all human hearts, however thoughtless, indifferent or depraved, the yearning, the hungry, that cannot be daily satisfied?

This heart-hunger, then, it is, that the Living Bread is intended to satisfy. How many hungry souls there are, eating husks when there is bread to spare, accepting a stone when they might have a loaf, a serpent when they might have sustaining meat! They it is who are rushing about hotly after the empty pleasures and vanities of the world. We have often heard of the fruit that was said to grow on the shores of the Dead Sea; it was round and ripe-looking, and colored beautifully, but when one grasped it to eat, it crumbled to ashes in one's hands. So it is, indeed, with too much of that upon which people try to feed their souls. What they took for food, what they thought would lead to comfort, happiness, satisfaction, was not food. They have been filled with that which is no bread.

Jesus says to all the world, I am that bread you crave. Startling utterance, yet true. There is nothing that satisfies heart-hunger like companionship, friendship. Isolation is the hardest thing to bear. It is sin that brings isolation. Possibly hell consists in that very banishment from association with God and one's fellows. Now, says Jesus, for the solitary I am the friend and companion, for heart-hunger I am the living bread.

It is this companionship, this love, this satisfaction of a clear conscience, void of offense, that we need, and this it is which absorption, assimilation of the Spirit of Jesus, will give. What causes the unrest and dissatisfaction in our lives, Endeavorers? It is not that we have to toil hard for daily bread, is it? That is a joy. It is a pleasure of life to toil and overcome obstacles. "All for the joy of the working!" It is not that we are met with difficulties, is it? It is only a pleasure to strive against odds. No, it is hunger for rigbteousness, it is lack of nearness to Christ, it is the famine of friendship with God, it is sadness of sin and isolation that weighs us down. It is Christ that we need. Whoso eateth of this living bread shall never hunger. Whoso drinketh of this water shall never thirst. Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus.

Organize A Reading Circle at Once.

Every church should be an educational center. It should have a school of higher grade, wider scope and more definite aim than the average Sunday-school. The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses are admirably designed to meet this need. Concise handbooks are provided for Bible study, the study of missions and the study of the plea and history of the Disciples. Two successful years have demonstrated the wisdom of this plan. Every Christian Endeavor Society, every C. W. B. M. Auxiliary and every church ought to investigate the merits of these courses at once. Full and free information will be sent on application to J. Z. Tyler, 798 Republic Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

THE C. E. READING COURSES.

Character and Purpose of the Bible.

By Herbert L. Willett, Director.

From any point of view, the Bible is the most important book in the world. In making this statement one must not overlook the fact that there are other sacred literatures which exert a wide influence over large sections of the human race. The Koran, the sacred book of Islam, has a constituency of exceptional strength and persistency, and as a propagating system, Islam, which is founded upon it, takes rank among the foremost systems of belief. The Vedas that contain the precepts of the Hindoo faith, may be said to hold the leading place as a literature in Eastern Asia. They are regarded as utterances of divine character. The code of Confucius and the Zend Avesta are both believed to be sacred, and are held in great reverence by the followers of the Chinese and Persian prophets respectively.

The day is past when any candid student of religious questions can overlook the presence and influence of these other systems of belief. Nor is it possible to longer hold the view that they are vicious impositions upon ignorance and superstition, which was once the prevalent attitude of mind on the part of Christians. The study of Comparative Religion at the present time is revealing the high moral tone of much of this ethnic literature, and is demonstrating beyond question that the effect of these various systems of faith upon the people who accept them has been markedly beneficial. Human systems though they are, they have still served as steppingstones to higher truth, and it may be believed that in the providence of God, they are the intermediate grounds between the old heathen faiths which they displaced, and the larger truth which Christianity is yet to bring to all nations.

Unsatisfactory as is the code of morals presented in the Koran, and immature as are its religious ideas, one cannot but be impressed by the striking advance made by the followers of Islam over the old paganism from which their leader rescued them. That Islam is no better to-day, if as good, as a thousand years ago, is simply due to the fact that it was a human expedient, and therefore that it crystallized about Mohammed's life and teachings, and became stationary and unprogressive.

In comparison with these ethnic and stationary religions, Christianity presents the person of the world's Savior, for whom the preparation is recorded in the Old Testament, and whose life and ministry are given in the New Testament. The vital character of Christianity, and The Book which records its beginnings, is emphasized by the progressive influences which have come from the Bible during the centuries during which Christianity has been in the world. While it is not exact to say that Christianity is founded upon the Bible, since the Bible is the record of the divine activities which produced Christianity, rather than itself the cause of them, yet the self-disclosure of God to the world is set forth in The Book to such an extent that The Book becomes thereby the rightful and necessary center of all the forces that conspire to further Christian influence in the world. The spread of Christianity is indissolubly linked with the spread of the Bible. It is therefore true, in a special sense, that Christianity is the religion of The Book.

The three years of Bible study already projected in the Bethany Courses provide ample opportunity for acquaintance with the leading portions of Holy Scripture The first year's course deals with the entire Bible, and makes use of a handbook which gives a brief introduction to each book of the Old and New Testaments. The second year has for its theme the Life and Teachings of Jesus, and uses a handbook of that title The third year is devoted to a study of prophecy, and is based on the handbook, "The Prophets of Israel" Any reader may begin with either of these handbooks, and may take the Bible Course either alone or in connection with the courses on Missions and Disciples.

PICTURE PUZZLES, OR HOW TO READ THE BIBLE BY SYMBOLS. By Frank Beard and others. J. L Nichols & Co., Naperville, Ill., Toronto and Atlanta, Ga., publishers.

At first glance the above looks like a picture book for children, but a closer inspection reveals a decidedly unique and interesting combination of words and pictures. The pictures are word-symbols, and taken together give the text of some Scripture. Each page is a scriptural rebus. There is a fascinations in the effort to read off each page that attracts the reader familiar with the Scriptures, and the desire to interpret the symbols will certainly create an interest in Bible reading on the part of young people and children. We do not know of a book that we could more heartily commend to every household than this one.

NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

Self-Culture for November contains a pleasing variety of subjects from Hollow'en customs to statesmenlike articles on the great national and international questions. The editorial touches are timely and the engravings of this number are up to the usual standard of perfection.

The Pall Mall Magazine for November contains several articles of unusual interest, among which we find one giving an account of the chief newspapers of the continent, with a reproduction of the front page of each paper. Besides the leading articles there is the usual number of stories, illustrated poems, etc.

Frank Leslie's for November contains some leading articles by prominent men on prominent themes, among which that of Secretary Gage on "The Finances of Our Wars" (continued), and that on "Among the Boers," are worthy of special mention. The freshness and timeliness of the other articles and departments of this magazine makes it one of the best of the season.

The Woman's Home Companion for November is an issue that cannot fail to attract attention. This number contains three prize stories, one of which won the $100, another $60 and the third $40, which had been previously offered by the publishers of the W. H. C. The regular departments of this number are replete with suggestions for the early days of winter, Thanksgiving and the holidays.

Among the literary features of general interest in the Ladies' Home Journal for November are "How the Next Census will be Taken," "How a Play is Written," "The Anecdotal Side of Robert E. Lee." Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," contributes an article, "Is Christianity Practical in Worldly Affairs?" and Sir Henry Irving writes on "The Study of Shakespeare in Small Communities." By The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. One dollar per year; ten cents per copy.

"Ian Maclaren, His Home-life in Liverpool," with pictures of his house, his church and family, is the title of an article in the Ledger Monthly for November, which all readers of this keen and humorous portrayer of Scotch character will enjoy. The picture on the cover is a reproduction in color of J. G. Brown's painting, "Memories of the Red Ear," a work suggestive of the happy long ago, in an old New England farmer's life, full of unconscious pathos and the poetry of work. It is accompanied by a descriptive poem by W. J. Henderson.

No DISEASE has so baffled the medical skill of all ages as RHEUMATISM.

and no remedy has ever been known to cure it until "5 Drops," the Rheumatic Cure demonstrated its wonderful curative power.

It has never failed to cure RHEUMATISM in any form, Acute or Chronic.

5 DROPS [TRADE MARK]

Here is what a Prominent Physician has to say who has had 35 years of active Practice of Medicine:

I have never before in my 35 years of practice of medicine given my testimonial or recommendation to any patent medicine, but there is a remedy, the result of which has come under my own observation; for there is no Disease which has so baffled the medical skill of all ages as Rheumatism and to find a Reliable remedy for the same. At last we have found it in "5 DROPS," manufactured by the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company, Chicago, Ill.

The "5 DROPS," has proven itself wonderful for its curative power in Rheumatism, not as a Temporary Reliever only, but to give a Permanent Cure even in chronic cases. Sometime ago, I had among others several Rheumatic cases, under my treatment and prescribed for these patients the very best Remedies which I skillfully selected, but without desirable results. I then heard of "5 DROPS" and of its Wonderful Cures, and prescribed it to a few patients who found relief from its use within a few days. After that I prescribed it to a great number and to my surprise, I will say that in the course of Two or Three Weeks after they had used "5 DROPS" and "5 Drop" Plasters they were Cured.

Among these were a few who had, for a number of years, been suffering with Chronic Rheumatism, who had piloted themselves around on Crutches. They came to my office without Crutches and told me they were perfectly Well. They give all the credit to "5 DROPS" and to "5 Drop" Plasters and this is their testimony to the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company for their kindness and for the conscientious way in which they are placing these Wonderful Remedies among suffering humanity, which they told me to write to the Company as an acknowledgement.

As I have seen the Curative Power of "5 DROPS" and "5 Drop" Plasters, in a great many instances, I can Truly recommend them and also that the firm is perfectly honest and reliable to deal with. C. A. JACKSON, Physician and Surgeon, Kearney, Neb., Aug. 29, 1899.

How Long Have You Suffered with RHEUMATISM?
How Long Have You Read About "5 DROPS" Without Taking Them?

Do you not think you have wasted precious time and suffered enough? If so, then try the "5 drops" and be promptly and permanently cured of your afflictions. "5 Drops" is a speedy and Sure Cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Lumbago (lame back), Kidney Diseases, Asthma, Hay-Fever, Dyspepsia, Catarrh of all kinds, Bronchitis, La Grippe, Headache, Nervous or Neuralgic, Heart Weakness, Dropsy, Earache, Spasmodic and Catarrhal Croup, Toothache, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Creeping Numbness, Malaria, and kindred diseases. "5 Drops" has cured more people, during the past four years, of the above named diseases than all other remedies known, and in case of Rheumatism is curing more than all the doctors, patent medicines, electric belts and batteries combined, for they cannot cure Chronic Rheumatism. Therefore, waste no more valuable time and money longer, but try "5 Drops" and be promptly CURED. "5 Drops" is not only the best medicine, but it is the cheapest, for a $1.00 bottle contains 300 doses. Price per bottle $1.00, prepaid by mail or express, or 6 bottles for $5.00. For the next 30 days we will send a 25c. sample FREE to any one sending 10 cents to pay for the mailing. Agents wanted. Write to-day.

The November Demorest's appears in the old form in which it was published for nearly forty years. The change to the large size which was made in 1897 proved both popular and successful, but the old subscribers have never grown quite used to it, and in response to their requests, the magazine reverts to the original form. If there is any perceptible change in the matter in Demorest's it is, as usual, for the better. The table of contents for November provides a rare treat in fiction, as well as in scientific, social and philanthropic topics.

In Scribner's for November President Hadley, of Yale College, one of the best-known authorities on the subject in the United States, writes an article of the most timely interest on "The Formation and Control of Trusts." He gives a very clear statement of the motives and conditions that lead to their organization, and points out with reassuring emphasis some of the causes that are already tending toward their limitation as mere speculative enterprises. He believes that the question of state ownership or control will become less and less acute as a political issue.

Vick's Magazine appears this month in a new form and with some new features, adding very much, it is believed, to its appearance and usefulness. The business relations of the magazine have also undergone a complete change by entirely severing its connection with the seed business, and being issued by the Vick Publishing Company, Rochester, N. Y., entirely independent from any other business. All of these changes, it is thought, will materially conduce to the usefulness of the publication and the interests of its readers, who will, no doubt, appreciate them at their real value, and whose expressions of approval or criticism are desired.

BOOK NOTICES.

The series of articles on Christian Science which first appeared in The Standard, Chicago, a leading Baptist journal, have been published in a book entitled, "Searchlights on Christian Science." Each of the ten articles was written by a separate author, and each author treats his subject from a different standpoint, thus constituting a valuable symposium on this new thing in the world call Christian Science. The publishers of the book are Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto, and a copy in paper cover may be had for 25 cents. It is a reasonably thorough and critical study of the subject.

We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of Charles T. Russell's late book, "The At-one ment Between God and Man." This book of 500 pages on this vital question may be had of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, Allegheny, Pa. Price, cloth, 60 cents; paper, 25 cents. Chas. T. Russell is the author of some books that have reached up into frequent editions, and large sales are predicted of the present book.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

DEAR SISTERS OF MISSOURI:—Another year is numbered with the past, and it is too late for regret for opportunities lost forever, but we have the blessed privilege of looking forward to those before, and making the very best of them according to our God-given strength. Let us be up and doing while it is day.

The time for observing C. W. B. M. Day in December is rapidly approaching. Let us not miss this opportunity or else we shall likely have a cause for sorrow that will make itself felt in our work for a long time. Let each auxiliary and each woman begin to pray and plan now. Do not postpone it unless the local conditions of your congregation make it necessary, as other interests come crowding before our churches, and delay makes it more difficult to get a place.

Make it an open meeting, if possible. Our brothers and sisters can never enter into sympathy with the work unless they know more of it. Make the program short, interesting and to the point. An over-long program, however good, often loses effect by tiring the hearers. Let every number teach its lesson, or lead to it. In short, make the meeting short, bright, pointed and educational, and the congregation, being instructed and edified, will willingly give our cause an occasional future hearing.

Dear sisters, Missouri is rich and beautiful, only waiting to be invited to yield up her treasures. Untold undeveloped treasures of love and service lie dormant in the hearts of our women, and to us is given the responsibility of helping to develop them into sweeter, fuller consecration to Christ. Let us not shrink from this duty, or how shall we dare to approach the Master, with a scant apronful of leaves, when we may, if we will, go before him overladen with precious fruit. Let us patiently, prayerfully teach and entreat our sisters to enter into fuller fellowship with God, and while blessing them, broaden and round out our own poor lives until something akin to his likeness.

We should have 6,000 active workers to report next September. Shall we? It depends upon the individual worker. As no chain is stronger than its weakest link, let us beware lest our indifference helps to make our auxiliary the weak link.

As your secretary, this work is new and untried, and I feel I cannot do it without the prayers and earnest co-operation of the dear workers everywhere. I ask this of you. To begin, I ask that every auxiliary in the state shall drop me a postal NOW, containing the names and address of its officers for this year. I need this information, and I wish to write personally to each one, in the near future. This will help me very much, and I shall appreciate the help. Yours in Christian love,

MRS. L. G. BANTZ, Sec.

Baghdasarian Fund.

Alva W. Taylor, of Norwood, near Cincinnati, O., writes expressing his gratitude in our taking up Bro. Baghdasarian's case. He says: "We who knew him in his classroom and private life knew one of the purest Christian men as well as a most proficient student, and loved him for his work's sake. He is most self-sacrificing and worthy." These things being true, there ought to be little or no delay in securing the necessary funds either for bringing him to this country or to some other place where he can earn a living. We will be glad to acknowledge further receipts to this fund. The following sums have been previously acknowledged:

Hard Hit.

"By Jove, Snip the tailor has failed! That hits me pretty hard," said Jarley.

"Why, were you interested in Snip's place?" queried Perkins.

"Very much. I owe him $500. I'm afraid the receiver will make me pay up," said Jarley.

Willing to Imitate.

"Why don't you take example from the little busy bee?" inquired the man of unoriginal ideas.

"I do," answered Meandering Mike. "An' I want to call your attention to the fact dat about now is when de little busy bee lays off an' doesn' do no more work fur de nex' six months."

Modesty.

She glanced up at the clouds, apprehensively.

"I verily believe the sun is going to shine!" she faltered, paling. "And here I am miles from home in my rainy-day skirt! How shockingly immodest I shall appear!"

Modesty is the crown of womanhood, being rather more complex than the average imported hat, even.

Something to Be Considered.

Agent. Why not?

Prospective Tourist. Because when the steamer comes to land I'll have to walk half a mile to get ashore.

Treating His Hair.

"Your hair is getting thin," said the local barber to a customer.

"Yes," replied the man addressed, "I've been treating it with anti fat. I never liked stout hair."

"But you really should put something on it," persisted the tonsorial artist, in a most earnest manner.

"I do every morning," returned the customer.

"May I ask what?" inquired the barber.

"My hat," said the patron.

The habit of using ardent spirits, by men in office, has occasioned more injury to the public, and more injury to me, than all other causes. And were I to commence my administration again, the first question I would ask respecting the candidate for office would be, Does he use ardent spirits?—Thomas Jefferson.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The report that an agreement has been entered into between Gen. Bates and the Sultan, of Sulu, is important news. The text of the agreement has not yet been published, but it is presumed on good ground that it is practically the same as that which existed between Spain and the Sulu Islands before the transfer of sovereignity. These islanders of the southern group of the Philippines, numbering about 300,000, are of an entirely different family from the inhabitants of the northern islands. They are to the last degree ferocious, warlike and vigorous. They are afflicted with no tropical languor, but are hardy warriors and as ready to die in battle as to slay. Spain never exercised sovereignty over them in any proper sense, but had an agreement, the terms of which included a protectorate in external affairs and the right to suppress piracy and to prevent the periodical crusades of the fanatical Sulus, who are Mohammedans, against the nominally Christian Filipinos in the northern islands. These rights naturally passed to the United States, but Spain could not transfer to us any sovereignty which she did not possess, so it may be inferred that the agreement recently made by Gen. Bates is of substantially the same import. The Sulu, with his vigorous physique and his intense Mohammedanism, is a typical religious fanatic of the most dangerous sort. To murder the enemies of Islam is the height of his felicity and to be slain in battle against them is a sure passport to everlasting bliss. This is the opinion of Pres. Schurman, who has visited and studied them, and who says also that polygamy and slavery, which are inwrought in their religion, cannot be abolished by the United States authorities without precipitating the most savage war in our history. They must be gradually civilized and Christianized. Here is a field for heroic missionary work.

The annual report which Adjutant-General Corbin has submitted to the Secretary of War gives statistics relating to the present strength of the army and its losses during the past year, and recommendations touching several matters of comparatively minor importance. The American army at present consists of 99,160 officers and men, of which number a trifle over one-third are volunteers, while the remainder constitute the regular army. There are 32,541 soldiers in the United States; 31,344 in the Philippines and 16,553 en route thither; 10,796 in Cuba, and 3,255 in Porto Rico. The remaining few hundred are in Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands. Between May 1, 1898, and June 30, 1899, the list of killed and wounded contained the names of 3,454 officers and men, of whom only 493 were killed in action; but besides these there were 6,000 deaths from other causes, cheifly disease. An estimate based on the figures in this report shows that every soldier who was killed in battle or died from wounds, nine died from disease. Four recommendations stand out prominently in the Adjutant-General's report. First, that four fully equipped and permanent camps should be established in the four quarters of the country, to be kept in constant readiness for occupancy on short notice, and that an appropriation for this purpose ought to be made at once. Second, that officers below the rank of major-general who retire from the army by reason of age or disability should be retired at the rank above that which they held in the army. Third, that there should be a general increase of salaries by at least one-third for all officers below the grade of brigadier-general. Fourth, that a medal be awarded to each volunteer officer and enlisted man who continued in service in the Philippines after March 2, 1899, until honorably discharged.

The following summary of the elections to be held on Tuesday, Nov. 7., may be of value. State officers or members of legislature will be chosen in twelve states, viz., Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Nebraska, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota and Virginia. The greatest interest centers in the campaign in Ohio, where a governor several state officers and a legislature will be elected. There are five party tickets in the field and, in addition, Samuel M. Jones, the "Golden Rule" mayor of Toledo, who is running for governor on an independent ticket with a prevailingly socialistic platform which he framed for himself. The fight has been made chiefly along the lines of national politics, the Republicans taking their stand on the policy of the McKinley administration, while the Democrats, though re-affirming the Chicago platform, have made their fight against expansion, trusts and Hanna. The Jones following is the uncertain element which renders all attempts at prophecy futile. The outcome in Ohio may throw light on the possibilities of the presidential campaign. In Nebraska the election is of no general interest except as a trial of strength between the fusion ticket supported by Mr. Bryan and the Republican ticket. Bryan is the real issue there. The decrease of the Democrat-Populist plurality, from 23,000 in 1897 to 3,400 in 1898, makes it an interesting test of Mr. Bryan's standing in his own state. The general interest in the situation in Kentucky, where a full set of state officers and a legislature are to be chosen, arises from the fact that part of the Democratic party, disapproving of the Goebel election law, has seceded and put a rival ticket in the field as against that headed by Goebel, the regular Democratic nominee for governor. Both sections of the Democracy make Bryan, and free silver a part of their platform and the Republicans are agreed with the seceding Democrats in dnouncing the Goebel law.

The past week in the Transvaal has been marked by continued British reverses. The week opened with a calamity to the British near Ladysmith on Monday, and closed with the fall of Colenso on Saturday. The victory of the Boers on Monday was the most brilliant achievement of their arms thus far, and has a decided effect in sobering the British mind and contributing to their respect for their antagonists. The loss of nearly 2,000 men and a battery of artillery is a serious blow to the British force at Ladysmith. Gen. White manfully assumes all the blame for the defeat and admits that his plan of campaign was not well conceived. He claims, however, that his force is sufficient to hold Ladysmith indefinitely against the Boers. This will soon be put to the test, for there is no longer any possibility of a retreat toward the coast. Between Ladysmith and Durban, the seaport terminus of the railroad on which Colenso and Pietermartzburg are located, are 189 miles of railway with a dozen bridges, each of which offers a vulnerable point. Early in the week the telegragph wires along this line were cut by the Boers. The capture of Colenso on Saturday and the retreat of its garrison southward effectually cuts off Gen. White and his force at Ladysmith from retreat along the railway, and also cuts off the possibility of reinforcements except in such numbers as can break through the Boer lines.

The London Daily Chronicle says that the empire is "face to face with a repulse comparable only to the surrender of Burgoyne to the embattled farmers of our American colonies." It is an ill-omened comparison for England, but it is not without a certain degree of appropriateness as regards the military situation. However, it must be remembered that the British reinforcements are only now beginning to arrive and are not yet in the field. On Sunday of this week 6,000 troops arrived at Cape Town. Others will arrive daily, and within 10 days the British forces in South Africa will be increased by 28,000 men. Gen. Buller is already at Cape Town and may take the field at any time if the occasion demands, though his army corps will not be ready for action until late in December. As now planned, the British army in South Africa will consist of 89,634 men. Since the reverses of the past week have impressed upon the war office the seriousness of the situation, orders have been given for the mobilization of other reserves and second army corps has been ordered to be ready.

Gen. Funston, who on his return from the Philippines has been receiving most enthusiastic receptions from his fellow Kansans, has some very distinct opinions as to what ought to be done in the Philippines. He believes, in the first place, that the war can be ended within six months, that the forces now in the islands and en route thither will be sufficient to capture and effectually occupy all the strong points. Furthermore, he has an opinion in regard to the religious situation in the Philippines. He says that the first duty of the United States Government is the expulsion of the friars. This by itself would put a speedy end to the rebellion. By this he does not mean that the Catholic Church ought to be repressed or its officials excluded, but that the monastic orders, whose presence has always been a curse and a menace to the natives, should be expelled from the islands. Under the Spanish regime the friars took advantage of the intimate connection between church and state to absorb the greater portion of the crown lands, and thus became possessed of vast quantities of real estate. The natives as their tenants are oppressed by a grievous system of rack-rents in comparison with which Russian serfdom is mild and generous. If is true that the natives are Catholics, at least nominally, but the first demand by the leaders of every insurrection in the history of the islands has been, not for political independence, but for freedom from the yoke of the friars. It is Gen. Funston's opinion that the removal of this ancient grievance would do more than anything else to assure the Filipinos that the United States Government is acting in good faith toward them. At the same time he believes that the Catholic secular clergy should be encouraged and that there is little opportunity for the introduction of Protestantism.

The Philippine Commission has gone into session in Washington, D. C., for the preparation of its report. Meanwhile, a preliminary statement has been issued at the President's request to be used by him in the preparation of his message to Congress. This statement gives a thorough and it may be said authoritative deliverance upon several critical points. From a study of the islands and of previous insurrections it is shown that the idea of securing independence had never entered into any of them, but that their sole purpose was the redress of particular grievances arising from Spanish maladministration, not to be free from Spanish sovereignty, but to be free from the petty tyranny of Spanish friars and civil governors. Not until the Spanish-American war brought American forces upon the scene did the insurgent leaders conceive the idea of turning this struggle to their own account by casting off all external sovereignty. The Commission has made a thorough study of the relations between Admiral Dewey and Aguinaldo, and its conclusion is that no recognition of an official sort has ever been given to the insurgent leader. The United States Government is, therefore, in no way committed by any technicality whatever to the recognition of Philippine independence. An historical survey of the course of events in and about Manila from the time when Dewey came upon the scene leads to the conclusion by the Commissioners that the present war with the natives, however undesirable it may be, was absolutely unavoidable by any means except retreat. As to their capacity for self-government, the statement is made that the natives, while they are rated high as to general intellectual capacities, have so little education and experience as to be practically incapable of self-government. The Commission reports encouragingly that the material for intelligent administration of local affairs is there, but for the present there is every need of control by some outside power. The report concludes with this judgment regarding the effects of American control in the islands: "Our control means to the inhabitants of the Philippines internal peace and order, a guarantee against foreign aggression and against the dismemberment of their country, commercial and industrial prosperity and as large a share of the affairs of government as they shall prove fit to take. When peace and prosperity shall have been established throughout the archipelago, when education shall have become general, then, in the language of a leading Fillipino, his people will under our guidance 'become more American than the Americans themselves.'" The report is signed by J. G. Schurman, George Dewey, Charles Denby and Dean C. Worcester.

Gen. Wood, in charge of the department of Santiago, in submitting his annual report for that province, recommends that the United States force there be decreased. Such have been the effects of the introduction of American civilization into Santiago that it is now necessary to rely in a less degree upon the exercise of force for the preservation of order. The most intelligent and trustworthy part of the inhabitants have seen by this time the beneficent effects of Gen. Wood's administration, the improved sanitary conditions, the provisions for general safety and the economic and commercial improvement, and are now in thorough accord with him. Such a situation as this and a recommendation coming from the chief military authority in that province is of much significance. It indicates that the bearing of the "white man's burden" is not all a fatuous dream; that our desires for the amelioration of conditions in Cuba are not a pretense or mere cover for selfish ambition. It is difficult to talk of "criminal aggression" in the face of this recommendation of decreased force in Cuba. The Cubans themselves have come to appreciate this fact. Perhaps it is not too much to hope, in view of this, that those of our own citizens who have been incredulous upon this point may find their suspicions gradually vanishing in the light of such facts as this. What has been done in the department of Santiago needs to be done and can be done in the Philippine Islands.

Cardinal Rampollo has resigned his office as papal Secretary of State. He has not done this on account of failing health, nor from excessive modesty, nor yet from a desire to put away from him the glittering baubles and honors of this world. Cardinal Rampollo's health is good, his modesty is not excessive, and baubles are his strong point. He has resigned rather as a threat. Ever since the pope ceased to be a temporal sovereign in the reign of Leo's predecessor, several of the governments of Europe have maintained the ancient fiction of his temporal sovereignty by keeping two embassies in Rome, one at the royal and one at the papal court. France, Austria, Bavaria, Spain and Portugal have done this. Two weeks ago the finance committee of the French Chamber voted to abolish this expensive and incongruous embassy. The government might, perhaps, have protested and reversed the act of the committee, but just at present little enthusiasm could be developed in that direction. Accordingly, the vote has been approved and the Vatican notified that henceforth it will have no French embassy. The propriety of this movement is so obvious as scarcely to require comment. While the pope is unquestionably a man of influence in European politics, and while it may be worth while for the governments to keep in touch with him, there is no consistency in denying his temporal sovereignty and at the same time maintaining an embassy at his court or at the court of a monarch. Cardinal Rampollo, however, does not take this view of the situation and has tendered his resignation to take effect if the French Government persists in its action. He will be sadly missed, for of late years, since Leo has been comparatively feeble, Rampollo has been in many respects practically pope. He has conducted the business of the Vatican, has controlled its relation to the powers of Europe, has conducted in person most of the spectacular religious ceremonies in which the pope is supposed to participate and has figured prominently in all forecasts as to Leo's probable successor.

AN EXPLANATION AND STATEMENT.

A few weeks ago an Associated Press dispatch announced to the country that the editor of this paper had tendered his resignation to the stockholders at their annual meeting in October, because of dissatisfaction on the part of some of the stockholders with his editorial management. The degree of interest and inquiry which this announcement has stirred up throughout the brotherhood demands a brief explanation of the fact stated, and of the changes which have been made in the ownership and control of the stock in the Christian Publishing Company.

For some time past we have been aware that an effort was being made by outside parties to create opposition to the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST because of its attitude toward what has come to be known as higher criticism. This came to us from different sources, and called out two or three editorials in the latter part of the summer, designed to give assurance to any who might have doubts on the subject, that our position on the question mentioned was a conservative one, and the only tenable and safe one for a religious journal to hold. These editorials called out many expressions of approval from reasonable, conservative brethren, and we hoped the matter would be allowed to rest.

On the 6th day of September the editor, while still at his summer home at Macatawa Park, Mich., received a formal communication, signed by six of the stockholders of the company, and representing a majority of the stock, expressing their dissatisfaction with the editorial management of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, on the ground previously mentioned, and their unwillingness to remain connected with the company any longer under this condition. On this account they offered their stock for sale to the editor at a stipulated price, and fixed the 20th of September as the date at which an answer should be given. This time was subsequently extended to the date of our annual meeting in October. Not having been able up to that time to secure purchasers for the stock, the editor saw but one honorable course open to him, and that was to offer his stock for sale at the same price and terms, and to tender his resignation. Accordingly this was done. The resignation was not acted upon at the time, but the matter was postponed until after the National Convention.

After the convention a proposition was submitted by the protesting stockholders, offering to purchase some real estate belonging to the company in part payment for their stock. A price was agreed upon, and at a meeting of the stockholders held on Friday last the directors were authorized, by a unanimous vote, to sell the real estate, at the price agreed upon, to the dissatisfied stockholders, and to declare a stock dividend to the remaining stockholders in proportion to their present holdings. This was done, and the transfer has been made.

The stockholders who go out of the company by this change are F. M. Call, former business manager and treasurer of the company, T. W. Grafton and wife, A. M. Haggard and wife, Mrs. B. W. Johnson and E. M. Smith. Three of these—F. M. Call, T. W. Grafton and E. M. Smith—were directors of the company, and their places have been filled by A. H. Duncan and W. Palmer Clarkson, new stockholders and active members of the Central Christian Church, of this city, and G. A. Hoffmann, an old stockholder and former director of the company, of Columbia, Mo. The settlement seems to be mutually satisfactory to both parties, and has been effected in a most amicable manner and without any bitter personal feeling.

Accepting as we do the sincerity of motive which prompted the objections to the editorial management of the paper, we nevertheless feel sure that they arose, partly, from a misconception of our editorial policy and partly from a difference in our ideas of what a religious paper should be. We do not feel that it is necessary here to make any defense of our editorial management of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The assurances of sympathy and approval from so many representative men among us, and from those whom Mr. Lincoln used to call "the plain people," since this matter has become public, would seem to render such defense entirely unnecessary. We trust those who have written us personal letters will accept this general acknowledgment of same, and feel assured that their expressions of confidence have been ample compensation to us for the period of anxiety and uncertainty through which we have passed.

This much it will not be out of place to say here: In this crisis in the history of the paper, through which it has just passed, the issue, as we view it, has been that of Christian liberty. For this the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has stood, unflinchingly, in every period of its history. Its attitude toward present-day problems is precisely what it has been to the questions of the past. In the organ controversy, in the conflict over missionary societies, in the storm of opposition to M. E. Lard because of his pamphlet on "Aionios," as in the present discussion about questions of biblical criticism, our plea has been for Christian liberty and Christian charity. The tyranny of opinionism we have always recognized as the one rock of peril on which our ship of Zion is in more danger of running than any other. Because we love our glorious plea for liberty and loyalty and unity, and are jealous of its honor and of its future triumph, we have sought to defend it against every encroachment on the freedom of thought of those who hold Christ as Master, even when that encroachment is made, as it ever has been made, on the plea of superior fidelity to the Scriptures.

We look forward with pleasure to the opportunity God has given us to show that the confidence of our friends has not been misplaced. Never did the Bible occupy so high a place in our reverence, our affection and our admiration. Perish the thought forever that we could treat its holy oracles, its sublime revelations, its divine mandates, its glorious ideals, its blessed promises, in any other way than in the spirit of devout faith and reverence. If we can help to remove a false interpretation or an inadequate theory that is an obstruction to faith in any heart, gladly will we do so; but may our right hand forget its cunning and our tongue cleave to the roof of our mouth before we write one sentence or utter one word that would tend to subvert the faith of any in its inspiration and authority. As to the Christ of Nazareth, we bow before Him continually with an ever-increasing adoration. To exalt Him, to make His example the inspiration of men's lives, to help our readers into a closer and more vital relationship with Him—that shall be our supreme aim in the future as in the past.

Forgetting the things which are behind and stretching forward to the things that are before, we call upon all who love our Christ and his cause, laying aside all strifes and unprofitable questions, to co-operate with us in making the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a mightier agency than it has ever been for the advancement of the kingdom of God among men.

DR. WHITSITT ON BAPTIST SUCCESSION.

In an article in the Journal and Messenger, under the title of "On the Fence," Dr. W. H. Whitsitt, late president of the Baptist Theological Seminary, at Louisville, charges some of his brethren of the South with "riding on the fence," on the subject of succession. He says:

> They deny the existence of a universal, spiritual church, which denial is also everywhere the mark of Roman Catholic theology. Christ builded the universal, spiritual church upon a figurative and therefore invisible rock (Matt. 16:18). These excellent and esteemed brethren have accomplished an impossible feat of engineering by establishing an outward, visible church organization on that figurative and therefore invisible rock. Roman Catholic theology has established the Catholic Church on the rock where these brethren prefer to establish the Baptist denomination. Here is, indeed, a difference in detail, but not a difference in principle.

A claim for greater consistency on the part of the Roman Catholic Church might be made on the ground that they make Peter and his successors—the popes—the rock on which Christ built His church, and they have, therefore, a visible rock on which to build their visible church. Dr. Whitsitt is correct, however, we think, in saying that Baptists or members of any other religious organizrtion who identify the denomination or religious body with which they are associated with the church which Christ said He would build on the rock, and against which He said the gates of hell should never prevail, are guilty of the same sort of reasoning as Roman Catholics. The "succession" idea, by whomsoever held, involves the Roman Catholic conception of the church, not as a universal, spiritual church, but as a visible body or outward organization, in which membership is essential to salvation. Dr. Whitsitt expresses his grief that Baptists, of all the people in the world, should have been guilty of such an error. He speaks sober truth when he says, "Succession is Anti-Christ's chief hold, the main prop and pillar of popery; and yet they have made it, in some sort, the article of a standing or falling church. No greater calamity has befallen our Southern Baptist cause." This medicine may be a little bitter for our Baptist brethren of the South, but it is wholesome, nevertheless, and will do them good if they are properly "exercised thereby."

As to what is logically involved in this doctrine of "succession," as taught by some Southern Baptists, Dr. Whitsitt further adds that these brethren of the South, "having denied the universal, spiritual church and placed the outward, visible denomination on the rock, consistency requires them to assert that outside of the Baptist denomination is no salvation." "It is a preposterous thing," he says, "to conclude that any man can be saved who is not on the rock." Most of his brethren, he says, are unwilling to draw such a conclusion, however logical it may be, but the late Dr. J. R. Graves had the courage of his convictions. "He taught that local churches are the only integers of the kingdom of God; that no individual can be an integer, and hence that no individual can enter the kingdom without first entering a church. But according to him there is no local church except a Baptist Church, all other churches being simply 'man-made societies.' In other words, he held that salvation is not possible outside of a Baptist Church. He placed the church before Christ and the water before the blood." Dr. Graves was driven to this extreme position in an effort to be consistent. After he had once accepted the idea of "succession," he identifed the Baptist denomination with the church which Christ built on the rock-truth confessed by Peter.

But what a poor, restricted, impoverished idea this is of the church and the kingdom of God on earth as compared with the spiritual conception that all who are united to Christ in faith and life coustitute His spiritual body on earth! This larger conception of the church leaves room for the work of reformation in clearing away errors which have crept into the doctrine and practice of the church, and opens the way for a plea for Christian unity, which is wholly inconsistent with the doctrine of "succession," for according to "succession" all Christians are in one visible, outward organization, and are therefore already united. The Baptists themselves have a great history, and have contributed mightiiy to the advancement of the kingdom of God, by their steadfast devotion to some great truths and principles. It is a pity that their usefulness should be hampered, in certain sections of the country, by a few outgrown ideas which have no legitimate place in any religious body that is to deal successfully with the problems of our time.

We heartily endorse the suggestion of our esteemed contemporary, the Religious Herald, that there be a Pan-Baptist Council, even if it be restricted to those wearing the Baptist name. The mingling together of Baptists from various parts of the world would do much to remove those provincialisms in theology and ecclesiology which have long marred the usefulness of that great body of believers.

CHRIST'S METHOD OF REACHING THE MASSES.

We are told at the beginning of the Sermon on the Mount that the Savior went up into a mountain and sat down, and his disciples came unto him, and he opened his mouth and taught them. In this simple fact, that appears to be incidental and without significance, we have the suggestion of the divine method of instruction and evangelization. When the disciple was to be instructed he sought the teacher; when the sinner was to be saved the teacher sought him. In the capacity of a teacher Jesus sat down, and those who wished to learn sought the opportunity of hearing"—they came unto him;" in the capacity of a Savior, an evangelist, an individual soul-winner, he traveled through the land seeking the lost that he might save them. This is the divine method the church must follow if it successfully edifies itself or converts the world. We must seek the lost; the saved, who desire to learn, will seek us.

Our Lord gives us two striking illustrations of his own method of seeking lost men and the spirit of unconquerable earnestness and sustained enthusiasm in which the search is carried on. A man had a hundred sheep, and one of them went astray. An Oriental loved his sheep as a moden fine lady loves her pugs, poodles and pet cats. Each sheep was named and known individually to his master as domestic animals are with us. When it was known that one of the flock was missing there was no more rest in that household till the lost was found. Day and night, on hill and plain, they search for him. Away on the mountain wild and bare, away from the shepherd's tender care, the poor sheep wanders on, and men wander seeking for him, and when at last he is found, he is not driven, dragged, or hauled, but carried in triumph on his master's shoulders, in the midst of demonstrations of great joy by the family and their neighbors, a type of the joy in heaven over one sinner that repents. Do we search for lost men as the Eastern shepherd searches for his sheep that is lost? Is the body of a sheep of more value than the deathless spirit of a man? And then the woman with the ten pieces of silver lost one of them. Nine pieces of money in the woman's pocket and one missing. What did she do about it? Did she sit down and wait for the coin to "turn up?" Did she make up her mind to lose it, or to let some one else institute a search for it? It was broad, open daylight; but she lit the lamp that she might be able to see behind the doors, in the dark corners and under the floor. She swept the floors, that no possible lurking-place of the lost coin might be missed. She went here and there, the whole family joined in the search, every crack and crevice, every corner and cranny were examined till the coin was found; and so keen had been her sense of loss, and so great the joy of recovery, that she called in her neighbors and friends and said, "Rejoice with me, for I have found the piece which I had lost." And so we are told there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repents than over ninety-nine just persons who need no repentance. Does the church, do individual Christians, seek for lost men as the shepherd sought for the lost sheep and the woman for the lost coin, and do we rely chiefly on the individualistic method introduced and commended by the Savior? These are illustrations, of which there are several historical instances on record, of the Savior's earnestness in seeking lost souls, who have wandered from God, and his own heart of divine solicitude went into the words when he said to the church through the apostles, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature"—go, seek men till you find them.

The mission of Christ—to seek and to save the lost—is the mission of the church and of the individual Christian. The church, we fear, has in a measure reversed the divine order. Christ was seeking the lost; we are waiting for the lost to seek us. Christ went in search of the sinner; he did not wait for the sinner to come in search of him. It is the characteristic of a divine religion to seek the lost, for the lost will not seek the Savior till sought by him. One of our chronic church problems, from time immemorial, is how to reach the masses. A more pertinent question would be, How are the masses to reach us with our present inadequate methods? In the first place, there are no masses to reach. Men are not reached in masses or in classes; they are reached as men, man by man. Men are not saved en masse or lost en masse; they are saved or lost as individual men. Men are born one by one, they die one by one, and they must be sought and saved one by one. The church has been waiting nearly two thousand years for the world to seek, but the world will never seek the church; the church must seek the world. Lost men will not come to us; we must go to them. If Christian men and women went in search of lost men as the shepherd went after his wandering sheep, as the woman searched for her lost piece of money, as Jesus the Christ went seeking the publican and sinner of his day, as the men of our time seek learning and wealth, honor and office, the problem of the world's salvation would in a large measure be solved. A great need of the kingdom of God is the consecrated buttonholer, the keen-eyed, quick-witted, spiritual sharpshooter, who can single out and pick off the soldiery of darkness as Boer riflemen are picking off English officers in the Transvaal war. If you know a lost man, go after him! He may not welcome your message. He may repulse and elude you. His ignorance is his trouble. He does not know that you have anything that he needs. But go after him. Go with holy persistence and loving doggedness. If you fail to find him, let some one else go. If he fails, send a third and a fourth and a fifth, till the lost is found. This is the chief and the most efficacious method of reaching and saving the lost.

Hour of Prayer.

THE NEEDED GUEST.

(Rom. 8:6-17; Jno. 14:15-18).

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Nov. 15th).

CENTRAL TRUTH: The real test of Christian character is the possession of the Spirit of Christ, which is the Holy Spirit. This possession is conditioned on love of Christ and obedience to Him.

These Scriptures, which constitute the topic of the lesson this evening, grapple with the real problem of Christian life. They should be carefully studied and even memorized, if possible, that their mighty import may the better be taken up into our thought. The passage from the Roman letter sets forth the fact that the Christian life is a warfare between "the mind of the flesh" and "the mind of the spirit." The former, we are told, is "death," while the latter is "life and peace." The reason why "the mind of the flesh" is death, is that it is "enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be." This, of course, means death in the deepest and darkest meaning of the term.

It follows from this that "they that are in the flesh cannot please God." But who are "in the flesh" in Paul's meaning of the phrase? Evidently, those who are dominated by the flesh—its appetites and lusts. Those who live in the lower region of their nature instead of the higher are in the flesh. Those who live for material rather than for spiritual things are in the flesh. These cannot please God. It is worth while here for each one of us to raise the question as to what is the dominant motive of our life.

But who are "not in the flesh, but in the Spirit?" The answer is, "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. But if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His."

We often raise the question concerning ourselves, but oftener, perhaps, concerning others, as to whether they have obeyed this or that command of Christ in proper form. We too seldom, perhaps, raise the question concerning ourselves as to whether we really have the Spirit of Christ, and whether or not, therefore, we are really His. But this, after all, is the supreme test of our discipleship. The passage from John, which contains the words of Christ, lays down the condition upon which we enter into the possession of the Holy Spirit or receive as a Guest the divine Comforter. "If ye love me," says Jesus, "ye will keep my commandments." This is inevitable. The man who claims to love Christ and refuses to do what He has commanded is either self-deceived or is seeking to deceive others. But on this condition of a loving obedience Jesus adds, "And I will pray the Father and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may be with you forever, even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive; for it beholdeth Him not, neither knoweth Him. The "world" here stands for those who do not love and obey Christ. Such do not receive the Spirit.

Truly, this Holy Spirit is a needed Guest in every heart. He is called "the Comforter:" do we not need cnmfort? He is the Advocate: do we not need one to plead our cause? He is the Spirit of truth: do we not need Him to lead us into a larger comprehension and appropriation of truth? He brings with Him, when He comes into the heart, a whole train of glorious virtues and graces, as love, joy, peace, self-control, meekness, temperance, patience. Do we not need all these to make our lives a blessing to the world?

But think of what an honor it is to receive and entertain such a Guest. Is our heart a fit chamber for Him? He will make it the Palace Beautiful if we will allow Him to enter and give Him full scope to guide and control us.

We are persuaded that the great need of the church to-day is, first, the realization of our need of the Holy Spirit and a proper appreciation of His work in perfecting our redemption and in fitting us for service, and then an earnest and prayerful seeking for the infilling of the Holy Spirit. Let not this meeting close without an earnest prayer from every heart that the Holy Spirit may enter in and take more complete possession of our lives and guide them to the glory of God and the good of our fellowmen.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee that Thou hast created us with spirits so capacious that nothing but God can fill them. We beseech Thee that Thou wilt create within each of us a great hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Thou hast promised Thy Holy Spirit to those that love and obey Thee. Thou knowest our hearts and whether or not we love Thee and are striving honestly to do Thy will. We pray for Thy Holy Spirit to dwell within our hearts in a fuller and richer measure than ever before, to the end that our lives may be more fruitful in every good word and work, and that so living in communion with Thee here, we may be prepared to dwell in Thy immediate presence forever. For Christ's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

What is the heart, about which the Scriptures speak so much? No book in the world lays such emphasis upon the heart as does the Bible. No teacher among men went down through all human exterior to the very core of human life as did Jesus of Nazareth. Men look at the outside; God looks at the heart. Human law concerns itself chiefly with the motive —the purpose—of the heart. The righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees consisted of conformity to external rules. But Jesus taught a righteousness that results from the purified heart. A man really is, in the sight of God, what he purposes in his heart. According to Jesus, whatever good or evil there is in man's outward life proceeds from the heart. Make that right and the conduct will be right. All reforms of whatever character that ignore this fundamental teaching of Jesus are doomed to failure. Human conduct and human character can only be elevated as the hearts of the people are purified.

But still the question recurs, What is the heart? In its scriptural or figurative sense it is to the spiritual man what the material heart is to the human organism. There are moral heart-failures which result in spiritual death, just as there are physical heart-failures which result in physical death. The heart, in its scriptural sense, involves, often, at least, if not always, both intellection and affection. It is the source from which emanate thoughts, motives, purposes, deeds. It is the very breeding-place of character, and to be pure in heart is to be pure in thought, pure in motive, pure in affection. To be large-hearted is to have a large capacity for friendship, for sympathy with our fellowmen, for loving those even that are unlovely. Blessed is the man who is both pure-hearted and large-hearted, for such an one can see God, not only in nature and in revelation, but in his fellowmen. It is the pure-hearted and large-hearted who are loved of God and their fellowmen.

But while the large-hearted man is the one whom we love, he is also the one who suffers most. He bears other people's burdens. He enters into sympathy with all forms of human suffering about him. Men who are in trouble apply to him for sympathy, and they always receive it, but they are not always aware that virtue or vitality goes out along with the sympathy. A few minutes before Bro. Atkinson went out to the Convention Hall of the Grand Hotel, to make his last speech, he came to where the writer and another brother were sitting, and addressing the other brother he said, in substance: "Here is a man whom I love." "Yes," we replied, "some men have hearts and you cannot help but love them." His reply was, "Yes, but a man who has a heart must suffer for it!" "Very true," we replied, and added, "Did it ever occur to you that of the three persons crucified on Calvary it was only the central figure whose heart was broken?" Bro. A. replied, "I had never thougnt of that before, but that is true, because He was the only one of the three that was carrying in his heart the burdens of the world!" And then we passed out together to the hall, where he made that last and memorable speech, corroborating in a most remarkable way the conversation just held in the hotel parlor.

We believe it was Dr. Hoyt whom we once heard say that after a walk through Glasglow or Edinburg, in Scotland, passing through a part of the city noted for its squalor and misery, until his heart was sick at the wretchedness and suffering he witnessed, he exclaimed to himself, "How can God witness all the wretchedness and misery of the world without His heart breaking?" After pondering this question for awhile in his chamber, there seemed to come to him a voice saying, "My heart was broken on Calvary because of the world's sin and woe!" And then he understood the meaning of the cross as he had never understood it before. Have we learned what it is to enter into the fellowship of Christ's suffering? Are we carrying any part of the burden of the world's sorrow on our hearts? Are we seeking to diminish the sum-total of human woe and wretchedness? If not, how unlike the heart of Christ must be our hearts!

Questions and Answers.

1. Does the Bible give any account of a previous marriage of Joseph, the husband of Mary, prior to the one with Mary, the mother of Jesus?

2. Why is Sunday or the Lord's day called the first day of the week?

E. W. Payne.

1. There is no account in the Bible of any such marriage.

2. For the same reason, we suppose, that Saturday is called the seventh day of the week. It is evident that if we have the weekly division of time at all that one day must be the first day, and the day that we call Sunday or Lord's day happens to be that day.

Please give an explanation of James 5: 13-20? Martin Crim.

This passage directs those who are suffering to pray. What could be more natural? It directs those who are cheerful to sing praise. This, too, is so natural as to need no explanation. Perhaps the part concerning which explanation is needed is that which directs that if any one be sick he should "call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him." It is this prescription of prayer, together with the anointing with oil in the name of the Lord, that seems out of joint with modern methods of medication. And yet, is it not probable that we have vastly underestimated the remedial power of prayer in sickness? This anointing with oil was a part of the religious feature of the treatment, and was in harmony with the custom of the times. We do not understand that this passage prohibits the use of such other remedies as science and experience have taught to be valuable in the treatment of disease, nor must we understand that every case of sickness can be healed. We must interpret this passage of Scripture in the light of others and in the light of reason. With these qualifications we have no hesitancy in saying that the apostle's advice might be followed to-day with great profit.

As an illustration of the power of prayer the instance is cited of Elijah praying "that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth for three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit." This example of Elijah is quoted to encourage prayer.

The epistle closes with the statement that if any err from the truth and one convert him he shall thereby save a soul from death and shall cover a multitude of sins. This is said to encourage a practice that is too often neglected, of seeking to win back to the truth those who have fallen into error.

Referring to an answer in a former issue of the paper a correspondent asks whether a church which, not only "occasionally neglects" meeting for worship, but which has discontinued its meetings on the Lord's day, can be regarded as a Church of Christ.

We should say not. The church that forsakes the assembly and the ordinances of the Lord's house ceases to be a church, and we fear that its individual members who permit such a condition of things to exist have already ceased to be Christians in fact and in character, if they ever were so.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

V. China and Africa.

A. McLEAN.

The first representative of the Foreign Society entered China January 29, 1886. Dr. W. E. Macklin was sent out to Japan as a medical missionary. On reaching the field he discovered that medical missionaries were not needed in that country. After some correspondence with the executive committee, and conference with his associates in Japan, he decided to open a mission in China. He spent six months in Shanghai, studying the language, and then moved to Nankin and called for reinforcements. Dr. Macklin is a Canadian by birth. He took his medical degree in Toronto. After spending some time in practice he offered himself for the foreign field. Before his departure he spent six months in New York City taking special courses to qualify himself mor e thoroughly for the service. When he left his teachers pronounced him the best all-around man they had ever sent out. A. F. H. Saw and E. P. Hearnden joined him that year. They went out from the West London Tabernacle. They had been indoctrinated and trained by W. T. Moore. The next year E. T. Williams and F. E. Meigs and their families sailed from San Francisco for China. Mr. Williams resigned one of the best pulpits among us to become a missionary. At the time of his appointment Mr. Meigs was one of the Sunday-school evangelists of Missouri. Both were widely and favorably known. Their going made a profound impression on the minds and hearts of many thousands. On arriving at their destination they rented and repaired some rooms in an old Buddhist temple and began the study of Chinese. Additional men and women have been sent out since from England and America. Several experienced and efficient workers already on the field joined the mission. These were as follows: James Ware and family, Charles E. Molland and family, Mrs. E. P. Hearnden and Mrs. Ella C. F. Saw. There are ten men and fifteen women and forty-seven native helpers connected with the mission. Work is carried on at five stations and seven out-stations. Nine churches have been established; these have a combined membership of 400. The additions for the past year number 122. The children in the mission schools number 232.

Nankin is the center of the work in China. Nankin is situated on the Yangtsz River and is about two hundred miles from its mouth. It is a walled city, with a population numbering half a million or more. Nankin was once and for centuries the capital of the empire; it may be the capital again. There are thousands of towns and villages that can be reached by the workers in Nankin. The society has now in that city a hospital, two dispensaries, a college for boys, a school for girls, a chapel and a number of other places where the gospel is preached regularly. At the present time the workers are as follows: Dr. W. E. and Mrs. Macklin, F. E. and Mattie Meigs, Frank and Ethel B. Garrett, Mrs. Ella C. F. Saw, Miss Emma Lyon, Miss Mary Kelly and Dr. Daisy Macklin. Dr. Macklin has charge of the medical work. Each year he sees about 20,000 patients. Only the worst cases go to the hospital. The Chinese have physicians of their own and go to them first; they spend their substance on them. If they get no relief they go to the foreigner as a last resort. People suffering from cholera, smallpox, scrofula, rheumatism, blindness, syphilis and other forms of disease throng the hospital for treatment. Some have traveled hundreds of miles seeking health and cure. Every in-patient is instructed in things pertaining to God. Bible classes are taught in the hospital. Out-patients hear the Word preached daily; each one receives a Gospel and some tracts. The medical work is designed to open the hearts of the people to the message of salvation. Everything that is done is intended to contribute to the furtherance of the gospel. Dr. Macklin is a fluent and effective speaker. He delights in preaching. He has several circuits and goes out and speaks good words for the Lord Jesus. In his spare minutes he writes tracts and articles for the papers. Mrs. Macklin is a sister of Mrs. Garst, and is a granddaughter of Jonas Hartzell. She has four children to train up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. She assists in the mission as she is able. Mr. Meigs is president of the college. The students number 35. The great majority of them are Christians. There is in the college a Christian Endeavor Society and a Young Men's Christian Association. Twelve of the boys keep the morning watch. The students are being prepared for useful and noble lives. Most of them are taught trades. In the industrial department they are given to understand that manual labor and scholarship are not incompatible. Some of these boys will become teachers; others, it is hoped, will become evangelists and colporteurs. Thus one of the most pressing needs of the mission will be supplied. Mr. Meigs goes out in different directions to preach; in tea houses, in temples, in the marketplace, along the roadside he finds opportunities for making known to the Chinese the unsearchable riches of Christ. Mrs. Meigs has two children and her household duties to look after. She gives as much of time and thought and strength to the work as she can. Frank Garrett is a graduate of Drake University. He has recently taken charge of the church at Nankin. The membership numbers 172; the pupils in the day school, 45. He visits Pukeo, a large town across the river, three times a month, and preaches there. Mrs. Garrett is a graduate of Oskaloosa. She has a child to rear and teach. She gives two hours a day to the college, and spends some time in teaching the women the first principles of the gospel. Mrs. Saw is busily engaged in the work among the women and children. She goes out from time to time on evangelistic tours. She encourages the other missionaries and proclaims the gospel to those who have never heard the joyful sound. Miss Lyon is a graduate of Bethany College; she entered the field in 1892. Miss Lyon has charge of the girls' school. She has two Sunday-schools, and visits and receives visits from the women of the city. Miss Mary Kelly is a graduate of Hiram; she does evangelistic work in Nankin and in other parts of the empire. She has visited Chu Cheo and Lu Cheo fu, and has spoken the Word of life to the people of those places and in the towns through which she has passed. Dr. Daisy Macklin assists in the hospital and in the dispensaries.

Early in the history of the mission the workers felt that it would not do to confine their labors to Nankin; they must reach other towns and cities with the truth. The second place entered was Shanghai. It was necessary to have a station there, as that is the gate to the empire. Shanghai is by far the most influential commercial center in the Far East. The population numbers about 450,000. Shanghai is not so large as Canton, Hankow or Pekin, but it is very much more important than any of these. It is a great literary center. The Missionary Recorder, the Review of the Times, the Missionary Review, the Daily Herald and other papers are published there. Shanghai is one of the most cosmopolitan cities in the world. The Lord sent a man to begin work in that city. James Ware had been in China for more than ten years; he had been an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. He knew the language and the people and the customs of the country. On making the acquaintance of Mr. Williams and Mr. Meigs he found that his convictions respecting questions of doctrine and the ordinances accorded with theirs. He threw in his lot with our people in China. Ever since he has been working in Shanghai under the auspices of the society. W. P. Bentley went out in 1890. Soon after reaching the field he was assigned to Shanghai. Mr. Bentley is a graduate of the Ohio State University and of Bethany College. Mrs. Bentley came from Braddock, Pa. There are now two churches in Shanghai; the combined membership is 87. The pupils in the day school number 93; those in the Sunday-school, 108. In one church the membership has doubled in two years. Recently Mr. Ware has opened a new work in a new section of the city. It is in the neighborhood of the great cotton factories. A mandarin has given him the use of a large room for a girls' school. There is a school for boys in the same vicinity under his supervision. Mr. Ware is one of the busiest men in China. He is one of the committee to revise the present Chinese version of the Scriptures; he reads the proof-sheets as the work passes through the press. He superintends the stations in Tsungming, a large island in the river with a population of a million souls, and in Tung Chow, a city with a population of 80,000, and in Tseu-Saw, a city with a population of 30,000, and in Yung Shing Saw and in Yang King. There are many other places that he visits and in which he preaches while going to and from these out-stations. His aim is to diffuse a knowledge of the gospel as widely as possible. Mr. Bentley has oversight of the Christian Institute. That is a hive of busy workers. In that building day schools and night-schools are carried on; Bible women and evangelists and colporteurs are trained; the gospel is preached every day in the year, and literature is sold and given away to those who will read it. Mr. Bentley edits and publishes a monthly paper entitled the Eastern Star.

The next station was opened in Chu Cheo. That place is north of the river and forty miles distant from Nankin. It is on the main road between Nankin and Pekin. Imperial couriers and merchants and travelers and pilgrims and coolies pass through daily. Chu Cheo is a place of considerable political importance. The society has there now W. R. Hunt and family and Dr. E. I. Osgood and family. Two homes and a chapel have been built. The present number in the church is 21. Last year 504 patients were seen. Schools have been opened for boys and girls. Before the advent of Dr. Osgood Mr. Hunt did the medical work. He took some lessons in medicine from Dr. Macklin and was able to cure simple forms of disease. The serious cases were sent to Nankin for treatment. Dr. Osgood is a classical graduate of Hiram; he received his medical degree from one of the Cleveland schools. Mrs. Osgood is a daughter of O. G. Hertzog, and is also a graduate of Hiram. Much work has been done round Chu Cheo. In that district there are not less than five millions of people in need of the gospel. A building has been rented and an evangelist employed in Luhoh, a town of 40,000, and some forty miles away. The membership there numbers ten. Yu Ho Tsz is fifteeen miles from Chu Cheo. There Evangelis Shi and his devoted wife live. It was through her instrumentality that the church was planted. She is known as a hot-hearted Christian. It was her purpose to erect a house of worship; she proposes to bear the expense herself. Her neighbors said, "We will help you;" they have done so most gladly. A neat chapel is the result. Every night the bell rings and the people gather to hear the Word of life. The fame of that church has been carried as far north as Pekin. Four miles beyond Yu Ho Tsz is the out station of Kwan wu wai. There, too, the gospel is preached and the youth of the place are taught. The missionaries in Chu Cheo have made evangelistic tours all through the district.

Wuhu is fifty miles up the river from Nankin. Charles E. Molland and family and Miss Effie D. Kellar are located there. Wuhu has a population of 100,000. It ls an open port. From Wuhu caravans start in several directions into the interior. In Wuhu the society owns a good home, but no other buildings. Mr. Molland and his helpers preach every day and night in the hired chapel and in the inns and on the streets. Work is also carried on at Wu wei Cho. The believers in Wuhu number 64; the children in the Sunday-school, 36. For several years Miss Rose Sickler taught the women and children in Wuhu; that school is still taught and has 36 pupils. Miss Kellar has gone to this field; she is supported by the churches in Kansas City, Mo.

Lu Cheo fu is about 150 miles due west from Wuhu. It is an inland city with a population of about 100,000. In the vicinity there are a million people or more that can be evangelized from that center. Lu Cheo fu was opened by T. J. Arnold. It took him three years to rent the first house; the citizens did not want their soil defiled by the presence of outside barbarians. The man that did rent them a house was for that act incarcerated for several months. Dr. James Butchart was the first missionary to live in Lu Cheo fu. On his arrival the people wanted to drive him away; he would not oblige them by going. Before many weeks a prominent merchant was dying of hernia. When the Chinese physicians confessed that they could do no more, Dr. Butchart was called in for consultation. He proposed a surgical operation as the only possible method of saving the man; his proposal was accepted by all concerned. The operation was performed without delay. With the blessing of God the patient recovered. Then a feast was made for the great Western doctor, scrolls were hung on the walls of the hospital and congratulatory speeches were made. Since that time there has been no talk of chasing the foreigner out of town. Dr. Butchart was born in Canada. He received his medical training in Cincinnati and in New York. In his courses he took every gold medal and every prize that was offered. C. B. Titus and wife are now in Lu Cheo fu. Mr. Titus is a graduate of Hiram. Thus far he and Mrs. Titus have been giving most of their time to the language. As they have found opportunity they have spoken to the people of the love of God as revealed in the person of his Son. By their lives and by numerous acts of kindness they have done what they could to commend the gospel to the favorable consideration of all with whom they have had to do. Dr. H. G. Welpton has had charge of the medical work in Lu Cheo fu in the absence of Dr. Butchart on furlough. Dr. Welpton is a graduate of Drake University; he is a recent recruit. Before leaving for the field he spent several months in the postgraduate school in New York. Now that Dr. Butchart is on his way back to Lu Cheo fu, it is likely that Dr. Welpton will be sent to some other station. Mr. Arnold who first entered that city will return after a little; it is his purpose to make Lu Cheo fu his home and to spend his life in work in that city and district. Already a church has been organized; the present membership is 19. Pupils in the Sunday-school number 14. Dr. Welpton treated 300 patients last year. His purpose was not to treat any, but to give himself exclusively to the study of Chinese. It was impossible for him to do this; the suffering came to him and sought relief; he could not turn them away. From the first the believers in Lu Cheo fu have been taught self-support. The first year they gave about $1 each for the support of the gospel; they also made a contribution to the treasury of the Foreign Society. They are collecting funds now for a chapel. When their poverty is remembered it will be seen that their gifts are on a generous scale.

Since the work began in China several of the workers have died. The following laid down their lives: Mrs. Carrie Loos Williams, A. F. H. Saw, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Hearnden. Mrs. Williams gave six years of devoted service to China; her beautiful character and good deeds will be long and lovingly cherished by that people. She came home for surgical treatment, fully expecting to return in a few months. Contrary to the predictions of all the physicians, she died within a few hours of the operation. She is buried in Columbus, O. Mr. Saw while caring for the starving fugitives took typhus fever and died from it. He was a giant in body and was able to endure hardness as a good soldier. He was never so happy as when talking to the people about the gospel of God's grace. He loved the Chinese and sought to guide their feet into the way of peace. Mr. Hearnden was drowned. He had been out visiting some of the converts. Before the time for his return there was a heavy fall of rain and one of the streams that he had to ford was much swollen. In swimming across it his horse kicked him and he sank to rise no more in this life. Mrs. Hearnden died of a broken heart. The doctors said she died from a disease that has a long Latin name, but this was her real malady. They were loving and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided. Among those who died should be mentioned little Marion Macklin. Though her name is not found among the missionaries, she did much to win the Chinese to the glad tidings. In her case the Scripture was fulfilled, "A little child shall lead them." She was a source of joy in her home, and not only so, but in the whole mission. Other changes besides those made by death have been made. Mr. Williams resigned in 1896. For a time he was one of the editors of one of the Shanghai daily papers. Subsequently he was interpreter to the consul-general and for a time vice-consul. It was his desire for a long time to give his life to literary work; he believed that in that capacity he could serve the Chinese more effectively than in any other way. Before his resignation he became the editor of the Missionary Review of China; he still holds that position. At the present time he is in the employment of the Chinese Government. He is preparing text-books for the Chinese schools. Miss Rose Sickler Williams is engaged in the same kind of work. Their home is in Shanghai. The two bright boys, Edward and Loos, are in school at Chefoo. Soon after the death of her husband Mrs. Saw, with the consent of the society, removed to Nankin.

China is one of the great mission fields of the world. The population is estimated at about 400,000,000. Of these 100,000 are enrolled as believers. There are missionaries in each of the provinces and in Mongolia, Manchuria, Tibet and Korea. When it is remembered that the country has been open for a few years only, that the difficulties to be encountered and overcome were numerous and most serious, and that the force even now is comparatively small, the success that has rewarded the efforts that have been put forth and the sacrifices made is extremely gratifying. But what has been done thus far compared with what remains to be done is only as a drop in the ocean. Much is said about the conservatism of the Chinese. What is said is all true. But the Chinese do move, nevertheless. Railroads are being built, factories are being opened, the mineral resources of the empire are being developed. Recently a steam launch has been put on the route between Wuhu and Lu Cheo fu. The distance that a year ago took two weeks to cover can now be covered in twenty-four hours. A new day is dawning on that great land. Now is the nick of time for enlarging the work.

The first missionaries of the Foreign Society to Africa were sent out in 1897. E. E. Faris was under appointment for more than a year before an associate was found. Mr. Faris is a son of one of our well-known Texas preachers. He was educated in Add Ran University. After much searching Dr. Harry N. Biddle, of Cincinnati, volunteered and was accepted. He received his education in the common and high schools of the city in which he was born. Here he took his medical degree. They were a pair of noble brothers. On the fourth day of March, 1897, they sailed out of Boston for the Dark Continent. They went by Liverpool and London and Paris and Antwerp. They were six months reaching their field. They went far up the Congo and along several of its large affluents seeking a suitable place for the first station. They found a number of such places, but the authorities were not willing for them to occupy them. All sorts of excuses were made. They were told that it would not be safe for them to live among the savage natives. The fact is, they did not wish any Protestants in Catholic territory. The natives begged them to remain among them; they said, "White men of God, do live and work in our midst." For many months they had no certain dwelling-place. They lived in tents or in the open air. They were down with fever many times. Living thus, Dr. Biddle's health failed. His physicians told him that his only hope of recovery lay in his immediate return home. He left on a ship bound for Antwerp. The ship touched at the Canaries. He was so low that he was carried to the English hospital. In course of two days he died. Dr. Biddle was cast in the heroic mold. There was something in him akin to Livingstone. He gave his life for Africa. As soon as his death was reported the society began to look for some one to take his place. Dr. Royal J. and Mrs. Eva N. Dye volunteered and were sent. They are both from Ionia, Mich. Dr. Dye took his medical course in New York. Mrs. Dye spent two years in Brooklyn in special preparation. Last March the Baptists turned over one of their stations on the Upper Congo to the Foreign Society. They did this because their missions covered more ground than they could cultivate. The property at Bolengi cost over five thousand dollars; it was sold to the society for half that sum. Dr. Dye has two clinics daily. All the diseases that flesh is heir to are found in that region. He has treated the old chief of the village and cured him. Traders resort to the station for medicine. Mrs. Dye is clothing and teaching the children. Mr. Faris is repairing the property, studying the language and preparing to preach the gospel far and near. This work is the continuation of the work done in Africa a generation ago. Early in January, 1854, Alexander Cross, a freedman, and his family reached Monrovia. He spent two months pioneering and preparing for his life work. He overtaxed his strength and exposed himself to the burning tropical sun. As a consequence he took the African fever and died. The Disciples of Christ never gave up the thought of resuming work in Africa. But forty-three years came and went before any man was willing to go out to that field. That reproach has now been rolled away. We are doing something to win the people from savagery and superstition and to civilization and Christianity. What we have done is only a beginning. Reinforcements must be sent out and the necessary facilities supplied that the laborers may prosecute the work most effectively.

A PLEA FOR THE HOMELESS.

BY GEORGE DARSIE.

(CONCLUDED.)

8. And this leads me to that particular phase of this great subject on which I wish to put the utmost emphasis, that it deserves our most generous support because it espouses and champions the cause of our homeless congregations throughout the land, our brothers and sisters in Christ Jesus, children with us of the same tender Father.

Their only hope of a church building is in this fund. They cannot build of themselves. They cannot borrow the money from banks or trust companies. Even if they had the credit they cannot afford the rate charged or the risks run. Their sister churches of the vicinage cannot aid in putting a roof over their heads. Their path is hedged in on every side save one. For them it is our Church Extension Fund or nothing. It alone has made their cause its cause. It alone stands out before us their mighty advocate, their friend in time time of need. Its plea to our great brotherhood is a touching plea in their behalf. "Help me that I may help your homeless brethren. Their appealing cry has come up into my ears, and is wringing my heart with pity. This is their hour of darkness, this is their time of sorest need. Help me to heed that cry ere by wanton and continued neglect they perish of discouragement and despair."

And what a host they are! The Congregationalist body is to-day mourning over the fact that it has three hundred unhoused churches in the United States. And it is making appeal upon appeal to its membership in their behalf. But well might it mourn and well might it appeal if it had twenty seven hundred unhoused churches as we have. No other body in the land is so far behind proportionately in this regard as we are. This is of course owing largely to our rapid growth as a people—the largest during the past decade of any church in our land. Four hundred new congregations a year is our present rate of progress. And two hundred of them are unable to build without help. And our Church Extension Fund with its present resources can aid in building only a little more than fifty churches annually. Twenty-seven hundred behind now, and falling still further behind at the tremendous rate of one hundred and fifty churches a year! That is the situation we are compelled to face. I am free to say that I marvel at the corresponding secretary's equanimity no less than at his extreme moderation in setting his stakes for a quarter of a million dollars by the close of the year 1900. Why, with twice that amount right now we could no more than keep up with the procession, while to wipe out the enormous arrearage of twenty-seven hundred homeless churches it would require more than a dozen years if our loan fund were this moment increased to a round million. A certain Englishman after an extended visit to America was asked his opinion of this country and his reply was, "Too beastly prosperous." That seems to be the trouble with our church. It is "too beastly prosperous." It is growing so fast as to be absolutely embarrassing. And what shall we do about it? Cease our aggressiveness and organize fewer churches till we catch up? Never! That is the counsel of the coward. That would be like saying to your growing boy, "Quit your awful eating, for you grow so fast that I can't half supply you with clothes." You would not think of saying such a thing, but would toil the more manfully and save the more carefully in order to supply him. And that is just what we must do for our homeless congregations. We must abate not one jot or tittle of our aggressive evangelism. We must make no fewer disciples and organize no fewer churches than we are making and organizing now, but we must go to work with might and main to double, treble and quadruple our Extension Fund and make it equal to the tremendous demand upon it. To refuse so plain a duty is to demonstrate our inappreciation of the favor and blessing of God so signally bestowed upon us.

I plead for the homeless among us because they are our brothers. They are our Father's sons and daughters. They represent the same divine and holy cause that we all represent. Like us, they, too, are marching under a banner on which is inscribed the motto, "Back to Christ." They are earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. They are trying to restore the New Testament gospel and the New Testamant church. They are striving for the union of all God's people on the one foundation. They stand for God's Word alone as their sufficient rule of life, and for a right division of that Word. They stand for Pentecost as the birthday of the church, and for Acts 2:38 as the law of entrance into it. They stand for the dispensation of the new covenant as against the dispensation of the old, or rather the dispensation of a confusing and confounding mixture of the two. They stand for a repudiation of the bondage of authoritative human creeds, for the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, for the gospel as the power of God unto salvation, for the wholesome doctrine that faith cometh by hearing and that baptism is for the remission of sins, for the divinely given name of Christ's followers, for the clear and definite promises of God as the solid assurance of pardon and acceptance, and for all that standing for these positions mean. They stand for the courage required to uphold them, for the ceaseless battle involved in their advocacy, for the strength needful to resist the perpetual temptation for their surrender, for the steadfast endurance of the opposition and the odium, concealed or unconcealed, with which in certain quarters they are always regarded. In short, they stand for the same great struggle for a pure Christianity that all of us are making, the only difference being that they stand in weakness and homelessness against overwhelming odds. I am speaking the exact truth when I say that these are to-day the heroes of our cause in this great land. They have shown themselves thoroughly and pre-eminently worthy of our help. They had enough faith in God to shoulder the responsibility of forming a church with no hope of a church building. They were willing to undertake the heavy task even at such a disadvantage. And now it is ours to see that faith and heroism like theirs shall not go unrecognized and unrewarded.

I plead for them because without the guaranty of permanence which a church building gives few of them can hope to live and fewer still can hope to prosper. Their destiny for the future is vitally connected with the question of a church home. The marvel is not that with a need so great they die so soon or do so little, but that they live so long and do so well. To each of them would Jesus say as he once said to the church at Philadelphia, "Thou hast a little strength and [yet] hast kept my word and hast not denied my name." Their loyalty and fidelity are worthy of all praise. They deserve at our hands, not cold indifference and neglect, but the highest respect and honor. And now it is for us to say whether they shall go forward in a career of glorious usefulness, or be doomed to the paralysis of perpetual houselessness. It is for us to say whether they shall perish in their helplessness, or live by the power of the helping hand of Church Extension. As Queen Esther of old, a kneeling suppliant, waited at the feet of the king for the golden sceptre that would bid her live, so do they await from us the gracious generosity that would open out before them their only hope of prosperity and life. If it was worth while to call them into existence, it is ten times more worth while now to strengthen and perpetuate that existence. Every reason that can be given to justify their original organization rises up before us, not only to justify, but also to demand their preservation. Better never to form a church than after it has been formed to tie its hands and block up its pathway and consign it to eternal inefficiency by denying it a church home.

It is with me a profound conviction that our people are guilty of a most sinful waste of power and resources in permitting the continuance of this enormous list of unhoused churches. And it is a waste as foolish and unnecessary as it is sinful.

To crowd the work of home evangelization and at the same time to cramp the work of Church Extension, as we are doing, is to make us like a ship at sea that puts out sail and throws away ballast. The coming storm is sure to topple it over. Our Church Extension Fund is the greatly needed ballast of our good ship Zion, that enables it to sail on its steady course to a glorious destiny. And our safety for the future is directly dependent on its large and rapid increase.

I do not believe that any duty now confronting our people is more pressing or more intimately connected with their permanent prosperity than the vigorous pushing of the work of Church Extension. Our home missions have gone to the front this past year as never before. Our home society has had the unprecedented increase of a hundred and fifty per cent. in its receipts. That of itself, in order to preserve the rightful balance of things, necessitates a like increase this next year in the receipts of Church Extension. Whatever else is neglected this great work must not be allowed to fall behind. It must both keep up and catch up. It must take in ballast just as fast as the home work puts out sail and at the same time try its very best to provide the needful ballast for the dangerous amount of extra canvas already out.

As there has been a glorious rally to the American Christian Missionary Society in 1899, let there be an equally glorious rally to our Extension Board in 1900. That is but the fitting and logical thing for us to do. Let the qnarter of a million aimed at come and more than come. Let all records be broken and all expectations exceeded. I want to see our Extension Board embarrassed in a new way, not by our wonted *under*giving, but by our unequaled *over*giving. I want to see it saved the humiliation of being compelled to say "no" to four-fifths of our homeless brethren that call upon it for aid. I want to see it at last given the power to gladden the hearts of these hundreds and hundreds of our faithful and long-waiting little churches which, though weak and homeless, have yet so bravely and loyally held aloft the banner of the cross in the sure confidence that the great brotherhood to which they belong would one day hear their cry and hasten to their rescue.

SOME MINISTERIAL STUDIES.

F. W. COLLINS.

The minister of the gospel, more perhaps than any other person, should be a student. He should be so for his own sake, that his thought may be fresh and his mind kept at its best activity. He must be so for his people's sake, that he may be their leader in the highest and best sense of the term. The majority of people are not interested in the abstruse critical discussions of the day, and it is not at all necessary that they should be, but they like to know, and it gives them confidence to know, that their preacher is not ignorant of these things. Furthermore, it goes simply with the saying that before the pastor can lift his people to higher levels of thought and life he must himself occupy the highest position. He cannot push them before him, but must draw them after him. And to be at his best spiritually he must be at his best intellectually. Moreover, there are in most communities a few persons who read widely, think carefully and study closely certain subjects. If the preacher cannot command the intellectual respect and confidence of these, who are in a measure the intellectual leaders, he suffers a loss of influence with those who do not belong to this class. He must not be pedantic, but his words must bear the unmistakabls stamp of knowledge and culture. That was a wise remark of one of the distinguished educators of our brotherhood, that "a preacher need not preach philosophy, but he must preach philosophically." Likewise, the preacher need not, must not, preach criticism, but his speech and his thought, in matter and method, should reflect the highest and best scholarship of the day. This is the aim to be reached so far as the most strenuous effort shall render possible.

The problem with most pastors is how to command the necessary time and money. Salaries are small and the pastoral duties many and various. One need not read a great number of books if one knows the books that are most worth reading. Fortunately, many agencies operate to assist the pastor in solving the problem. One of these has proved helpful to me.

The American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago, has added to its many lines of activity a new department for professional readers. The eight courses of reading now in operation are on the Pentateuch, Old Testament Prophecy, the Hebrew Psalter, the Life of Christ, the Apostolic Age, Johanine Problems, Christianity and Social Problems and the Preparation of Sermons. The books to be read are selected by the "Council of Seventy" and are the best books on the subjects, according to the combined judgment of some of the best biblical scholars of the country. I can speak experimentally only of the course on the "Apostolic Age." The books constituting the course are Schaff's Church History, Vol. I, McGiffert's Apostolic Age, Weizsacker's Apostolic Age, Conybeare and Howson's Life of Paul, Ramsay's St. Paul, the Traveler and Roman Citizen, Sabatier's Apostle Paul and Neander's Planting and Training of the Christian Church. These afford sufficient variety for a fairly complete view of the field traversed. Schaff is scholarly and conservative. McGiffert is no less scholarly, but is less conservative and came near being the victim of another heresy trial. His work was characterized by Prof. Shailer Matthews at the time of its appearance as "the most notable contribution to theological literature yet made by any American." It often calls forth earnest dissent, but is stimulating reading indeed. His discussion of Paul's doctrine is exceedingly interesting and valuable. Lyman Abbott expresses the opinion that "he has discovered Paul." Weizsacker is perhaps more extreme than McGiffert and in the same direction. Conybeare and Howson's Life of Paul is valuable for its wealth of information, not for a d scussion of critical points. Ramsay's theme is the historical trustworthiness of the book of Acts. He approaches his subject from the direction opposite to the one usually taken, estimating the book not from its agreement with Paul's epistles, but from its harmony with Roman provincial law, history and geography.

The result places Luke in the front rank of great historians, and demonstrates the statesmanlike wisdom of Paul in his plan to conquer the Roman Empire for Christ. The work of Sabatier is a scholarly discussion of the development of Paul's doctrine. This doctrine came as a divine revelation, but not independently of the apostle's experience. "The apostle's circumstances, his external conflicts and practical necessities have left their impression deeply marked upon his doctrine. The course of this historical development we must now proceed to recover and describe." These words give a fair statement of the purpose of the book. The work is marked by rare sympathy and spiritual insight. Of Neander it is sufficient praise to say that after half a century of progress in criticism his work commands a place in a course of critical reading.

The institute places the busy pastor under great obligation by thus indicating the best literature on these important subjects, and bringing it within such easy reach. The books may be loaned for thirty days upon the payment of the postage and ten per cent. of the cost price. A preliminary condition is subscripton to the American Journal of Theology ($3.00) or The Biblical World ($2.00). Ten years' careful reading of the latter leads me to value it highly. A card of inquiry to the institute, as above, will bring full information. My only purpose in writing is to confer a favor on my fellow pastors. Systematic study is a practical necessity. Those who have not formed other plans should begin at once one of these professional reading courses.

Our Budget.

—Covetousness is a secret sin.

—Many prayers are falsely so called.

—Philanthropy cannot be hid under a bushel.

—As we go to press the battle of ballots is on in tweve states.

—The meetings now being reported indicate a foward movement all along the line.

—Our readers will find our Correspondence department unusually large and interesting this week.

—Bro. A. McLean is giving our readers an excellent account of our missionary work in foreign fields in his historical series.

—A note from Miss Mattie W. Burgess, of St. Joseph, Mo , received just as we are going to press, says: "Our dear mother fell asleep in Jesus on Friday, Nov 3. She had said that she wished to go while the sun was shining. She had her wish, although she was unconscious. Friday was a bright, beautiful day and at 12:55 P. M. the end came." Miss Burgess will have the sincere sympathy of the brotherhood in the loss of her dear mother, by whose side she has been watching so tenderly since her return from India. Further notice of her death will be given soon.

—A. M. Harvuot, of Cincinnati, Ohio, informs us that the question of a "School of Pastoral Helpers," to be organized in Cincinnati, has not been abandoned, but the work of the Jubilee Convention has delayed it. The question is now being considered by some of the leaders and we shall expect some report of their counsels in the near future.

—The time is at hand when if B. H. Roberts, congressman-elect from Utah, shall be prevented from a seat in the next congress, or if seated, to be unseated, action must be taken. The way to act is to have every legal voter sign a petition to his representative in Congress calling upon him to use his utmost endeavor to prevent the shame. Petitions may be had in any quantity of the League for Social Service, 105 East 22nd St., New York City, and when signed by all the voters you can get in each district return again to the League, of which Josiah Strong is president. Anti-Mormonism literature may also be had of this League for distribution. Let the women take the matter up and see that these petitions are circulated, signed and returned without delay. Send to the League for Social Service at once for the petitions and literature.

—The abiding elements of Christianity are faith, hope and love, and the greatest of these is love, but there were brethren in the Corinthian Church who thought differently. In their estimation the gift of tongues, or of healing, or of prophecy, was a much greater gift. And to this day there are those who hold to the same view, Paul to the contrary notwithstanding. In their estimation the gift of healing bodily afflictions is of greater importance than the remission of sins, the gift of the Holy Spirit or the bread of eternal life. This is an error fatal to spiritual development in any congregation. It makes the body of greater importance that the soul and encourages people to follow Christ for physical rather than spiritual blessings.

—The report of the conference on benevolences in the Jubilee Convention, given by the secretary, Mrs. W. D. Harrison, in the October issue of the Orphan's Cry, is exceedingly interesting. The report presents many of the facts and features of the conference in a concise, clear and interesting way. Mention is made of the leading speakers, some of their leading thoughts and other important things of the conference. It would be a treat to you to read this number of the Orphan's Cry. It is so full of good things about the Home and the conference at the convention that you could not fail of great interest in its pages. You will then know more about the B. A. C. C. and its work than ever before, and the knowledge will be to your soul as honey to the mouth.

—The report of the Christian Orphans' Home, prepared for the Jubilee Convention by Sister Rowena Mason, president of the board, and read by Sister Bantz, appears in the Orphans' Cry for October and is of great interest to all whose hearts are in sympathy with the orphan. We commend it to the careful consideration of our readers. The knowledge of the good done by the establishment of this home will gladden the heart of any child of God.

—The picture on our first page this week is that of one of the foremost preachers and authors of the present age, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, England. The great power of this man, both as a preacher and a writer, is his spiritual insight into spiritual things. We are sure that the picture of a man so widely known and so profitably read will be appreciated by our readers.

—We are too much inclined to teach our children only the things that have been rather than the things that are or ought to be, and our colleges and universities are not wholly free from this limitation. Investigation should have free course and discovered truth, however revolutionary, should be accepted. But at this point both church and state are not infrequently confronted with things which stagger them, and rather than accept the truth they try to muzzle the investigator. If political and religious institutions could have education to proceed along fixed party lines there is no doubt but that they would be more liberally endowed than they are, but the world's progress would soon stop on that basis. To make true progress the freedom of the pioneers of thought must not be molested.

—The kind of religion that comes to a man without effort and purpose is about as dangerous an element as an education that comes from the street university. Neither can a man afford to be irreligious or religionless any more than he can afford to be a fool or an ignoramus. The wise thing for every man is to secure the true religion and then work at it as he would his farm, or trade, or other life avocation, and on this line he will not be bothered about evidences, etc. The fruits of righteousness will satisfy his soul. It pays to be a Christian.

—There is a fine meeting in progress at the Second Christian Church, this city, with twenty-seven additions the first two weeks. Ten were immersed last Sunday evening. The meeting was begun by Brother Fannon, of the First Church, but he took sick and had to retire at the end of the first week with six additions. The meeting was then continued by Brother Pittman, who has been preaching for them for several months with the result stated. This meeting will enroll Brother Pittman upon the list of successful evangelists and may lead to his entire consecration to the work. At all events the Lord is using him to a glorious end in the field in which he is now laboring.

—We have received a clipping from a local paper in Marion, Iowa, concerning a difficulty which has existed in the Christian Church in that place, in which Geo. E. Platt, the pastor, is involved. The verdict of the committee examining the case involves the resignation of Mr Platt and of the elders and deacons of the church for a re-election. A note appended to this verdict says: "It is understood that Rev. Platt intends soon to take orders in the Episcopal Church, to which he formerly belonged." We know nothing of this case except what is stated in this clipping, but it is safe to say that any preacher among us who, because of real or imaginary wrongs, proposes to take orders in the Episcopal Church is certainly out of place in our ministry, and is likely to be out of a place while he remains with us.

—At cur regular meeting of the City Mission Board, of this city, in this office, on last Saturday at 4 P. M., the outlook or churches this winter appeared bright. Protracted meetings are being held at the Second and Carondelet Churches with good results, and other churches are to hold meetings this winter. The young church in Carondelet is now in good working order, in a comfortable home, and will soon be turned over to a regular pastor and the city evangelist sent into a new field. Several of the churches having a debt have materially reduced their debts, thus lightening their financial burden and bringing in corresponding encouragement. On the whole the outlook for a general forward movement in the St. Louis churches is good.

—The secret of success in church government is love. The moment a man, whether the pastor, an elder or a deacon, begins to assume authority, lay down the law, dictate the policy, etc., etc., friction begins, and friction when it becomes vigorous produces fire, and fire when it is finished leaves only bitter ashes. A church must have both discipline and policy, but these should be the invisible forces of the church and not the visible ones. Keep love to the front and there will be but little trouble about rules and forms. God's government of the world is invisible to the eye. We simply see the results of that government and not its hidden forces.

—The September-October issue of Business in Christianity deserves special attention because of the Jubilee Map which is mailed as a folder within its cover. The board very justly asks that this map be carefully posted up in a conspicuous place in your church. These maps were circulated throughout the general convention, and no more beautiful souvenir of Church Extension could be obtained by anybody. The map is up to date. It shows the work of Church Extension up to September 30th, '99, the close of the eleventh year of the board's work. As this is the year for the rounding out of our first quarter of a million dollars for Church Extension, and as all eyes will be turned toward Kansas City during the year, on account of the board being located there, and because of the next nationa convention meeting there, each preacher should take a special interest in seeing this map posted in a conspicuous place in the vestibule of the church. Remember that the Jubilee Aftermath for Church Extension is to be held at the time of the National Convention meeting in Kansas City in October, 1900, and the motto is: "$50,000 for Church Extension this year in order to reach $250,000 by the time of the next convention." Churches that have not taken the September offering should do so sometime this fall, and send the remittance to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec , 600 Waterworks Building, Kansas City, Mo.

—On last Friday, at 5:40 P. M., a meteor of great brilliancy passed across the heavens in the north. It was traveling from east to west in majestic style and was an impressive sight. Its intense whiteness and incandescent tail indicated very high speed. Its path was probably from north of east to south of west, rather low in the northern heavens and inclining toward the earth in its plane. When about due north, where the writer stood, there was a partial explosion, from which issued various colored flames, but that of the blue was the largest. There were frequent scintillations from the extremity of its tail and from its head in the explosion; but the explosion did not seem to destroy or disturb the journey of this fiery visitor, although the writer's vision of it was shut off by forest trees soon after this event. Relatively, the head of this train of fire seemed to be about four to six inches in diameter and its tail from four to six feet long; but of its absolute dimensions, distance from the earth and rate of travel we have no conception.

—C. A. Freer, Columbus, Ohio, referring to a statement in our tribute to Bro. Atkinson, that "he read all our papers" suggests that this would be a capital idea for all who can afford it. No paper, he says, represents everything among our people, and those who want to be representative men should read different papers. He adds: "You say some things that do not suit my taste; so does Bro. Lord and Bro. Haley, but reading after you all stirs up my own 'thinker' so much that I find it the greatest help to individuality and independence of thinking." But that is a very different state of mind from what is manifested by some others who are always "grieved" or "pained" at any difference of opinion among our scribes. But whatever stirs up one's "thinker" ought to be regarded as a blessing. It has never been our aim or ideal, however, to make the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST represent one single phase of thought. There is not a number published that does not contain variety in modes of thought, of expression and in conception of themes treated. We like the idea, however, of our brother, of having all who can do so take a number of our leading papers.

—The article which we have entitled, "A Business Talk to Business Men About Christianity," which appears elsewhere, was the first of the addresses delivered to the Business Men's Meeting at Cincinnati, of which the last one was delivered by Bro. Atkinson. Aside from this fact, which lends it special interest, we commend it for its fine thought, and for its modern and up-to-date conception of the relation of business of every kind to the kingdom of God, and the manifestation of God's will in all the forces and activities of life.

—The assistant editor of this paper spent last Wednesday in Kansas City, Mo. While there we called upon the Register Publishing Company and found the place full of business. The Register-Review was coming from the press and others were as busy on job work, of which the Register Company is having a fine run and doing some excellent work. Bro. Wilson, the junior editor of the Register-Review, arrived from the country in the afternoon and is to give the paper his personal attention this winter. In the evening we attended prayer-meeting at the First Church. The theme was "Lessons From the Jubilee Convention," on which Brother Richardson spoke with interest. A cold wave had greatly reduced the attendance that evening. En route home, that night, we had the company of G. A. Hoffmann, the senior editor of the Register-Review. The weather on our return was of the most disagreeable kind; a veritable snowstorm was on hands for the day. But as we seldom get so far from the office it is no wonder that it snowed.

"What's in a Name?"

Everything when you come to medicines. A sarsaparilla by any other name can never equal Hood's, because of the peculiar combination, proportion and process by which Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses merit peculiar to itself, and by which it cures when all other medicines fail. Cures scrofula, salt rheum, dyspepsia, catarrh, rheumatism, loss of appetite and that tired feeling.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

—It is said that "of the ten billion dollars' worth of gold produced in the world since the discovery of America, more than one-half has has been produced since 1860 and more than one-fourth since 1885. Or, to put it in other words, one-half the gold product of the last 400 years has been produced within 40 years and one-fourth within 15 years." Just so, but how about the ratio at which the love of gold has increased?

—The very hearty recognition of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church and its work by the A. C. M. S. at the Jubilee Convention in the resolutions so unanimously adopted, will greatly strengthen and widen the influence of this important agency in the Master's work. The brethren will now feel that the Benevolent Association is a national rather than a local affair and that they can contribute to its success without the fear of opposing, burdening or hindering any of our great missionary organizations. It may also be looked upon as a step toward that closer unity of all the Master's work now in our hands toward which we are fast approaching, and in which the work of this Association shall be an integral part.

—Education is for the preacher rather than for the pulpit. Too often it serves to separate between the preacher and the people. One reason that uneducated preachers are so much appreciated and do as much good as they do is that they are in touch with the people and preach within the range of their knowledge. Too many of our educated preachers talk of things in language unknown, practically, to the masses. This is not a plea for ignorance in the pulpit, but of adaptation to conditions. The preacher should be an educated, not an elevated man. His education should not in anywise destroy simplicity, sympathy and touch with the people. Things brought within the comprehension of the common people will always be appreciated, however educated the man.

—The congregation of Seymour, Ind., will dedicate their new house the 26th inst. F. M. Rains will have charge of the services. H. L. Veach is the pastor.

—If some of our evangelists had held the meeting held by Peter on the Pentecost following the coronation of Christ and reported it for some paper the report would not probably have been contained in one short chapter as it now is. They would have argued about thus: "This is a meeting of unusual importance and should have unusual space in the columns of your excellent paper." Brethren, if we believe in the inspiration of the apostles of Christ and in the editorial oversight of the Holy Spirit in their writings fewer words in our reports of meetings and treatment of great themes would be more consistent with that faith.

—Prof. Geo. B. Herron has tendered his resignation of the Chair of Applied Christianity in Iowa College to its trustees. As the reasons assigned for his resignation are somewhat unusual and as Prof. Herron is prominently before the public as a reformer if not a revolutionist we think it proper to give his reasons for this step in his own words, as follows:

It seems to be the now generally accepted opinion of your constituency that men who have money will not give it to the college while I remain in its faculty; that the churches will not support the college because of my interpretation of the teachings of Jesus. I sympathize so deeply with your difficult responsibility that I am unwilling to leave you in a position where you are forced to choose between my freedom to teach and the financial support upon which the college must depend for its growth. However you may have felt like disowning my teachings as individuals, you have sought patiently to take the full consequences of my remaining as a teacher. I am glad to relieve you of this responsibility. Let me say that I do this with no thought of its being a sacrifice. Not for a moment will I allow myself to be thought of as a martyr to the cause of free teaching.

It is certainly true that the doctrines of property which I hold are subversive of the existing industrial and political order. I do believe that our system of private ownership of natural resources is a crime against God and man and nature; that natural resources are not property and cannot be so held without destroying the liberty of man and the basis of the religion of Christ. This common and equal right of all men to the earth and its resources as their common inheritance from God I expect to always and everywhere teach, but I recognize that the constituency of Iowa College is equally sincere in believing such teachings to be dangerous and untrue.

Educational institutions, as now organized and supported, dependent as they are on gifts of money from the existing social order, afford no place for the teaching of disturbing social ideas, though it cannot be that human truths that are new will always be outcast and vagabond on the earth, even when rudely spoken, until accepted and made a part of the past. As college education is now organized, however, I question any man's right to teach that which the college constituency does not want.

—In his article on Christianity in Business, in the Ladies' Home Journal for November, Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon, says:

Perhaps no age has equaled this for disturbances and unrest and warring interests in the business world. If the principles of Christianity were applied to the whole business world it would cause a shock that for the time being would result in what might indeed prove to be the greatest financial panic of the ages. But out of that result would emerge a new order of buying and selling that would result ultimately in more financial success on the part of more people than the world has ever witnessed. Ultimately, love will pay in dollars and cents better than selfishness. On selfish principles the business world to-day does not succeed even in the matter of making money; that is, not for any length of time nor for the masses of the people. Love in business would lose less money, and actually distribute the real earnings of toil among a far greater number of human beings than is possible now under the present system.

PERSONAL MENTION.

C. W. Dean has closed his work at Harvey, Ill., and Bro. E. A. Orr, who came from the Baptists to us, will take his place there.

O. H. Williams, of Newcastle, Indiana, has entered the field as evangelist of the sixth district in that state.

J. P. Davis has accepted a call to preach for the church in Fairfield, Neb., and is now at work in that field.

We are informed that Robert Grieve, of Duluth, Minn., will probably accept a call to Goshen, Ind.

J. B. Briney, of Moberly, Mo., has been engaged with the church in Cameron, Mo., in a protracted meeting.

Prof. W. E. Garrison, of Irvington, Ind., spent last Lord's day in this city, visiting his parents. He is looking in excellent health since his "Wheeling Through Europe."

The editor of this paper was in Columbia, Mo., on Monday of this week on matters pertaining to the interests of the Christian Bible College, of which mention will be elsewhere made.

Owing to throat trouble of a serious nature I. N. Grisso has tendered his resignation at Martinsville, Indiana, but we are told that the congregation will probably not consider the matter until after an operation has been performed.

A. M. Haggard, of Des Moines, Iowa, and T. W. Grafton, of Rock Island, Ill., were in the city last week in the interest of their interests in the Christian Publishing Company.

Prof. Collins' recent article in our columns entitled "The Nameless Terror," is receiving some very high compliments in the press of his city, Shelbyville, Ill., as a literary production.

After five years' service for the church in Seattle, Wash., J. N. Smith has resigned and will spend a few weeks in evangelistic work before accepting another pastorate.

Joel Brown, field agent for the Orphan Home, was in the city last week in consultation with the board. His cheerful visit to this office was appreciated.

A strong sermon on "Spiritual Indifference to the Great Sins of the Age" was recently preached by T. H. Blenus, of Jacksonville, Fla., and published in the Times-Union of that city.

On Friday of last week, W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., was called to this city to conduct services at the funeral of an old friend of his by the same name and whom he joined in marriage many years ago in Kentucky.

The Orphan's Cry for October makes very kindly mention of the addresses of Mrs. H. M. Meier, B. B. Tyler, F. G. Tyrrell and others at the conference on benevolences at the Jubilee Convention.

E. C. Stark has resigned his work in Champaign, Ill., and can hold protracted meetings where desired, or will take regular work anywhere within fifty miles of Champaign. Congregations desiring a part of his time write to him there.

Sister Lois A. White is going from Indianapolis, Indiana, to Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio. The country church "Stowe," for which Cuyahoga Falls is the post office, is the church of which the father of Sister White was the pastor at the time of his death and in which her mother and only sister now hold their membership.

P. J. Rice, pastor West Jefferson Church, Ft. Wayne, Ind., and his wife were recently treated to a surprise visit from a large number of the members of his congregation. The result was an increase of the debt of gratitude in the heart of the pastor and his wife toward their brethren and sisters in the Lord.

J. Durham, of Irvington, California, called to visit the editor of this paper and his wife on his return from the Jubilee Convention. Of course, he was not unmindful of this office during his visit, andwhile here he came near telling some tales of the school days of the editor and his wife in old Abingdon College, but refrained.

B. B. Burton, pastor of the First Christian Church, San Jose, Cal., besides ministering to his large congregation is taking a special course in sociology and organic evolution at Standford University, which is located 18 miles from San Jose. Brother Burton was recently tendered a jubilee reception by the church and the occasion is said to have been a very enjoyable one.

W. R. Seytone preached by request for the United Presbyterians Oct. 22. The congregation that Bro. S. preaches for is building a new place of meeting, but for the present are housed in the Presbyterian church, kindly loaned them until the new church house is completed. The new church house will be centrally located, a modern building, and will give a much better chance for work there. Bro. Seytone would like to put any church wanting a preacher in communication with one who, with his wife, is a good worker.

In a lettler from W. T. Hilton, of Beloit, Kan., he says: "I have resigned the pastorate of the church here to accept a call from the Grant St. Church, Omaha. It is with sadness that we give up the work here. All the members have been good to me and mine. They have been loyal and true and ready to co-operate in every good work. This is a missionary church. Its offerings to missions during the year just closed was $1.22 per capita. Beloit is one of the best churches in the state. I go to Omaha because the call seems to be from God. In that city of 150,000 we have but two churches, and they are not large ones. Surely, there is room there for work. This call, while unanimous on the part of the brethren at Omaha, was unsolicited by me. We leave many friends behind at Beloit, but hope to make as many new ones at Omaha."

Wheeling Through Europe—XII.

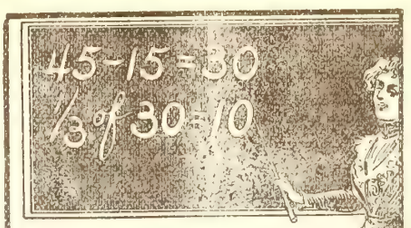
SOME GERMAN ROADS AND TOWNS.

As we were saying, Munich is famous for art and beer. For the visitor whose primary interest is in art no city in Germany can be compared with Munich. Likewise for him who seeks German beer at its best there is but one place to go—Munich. So, since every one who travels in Europe is interested in art (or pretends to be), and since all German and most non-German travelers are connoiseurs of the national beverage and the others want to "see what it is like," the secret of Munich's popularity is not far to seek.

I never saw a city which in its external appearance put forth greater claims to be artistic than the Bavarian capital. Setting aside the older quarters, which are intricate and interesting, the main streets are broad, straight and parklike, and the handsome public buidings appear to be something added to the city rather than a real part of it. Most of them have the air of existing merely as specimens of architecture with no special function to perform except to make the city beautiful. King Ludwig I., of Bavaria, was a great builder and his special predilection was for reproducing classic models. Accordingly, it was through his activity, little more than half a century ago, that Greek temples, Ionic porticos, Doric columns and Roman triumphal arches were strewn in rich profusion over a city which, without them, would be, no doubt, a very pleasant place, but could make no claim to pre-eminent beauty. It is rather too obvious that the whole thing has been done almost at a stroke, with none of that ripening and mellowing which come only with time and slow growth. Suppose the Dewey Arch should be kept standing in New York as a permanent next-door neighbor to the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and that all at once a couple of dozen other buildings, in a style of architecture equally heterogeneous to that of Broadway and the Avenue should be distributed over the city. New York would doubtless be beautiful, but we would feel that the city was having beauty thrust upon it rather than developing into an appreciation and embodiment of the beautiful. Munich is a good deal that way.

Still, Munich is beautiful, even if its architecture does look too much like the creation of one king and too little like the embodiment of the city's life, and I believe that as a matter of fact it is just as artistic in its inner spirit as it is in its outer show. The two great galleries, the Old, containing the paintings of the old masters, and the New, containing modern works, are full of things that can never die. It was in the latter that I came unexpectedly upon Dagnan-Bouveret's Madonna of the Workshop, long known by photograph and loved, but now first seen. And it was in the Old Gallery that I began to make the close acquaintance of Albrecht Durer, painter and engraver of the high-time of German Renaissance and a strenuous character withal. It is worth while to spend several days in Munich just for that.

And besides the art, there is the beer—if indeed the latter is not to be included in the former. Doubtless a German would say that the art of Munich is divided into four classes: painting, sculpture, architecture and beer. Of the excellence of the foaming beverage I do not feel qualified to speak, but of its prevalence here I know a good deal. We enter a restaurant to get dinner and, as we take our seats, a buxom waitress glides forward and inquires, with full assurance that she is right, "Zwei bier?" We drop into a cafe in the evening for after-dinner coffee and it is luck if the waiter does not bring beer before we can tell him that we don't want it. We step into a confectioner's for an ice and when we ask for something to go with it, meaning cake, they offer us—beer! The suprise of an Italian waiter when you refuse wine is surpassed only by the consternation of a Munich waiter when you refuse beer.



If you want to see the most German sight in Germany, go any day about noon to the "Hofbraukeller," which, being interpreted, means the "court-brewery-cellar." This is perhaps the most famous brewery in Germany, but it is more than a brewery. It is a whole series of beer halls and restaurants of various styles and grades, patronized by all classes of people from the street laborer to the cream of society. However far apart they may be in the social scale, these many patrons have one common interest—they all want beer. The "keller," or cellar, the vast, low room which occupies the ground floor, is where you will see the German populace eating its dinner and washing it down. There must have been five hundred men in the place when I went in, and there was plenty of room for more. In respect of cheapness, cleanliness and culinary excellence it was perhaps the most successful workingman's restaurant I have ever seen, and I have been at pains to observe them in severa countries.

At Munich my beloved Damon deserted me, took the train (though no man hates to do it on a bicycle trip more than he—unless it is myself), and made a bee-line for London to spend three weeks in England before sailing. Having alredy spent some months in that paradise of cyclists, I preferred to seek new roads and scenes in Germany and France. But now the time was getting short and my solitary ride must of necessity be a somewhat hurried one, and so must be the narative of it.

Leaving Munich in the middle of the afternoon, nightfall found me at a village inn forty-five miles away. It was a curious sort of inn, built in a haphazard, hit-or-miss fashion around the four sides of an open court which bore an unsavory resemblance to a barnyard, and when they led the way to my room they took me up a winding stair by the light of a flickering candle and conducted me through a narrow hall which turned five right-angles and went up and down three half flights of stairs before we reached the chamber. From my window, which overlooked the courtyard, I could see the ostler making frantic attacks on my wheel with a bucket of water and a bunch of straw in a futile attempt to clean it and thereby establish a claim on me. I shouted at him from the window to desist, but he interpreted my outcry as encouragement. When I attemped to rush down stairs to head him off, difficulties at once developed in regard to those three half-flights and five right-angles. It wasn't so easy to do them in the reverse direction without a guide and when, after groping about for ten minutes in inky darkness, I finally reached the ground floor, the ostler had done his worst to the wheel, had locked it up in some place unknown to any but himself (as bedfellow to a restless mule, I surmised) and had gat him off to the other end of the village. But after all the wheel got no great damage, and when the zealous ostler stood before me in the morning in an attitude of receptivity, with one hand at his cap and the other slightly extended, palm up, gratitude to Providence triumphed over my sense of justice to the ostler and I allowed his claim.

It was a short morning ride from this halting-place to the bank of the Danube River. It has not yet traveled far from its source in the Black Forest and is still a little river whose clean bed and clear water suggest canoes and possible trout. I had left the main highroad shortly after leaving Munich and had struck across country aiming to touch the Danube as near as possible to the "Befreiunghalle," or Hall of Freedom. A ride of a few miles along the river bank brought me to this imposing structure, a monument to the German army and its many victories. The building, in form a huge circular drum surmounted by a conical dome stands, on a cliff several hundred feet high, rising directly from the Danube and overlooking its valley, and below it lies the pleasant town of Kelheim. About thirty miles farther down the river, to the east beyond Regensburg is the "Walhalla," or Temple of Fame, a building similarly situated and containing busts of the most eminent Germans of all ages. This is externally a Greek temple of purest Doric type. Internally both buildings are resplendent with variegated marble and are floored with exquisite marble mosaic, for the preservation of which visitors are required to shuffle about over the floors with huge felt slippers over their shoes. King Ludwig I., the builder of modern Munich, was the promoter, and it is said, also, the architect of these two remarkable edifices.

Exactly half way between Regensburg and Nuremberg (it is just one hundred kilometers, or sixty two miles, between the two) night overtook me again, and I found a humble inn after some search—for a Bavarian inn is not always easy to identify as such even in broad daylight, not to mention dusk. From foregoing remarks it may be gathered that I do not consider German inns an unqualified success. They seldom offer anything to eat which the traveler can receive with more than the most meagre enthusiasm. They put you to sleep, be it January or July, in a bed with one sheet and piled mountain high with feather beds by way of covers—the German bed being as immutable in its make-up and as independent of climatic variations as a berth in a Pullman sleeper. They are not as quaint and curious as the average English inn and not nearly as clean. Their proprietors do not understand how a traveler, who arrives at dusk, unpacks

Ten Lost Years.

Figure it for yourself. From the age of fifteen to that of forty-five a woman gives one-third of her time to the suffering incident to the recurring periodic function. Ten years of suffering! And this condition of things is popularly accepted as natural, and endured as a feminine disability for which there is no help! Is there no help? There is help for every woman and for almost every woman perfect healing in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It insures regularity, dries the drains which weaken women, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It is a temperance medicine—non-alcoholic and non-narcotic.

"I was so weak I did not have breath to walk across my room," writes Miss Isabel Miller, of New Providence, Calloway Co., Ky. "My periods occurred too often and the hemorrhage would be prolonged and the loss of blood very excessive. I also had spells which the doctor said were fainting fits. I did not gain strength from one monthly period to another; was very weak and nervous all the time. Was confined to my bed for three months and the doctor told me I would never be any better. I lived in this way from sixteen years old to twenty-three. I was at last advised by a kind friend to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I did, and before I had taken two bottles of it I could work all day. I took in all six bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' and about five vials of Dr. Pierce's Pellets. I used no other medicine. I have never had a return of this trouble since." his baggage and stables his wheel in the entrance hall, can possibly want anything but a glass of beer, and they manifest little sympathy with his eccentricity when they find that he wants to eat and sleep. Black Forest inns are reputed to be the best in Germany, and I have reason to believe that this faint praise is inadequate to their virtues. Bavarian inns, so far as my experience extends, are uniformiy abominable.

Their redeeming feature is that they are interesting. They may starve you and rob you of slumber, but they show you phases of humble life which the comfortable traveler does not see. This inn, midway between Regensburg and Nuremberg, was one of the most unpromising of its class, but it showed me a sight worth many discomforts—family prayers conducted by the "biermaedchen" in the tap-room of an inn. I had finished my supper, consisting of a leathery omelette, a section of unspeakable sausage, black bread without butter and a certain vigorous, not to say violent, variety of cheese, and remained at the table in a corner of the tap-room writing the foregoing opinion of German inns, down to the beginnining of this mitigating paragraph. Eight or ten men were at another table drinking beer at the rate of one mug per hour and talking loudly and simultaneously, as usual. The servants' meal time has come. The girl who has been serving the beer brings in a large tin basin of some sort of broth or stew and places it on a table in a corner. The other members of the family appear, two women and three men, all apparently belonging to the least intelligent class of house and farm servants. They stand, facing the crucifix which hangs on the east wall, with bowed heads and clasped hands, and the barmaid begins the intonation of a prayer, a chant in monotone, uttered with such tremendous rapidity that only an occasional intelligible word would reach me. Midway of the prayer the others join and the thanksgiving continues in unison to the end—perhaps three minutes in all. Meanwhile, the convivial assembly has become silent and reverent, and at the end all cross themselves. Then the hubbub of noisy conversation, jest and argument begins afresh, exactly where it left off. When the meal was finished, which was not long with its single course and single dish, the thanksgiving was repeated in similar fashion. It was a companion picture to the "Angelus."

I suppose it is possible to imagine, a city which would be a more perfect living picture of the past than Nuremberg, but it may reasonably be doubted whether such a one ever existed. More than any other city in the empire Nuremberg stands as the representative of Old Germany, the Germany before the Thirty Years' War. Storms of war have swept this continent and every period of its history has been opened and closed by a human whirlwind of destruction. It is little wonder that a succession of such cataclysms has left to the Europe of to-day only broken and scattered monuments of the civilization of past centuries. Here in Nuremberg we have a town which has been fortunately saved from the wrath of man. It does not represent Mediævalism, though one instinctively thinks of it so, but it represents the time of the German Renaissance, the age when, following the lead of Italy, Northern Europe was being infused with new life, when the dawn of modern civilization was brigthening the East, when learning was waking after its long sleep, when literature and art were coming to their inheritance, when the earth was full of an abounding and overflowing life. Old things were passing away and all things were becoming new.

It was at that time that there arose in Nuremberg a group of men who, working at their handicrafts in the temper of artists, bodied forth this exuberant spirit in works of the brush, the chisel, the graver and the pen. There was Adam Kraft, who worked in stone, and Viet Stoss, who worked in wood, and Peter Vischer, who worked in bronze, and above all there was Albrecht Durer, greatest of German artists, who not only painted pictures, but engraved them on wood, so that the printing press, then newly invented, could be the ally of his art and scatter its products abroad in multiplied copies. And, with all this carving and painting and sculpturing, they builded them a city which, taken as a whole, with its intricate streets, curious archways and corners, its jutting gargoyles and overhanging windows rich with clustered carvings of men and things, its high, steep roofs from which peep row upon row of eyebrow windows, formed a complete embodiment of the spirit of German Renaissance. There it stands to-day, and one may not know that spirit or feel its subtle charm unless he has seen it in the concrete at Nuremberg.

WHAT AN ENGLISHMAN THINKS OF AMERICA.

This and my next letter will be written on American soil. After that my letters will again arrive from my native land. Meantime, I wonder whether the majority of my kind readers are as anxious as hundreds I have recently been meeting to know what I think of this colossal country. I have during the last week or two got to feel that I know exactly what the next American lady or gentleman I meet is at once going to ask me. It is sure to be the eternal interrogation, "What do you think of America?" I am always obliged to begin my reply to this query very apologetically. When the great Dr. Johnson visited Scotland, as told in that wonderful record by Boswell, he said that to go from England to Scotland was like seeing a flower dying gradually down to its stalk, for from soft, sweet, pretty rural England the transition to wild and rugged Scotia was a change from the gently charming to the sublimely sombre. But who can describe the sensations experienced in the change from England to America? There are some institutions and some scenes characteristic of England which I dearly love, and which I miss entirely in this country. They seem to have faded and died down in my mind like flowers bloomed in my consciousness. It seems so strange to travel a thousand miles, to traverse Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio, and never to see a village with its venerable and majestic parish church, covered with evergreen ivy; never to catch sight of a magnificent cathedral seven or eight hundred years old; never to get a glimpse on a rocky height of a battlemented old castle or glorious abbey, telling of the Old-World life that throbbed a thousand years since; never to descry a luxuriant hedge with its wealth of wild flowers and its long festoons of ferns and brackens; never to see anything that gives token that one had a grandfather and grandmother living in the land, and that they had grandfathers and grandmothers too who flourished in the "good old times."

A COUNTRY WITHOUT ANY GRANDMOTHER.

Henry Ward Beecher used to say that in order to be strong and healthy every man should start by having a strong, healthy father and mother. I always thought he might have improved on that advice, for the antecedents should travel farther back. A good grandfather gives any man a good chance. Hereditary reversions come out in the third generation. An English thinker has said that every man has an immense deal of the essence of his ancestors potted within him. Another observes that every man has to carry all his grandfathers on his back. Well, I perceive that the American people are reveling riotously in the consciousness of their entire independence of the past. Nothing here "smacks of my grandmother," as your great Emerson curtly puts it. What cares the go-ahead Yankee under the Manhattan sky-scraper for the old, effete auspices under which his nation had its little beginning in the days of Raleigh and the Puritans? I am impressed with the countless departures from all the fashions of life in details to which I have been accustomed. In England I am used to seeing locks, door-handles, window-fastenings, traveling trunks and bags, railway engines and carriages, gigs and coaches in the streets, of types so familiar that my eyes are accustomed to them as were the eyes of my forefathers. Of course, all these things are more elegantly finished than of old, but the types are everlasting, for they are strong, durable, and well turned out. Workmanship in England is solid, and is invariably lasting in its results. But in America the object seems partly to develop original thought, and to improve on all creation, and to find out fresh departures in everything pertaining to life's experiences. My eye falls on nothing familiar, with one exception, in which America is a slave to Europe, of which I will speak anon. This endless variation is exciting and stimulating to the faculties of cognition to an indescribable degree. Now, it is curious indeed to come to this country and to hear one's own language, and to see people all round who look simply like my own countrymen, and yet to behold all things new. I mean not only new, but diverse. All the material patterns are changed. It seems to me that the average American will not, if he can avoid it, have anything made for him at all like things were made for his father and mother. I am under the impression that Englishmen are too contented with the auspices of yesterday, while Americans are too eager to smash everything that was born the day before. In Russia there is the most extraordinary mixture of antepast continuity with the freshest novelties of to-day. That is why I consider Russia one of the coming nations which will seriously compete for supremacy, with the whole Anglo-Saxon race. England reveres too profoundly the rags and tatters of the effete eras, just as we hang up in our cathedrals the shot-riddled banners of Crecy, Agincourt and Waterloo. America is too much disposed to tear to tatters things hardly used at all. The worship of to-morrow is the cult of America. You Americans are in a sense unconscious Parsees, for you adore the rising sun. But I think I can perceive that too many are mistaking grotesque lanterns for the sun. So that for every new sect of impostors that rises in England fifty spring up in America. Indeed, it is difficult to think of any religious novelty in England of late years which has not been imported from America. The English people have a mighty respect and admiration for this great new country, and are proud to borrow ideas from it, as they rarely borrow any from the Continent.

CAPTURING OUR ENGLISH MINISTERS.

I read with regret, though not with surprise, on taking up the New York Herald this morning, that the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, one of my nearest London neighbors, is called to the pulpit of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, in succession to the late Dr. John Hall. Although this gifted London preacher does not belong to my own faith and order, I say I profoundly regret to think that he will be removed from the London community. He is one of the most evangelical and spiritually-minded of the Congregationalists in England. It is singular that he should have received this call to a church not of his own denomination; but he is not a typical Congregationalist. In fact, I have myself perceived that he is altogether out of touch with the great body of his own sect in England, while he is intensely popular as a preacher. Mr. Campbell is of the Moody type. He is pastor of Newcourt Chapel, in North London, near the beautiful Finsbury Park. His father was an obscure Baptist minister in a little country parish down in Gloucestershire, near the source of the River Thames. He has, during his recent visit to America, received four other calls to American churches. He is a determined foe to the flood of worldliness which is inundating the fashionable religious community. Not long ago I happened to meet a Methodist minister who is my near neighbor. He was out of temper, and soon let me know that the object of his wrath was G. Campbell Morgan. Mr. Morgan had been announced to preach one of the opening sermons at the Methodist Church, but had refused to fulfill his engagement on finding that a great church fair was arranged. He sternly set his face against the carnalities of religious feeling at bazars, so common, and so injurious to spiritual life. But the sneers of the Methodist minister at the assumption of holiness on Mr. Morgan's part were not edifying to my soul. I entirely agreed with the scruples of the Congregationalist reformer. But, to speak quite frankly, I was at the same time not a little puzzled. I soliloquized within my soul. I am often driven to the process. I am frequently constrained to "speak a solo" in my heart, and to philosophize in the secret chambers of my consciousness, impelled thereto by what seem to me to be the incomprehensible inconsistencies of great and good men. I fail to see why any man whose conscience permits him to turn Congregationalist and to sprinkle babies, after he has been born and educated in a Baptist parsonage, should feel so sensitive about a bazaar for raising a church debt. To my mind baby rantizing and bazaar ranting, with all its auctioneering and marketing are both extremely objectionable. But I think if I could go back to the process of sprinkling the little suckers, I really could manage also to give my conscience a generous holiday on the other matter. Mr. Morgan has been giving a definition of his theological position. He is most conservative and orthodox in his views as to the criticism of the Bible and the question of inspiration. Once more, I am all the more puzzled at his position as a Pædobaptist. But I give it up! When I try to understand the religious conscience to day, then conundrums start up in quick succession, and chaos rushes in. W. DURBAN.

Actual and Formal Remission of Sins.

It is somewhat remarkable that the first thing Bro. Jones does in nearly every article is to present his sublimated philosophy; and then he gives his interpretations of Scripture, thus making the Word of God conform to his philosophy! Like Paul, I have encountered a philosopher, and our readers would do well to heed the apostolic admonition, "Take heed lest there be any one that maketh spoil of you through his philosophy." I may be permitted to suggest that a Universalist can largely discount my brother as a philosopher on the love of God. He spins out a philosophy which makes the love of God save all mankind, and then interprets the Scriptures accordingly. This is a very unsafe method of interpretation, whether pursued by Bro. Jones or a Universalist.

Bro. Jones says: "Faith and repentance are moral forces, and coordinate factors, working together in the human understanding and affections. They involve each other. Where there is gospel repeatance there is gospel faith, and where there is gospel faith there is gospel repentance. But neither one, nor both together, involve baptism. Baptism belongs to a different category. It is an outward act performed by one man on another. It is a matter of law, a legal appointment, a formal thing."

This may be good philosophy, but it is very bad doctrine in the light of the Scriptures. Peter says that baptism is not an outward act ("not the putting away of the filth of the flesh"), but "the interrogation of a good conscience toward God." Instead of being an outward act it is an act of the conscience; and Paul makes it an act of the heart: "You have obeyed from the heart," etc. John preached the "baptism of repentance," thus associating baptism and repentance so intimately that the former grows out of the latter. The Master expresses a vital connection between faith and baptism in Mark 16:16 and John 3:5. It is also associated closely with one's love of Christ. "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments." "This is the love of God, that ye k ep his commandments." Dissociate baptism from faith, repentance and love, as Bro. Jones' philosophy does, and of course it is "an outward act, a formal thing," and ceases to be baptism.

Bro. J. will please take his seat at the feet of Mr. Campbell and receive from the sage of Bethany, whom he assumes to represent on this question, the following lesson: "Reader, be admonished how you speak of bodily acts in obedience to divine intitutions. Remember Eve, Adam and all transgressors on the one hand. Remember Abel, Noah, Enoch, Moses, Abraham, down to the harlot, Rahab, on the other, and be cautious how you speak of bodily acts! . . . There is no such thing as outward, bodily acts in the Christian institution; and less than in all others in the act of immersion. Then it is that the spirit, soul and body of man become one with the Lord. . . The soul of the intelligent subject is as fully immersed into the Lord Jesus as his body is immersed in the water."—Christianity Restored, page 253. The face of this "outward-act" man of straw is perfectly familiar to me. I have seen it in every debate that I have ever held or heard with a sectarian. Mr. Campbell had to meet it in his debates; and here is its grim visage, framed by Bro. Jones!

My good brother thinks that not only have I failed to answer his argument in the first article, but that no man will ever be able to answer it. This is certainly a high opinion for a man to pass on his own work! I not only believe that it has been answered, but that it has been shown to be a very lame fallacy. He alludes, I suppose, to his argument on such passages as "he that believeth on the Son hath eternal life," etc. His argument on that class of passages is precisely the same as that used by Mr. Rice. Some of their expressions are about identical. In truth, Bro. J. has absorbed more of Mr. R. from that debate, so far as the design of baptism is concerned, than from Mr. Campbell; and in the coming centuries some higher critic may say that either R. wrote J.'s articles, or J. made R.'s speeches! But let us see what Mr. Campbell thought of this argument. He wants to know why Mr. Rice ignores the argument and raises quibbles about such phrases as "he that believeth on the Son of God hath eternal life;" "he that believeth on him is not condemned," etc. Having fully exposed the "quibbles," Mr. C. says: "If Mr. Rice did not design all this talk about faith, etc., for an ad captandum argument, it is clearly one of that class; but not of such high elegance and plausibility as to inveigle any one of much mental comprehension and perspicacity. All things, then, are possible to him who believes. Faith is a great principle. It is, however, but a principle—by which we may secure righteousness, holiness, redemption, riches, glory, immortality."—Debate, page 457. Again, Mr. Campbell says on page 486: "Sometimes remission of sins, blotting out of sins, washing away of sins is spoken of and sometimes not; sometimes baptism itself is not mentioned. From all which the conclusion is inevitable that when any one of the adjuncts of conversion or salvation is named, all the rest are understood to have accompanied." Again, on page 510: "The conclusion is inevitable that when we are said to be justified, sanctified, saved by faith, or to have eternal life through believing, it does not mean that we actually have them now, or shall enjoy them hereafter, by mere faith alone, but in consequence of this principle displayed in the obedience of faith or in submission to the authority and rule of the Lord." I am at pains to state Mr. Campbell's position fully in his own language, because I see that I have to vindicate him against the subtleties of Bro. Jones' philosophy as well as the Scriptures.

I distinctly repeat that Mr. C. does not reaffirm in his debate with Rice the distinction of actual and formal remission that he made in the McCalla debate, and I propose to examine that matter thoroughly. In the first place, the distinction should have appeared in the proposition if it was intended to be made. The first of the rules under which the debate was held reads thus: "The terms in which the question in debate is expressed and the poin at issue should be so clearly defined that there could be no misunderstanding respecting them." Here is the proposition: "Christian baptism is for the remission of past sins.'' Who would ever suspicion that there is a dual meaning in this proposition? or that only formal remission is meant? In the second place, Mr. C. should at the very beginning have explained somewhat after the following fashion: ''I mean by this prop sition that Christian baptism is for the formal remission of past sins, their actual remission having already taken place.'' Who does not see that this would have turned the whole thing into a roaring farce? Who can believe that Mr. C. had any such idea? Mr. Rice quotes the McCalla statement and says: I could shake hands with my friend over this sentiment, and we might have something like Christian union. What does he say? 'Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed.' This is all for which I am contending—that the sins of every individual are really pardoned when he believes.'' Now, if this is all Mr. C. was contending for, what was the debate about? The idea is proposterous. A reaffirmation of the McCalla statement would have terminated the debate, and it ought never to have been begun if a mere formal remission was all that was involved, both speakers contending that actual remission occurs before baptism. After the McCalla debate Mr. C. said in the Christian Baptist, page 422: ''When Paul was immersed it was declared and understood by all parties that all his previous sins were washed away in the act of immersion.'' No distinction of actual and formal remission here.

But I must pay attention to Bro. Jones' special pleading. He quotes Mr. C. thus: ''Neither Paul's faith nor his repentance had washed away his sins in the sense of the precept of the Messiah.'' I presume that the ''precept of the Messiah'' here referred to is the commission by Mark. Now let us see the sense in which Mr. C. understood this precept. Having cited it in connection with Acts 2:38, he says: ''These passages mutually explain each other. Here is given to baptism a most imposing character. Along with faith, and as the adjunct of faith, it saves penitents. That it has power to save one from anything else than sins is not imagined: inasmuch as we have three distinct salvations expressed in the Bible—the first, a salvation of the body from the ills and evils, the accidents and dangers of this life; the second, a salvation of the soul from the guilt and pollution of sin; the third, a salvation of both body and soul—of the whole man in heaven forever.'' Where is the place for a fourth salvation—a formal salvation—a salvation from some unknown something that lies concealed in the mysterious depths of a mystic philosophy? In expatiating upon this great salvation and contrasting it with the salvaton enjoyed by the Jews, Mr. C. says: ''Their deliverance was from temperal grievances, and from the tyranny of oppressive enemies; but the new salvation of the gospel is a salvation consisting primarily of the actual, real and personal remission of sins. Hence, John's baptism was for the remission of sins.''—Debate, pages 436, 437. Here the great man declares that the ''sense of the precept of the Messiah'' is that baptism, ''along with faith and as the adjunct of faith,'' saves from the guilt and pollution of sin, and elaborates by saying that this salvation embraces ''the actual, real and personal remission of sins,'' and adds: ''Hence John's baptism was for the remission of sins.'' Here is a positive declaration that even John's baptism was for the actual, real and personal remission of sins. This thing of attributing the vagaries of a philosopoy to Mr. C at the time of the Rice debate might well ''be suspended.''

Bro. Jones' second effort will amount to a ''hint'' when he cites a Greek or Latin father who says that baptism is for the formal remission of sins. Mr. C says that he stands with the ''fathers'' on this subject, and everybody who is at all acquainted with their writings knows that they contended that baptism is for the remission of sins, and some of them went so far as to say that even an infant could not be saved without baptism. They knew nothing of the distinction that Bro. Jones is contending for.

The ''hint'' that was meant to ''punch them [me] right between the eyes'' only shows that Bro. J. closed his own eyes and ''punched'' at random. Notice carefully what Mr. Campbell says: ''I feel myself prepared to sustain every prominent view that I ever published on the subject of the Christian religion.'' That Paul's sins were actually forgiven before baptism, and formally forgiven afterwards, was not a ''prominent view'' in the writings of Mr. C. before the Rice debate, and hence this statement falls short of being a reaffirmation of the distinction he made in the McCalla debate. He had several opportunities to reavow that sentiment, Mr Rice pressing it upon him, and practically offering to shake hands with him upon it. The fact that he failed to do so under the circumstances is clear proof that he did not hold the sentiment at that time. And he practically repudiated it when he said in the Christian Baptist that Paul's ''sins were washed away in the act of immersion,'' and that the eunuch was ''actually forgiven in the act of immersion.''

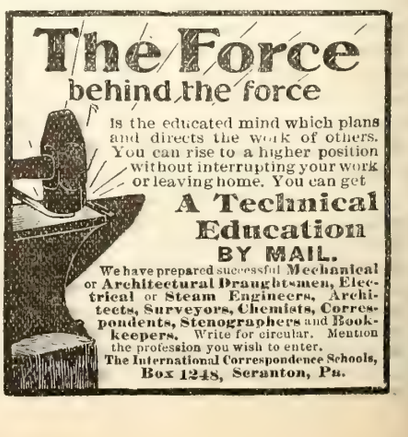
Bro. Jones' disposition of the statement last made above smacks of trifling and can scarcely be satisfactory to himself. Mr. C. meant that ''God actually granted to the eunuch in his baptism the formal remission of his sins!'' That is enough to make the grand old hero turn over in his grave! Mr. C. is explaining the eunuch's joy, and says: ''He had found what thousands before him had experienced, peace with God FROM A CONVICTION THAT HIS SINS HAD BEEN ACTUALLY FORGIVEN IN THE ACT OF IMMERSION.'' According to our philosopher the eunuch, though really pardoned, found no peace with God till he ''actually received formal remission!'' I protest against making Mr. Campbell talk nonsense.

Bro. Jones' effort to bring Mr. Campbell's statement, that ''repentance and immersion are actually necessary to forgiveness,'' into harmony with his own philosophical notions is entirely abortive. He has two forgivenesses while Mr. C. has but one. He makes repentance necessary to actual forgiveness, and baptism necessary to formal forgiveness, while Mr. C. makes them both necessary to the same forgiveness.

The brother says that he once held the same views on remission that I now hold. I am glad that he was once right. He is not the first man that ever gave up truth for fiction. It may be presumed that at that time he thought that Mr. Campbell held these views and that the Scriptures teach them. He was then a man of faith, believing that the sacred writings mean what they say, and supposing that Mr. C. meant what he said. But subsequently he became a philosopher and dreamed out his formal remission fiction, and now both the Scriptures and Mr. Campbell's writings must be revised accordingly!

Bro. J. pays me a high compliment in his supposition that I never say that baptism is for the remission of sins ''in a sense;'' but his assertion that in this I differ from Christ and the apostles only emphasizes his conspicuous ability to see things that do not exist. John preached ''the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.'' (Bro. Jones: In a sense, John.) Christ says: ''He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.'' (Bro Jones: In a sense, Master) Peter says: ''Repent and be baptized . . . . . for the remission of sins '' (Bro. Jones: In a sense, Peter.) Ana ias says: ''Be baptized and wash away your si s '' (Bro. Jones: In a sense, Ananias.) I have learned to speak as the oracles of God speak. Bro. J. has to throw in the parenthetical emendation and thus correct Christ and men who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit!

Bro. J. returns the statement, ''Through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins,'' and comes amazingly near admitting that ''through his name'' is superfluous, which it certainly is if his interpretation of the passage is correct. I asked him to point out wherein ''whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins'' fails to express his idea of remission by faith alone. No answer. I asked him to point out what additional thought ''through his name'' adds to that idea. No answer. He prefers to make an assertion about ''critical scholarship.'' I venture that much of this ''critical scholarship'' is satisfied with sprinkling for baptism. Will Bro. J. accept that? I am glad to have Mr. Campbell with me on this passage also. He finds baptism in ''through his name.''



The brother says: ''So must we distinguish between actual and formal remission. Then make our induction of passages relating to actual and another induction relating to formal remission,'' etc. Here stands his philosophy again, right in front of the Scriptures, subordinating them to his whims. Bro. J. assumes the very thing in dispute and reasons from that assumption to the proof. I am glad that I stand with Mr. Campbell here also, who puts baptism in his induction along with faith and repentance, and does not recognize two inductions because he does not recognize two remissions.

The following statement surprises me: ''I have never said that remission of sins is a psychological experience in the mind of man.'' Here is what he said in his first article: ''Actual remission of sins is a psychological fact and evolves psychological experience, a moral experience in spiritual natures resulting in a moral cause and a moral effect.'' I ask this plain question: Did Bro. J. mean to predicate the forgoing language of God, or man? I will have something more to say when he answers.

Bro. Jones' characterization of Acts 2:38 as ''Morro Castle'' is quite appropriate, for my information is that that castle has never been taken by storm. Acts 2:38 is in no danger from the smoothe-bore guns of Fort Philosophy! The brother says that repentance and baptism are to the same end, and immediately proceeds to split that into two ends—actual remission and formal remission This is not a shot from any sort of a gun; it is rather a flash in the pan of an old flint-lock musket!

The brother's admonition to my friends to wake me up is one of his ''superfluities,'' for, judging from numerous letters that I am getting, my friends think I am ''wide awake and duly sober;'' and the length of the brother's article indicates that he does not think that I am very much asleep. If when asleep I can write an article of two columns and a half that requires more than six columns in an attempt at reply, when I get my eyes open the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will have to double itself to furnish Bro. J. room to rattle around in!

I have said nothing from which ''no divine providence and no efficacy in prayer'' follow as ''natural allies.'' Bro. J. is apparently peevish. Won't some of his friends give him some soothing syrup? J. B BRINEY.

Leaves from Mission Fields.

MISS HATTIE L. JUDSON—NO. III.

"Now thou mayest give
The famished food, the prisoner liberty,
Light to the darkened mind, to the lost soul
A place in heaven. Take thou the privilege
With solemn gratitude. Speak as thou art
Upon earth's surface, gloriously exult
To be coworker with the King of heaven."

The last service Miss Judson did for sad India was to give the famished food during the late famine. Like her Master, she looked on the hungry multitudes and her heart was moved with compassion. Our mission stations in India were in the midst of the famine district. There were eighty millions of people without food or the means of procuring it. We, in this imperial republic, have no appreciation of the dense population of India. In the valley of the Ganges the inhabitants range from five hundred to seven hundred to the square mile. In our beloved country of magnificent proportions, productive soil and fruitful seasons, the struggle for bread is a heavy task, even in spite of these favorable conditions. In heathen lands, where there are no modern appliances for cultivating the soil, the struggle for food is fierce. In this struggle the weak perish and the strong survive. It was a remark of the late Robert Louis Stevenson that the war for bread is the most terrible of all wars. This is especially true in time of famine. Dr. J. T. Gracey says of the late famine in India: "The pangs of hunger drive people in silent procession, living skeletons, to find food, dying by the way, the stronger getting a few grains, the feebler perishing, and children, an intolerable burden, are sold at a price varying from ten to thirty cents a piece. At best a heritage of orphaned children of tens of thousands must remain to the country. India has a population fifty per cent. greater than that of the United States, which is always in a state of semi-starvation, having but one meal a day, and forty millions of whom always go to bed hungry. Drought under these conditions means death." The Viceroy of India estimated that seventy-two millions would die unless gigantic relief measures could speedily be organized. Great Britain did everything she could for the relief of her subjects in India. The agencies used were efficient, but not sufficient. The drought-stricken region was far more extensive than had ever before been blasted by famine. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. The missionaries came to the help of the government in feeding the starving millions. The sight of so much suffering and want made a heavy draft on the resources of the missionaries, who were scattered all through the afflicted territory. One missionary says: "Hundreds of children are to be seen in the bazaars, picking up grain or anything that can be used as food. Some stagger as they walk. The cries of hungry people for bread in the darkness at railroad stations are often heart-rending. Parents take their children to the missionaries and offer to give them away for food." In the midst of these distressing experiences, even when it was hard to keep life in themselves, these heroic servants of the Master continued to minister out of their small income. They asked not to be relieved. Their only appeal was for more money, that they might take a few more orphan children into their homes.

"A cry, a cry is in the air!
It comes from Asia's peopled plain;
A voice of grief, of love and prayer—
O Christian, shall it come in vain?

"Hear us, for we are in distress!
It is not for ourselves we plead!
Though toils and cares upon us press,
Our toils and cares we little heed."

Mr. G. L. Wharton says of the unselfish service of Miss Judson in this time of frightful suffering: "Early in April she went to Mahoba and remained till September. During all these months of the hot and rainy season she never had a day's rest or quiet. With the orphans of the mission in the same yard, always requiring attention and always making more or less noise, there could be but little rest or quiet at any time. Her special work was to the outside famine people, where she distributed rice and served cooked food for hundreds of starving people, mostly children. Besides this daily work, she often had scores of orphans at a time on her hands trying to keep them alive till they could be sent away. Her last work was to fit out two parties of famine children, one of boys, the other of girls, and assist them in getting to another station. She cheerfully gave her life for others, the starving orphaned children and the missionaries whom she relieved."

Mr. A. McLean writes: "The winter before her death, she and Miss Thompson went into the villages around Hurda. They visited about a hundred towns and preached the gospel to thousands of people who had never heard it. In the spring she went to Mahoba to assist in the work there. She fed the hungry, she nursed the sick and dying, she relieved the overworked missionaries at that station." Miss Frost sends this pathetic message: "Miss Judson came to us at Mahoba in the weariest, hardest of the famine year, 1897." Human strength, like the sea, has its metes and bounds. Thus far we can go and no farther. Constant toil and care in the hot and sickening atmosphere resulted in complete collapse. Mr. Wharton says: "When writing, though she never complained, she showed that this overstrain was telling on her health. We knew it was too much for her, and wrote her entreating her to go away for a change and rest. She did not feel that she could leave at that time. In order to give the other missionaries at Mahoba a chance to go away and recuperate—for they, too, were sick and overworked—she, forgetful of herself, bravely assumed the responsibility of all the work, while they went away. This additional work and strain coming on her, poor and weary as she was by all the months of trying service, was more than her otherwise strong and healthy body and mind could endure. When disease came she had no strength or vitality left with which to combat it." The end came speedily. The poor, tired woman was anxious to get back to Hurda, the scene of her first experiences in India. Here she expected to find the rest she greatly needed and richly deserved.

"How tired I feel to-day!
My heart is aching with its pain
From other hearts, and sore the strain—
Life is a beaten bark,
Storm-tossed—astray!

"If I could only rest to-day!
If mind and heart could only sleep,
Forgetful of their pain so deep,
And wake beyond the skies
At peace for aye!"

Baking Powder Combine Fights the Law.

The combination known as "The Associated Baking Powder Manufacturers" is opposing the enforcement of a law of Missouri which is designed to protect people from certain unwholesome substances in food. Among the articles of food whose manufacture and sale are prohibited by law are all those containing alum, a substance employed in making the cheaper grades of baking powder.

Such an organized opposition to the Pure Food law of the state will not meet the approval of housekeepers. The health of our families is the most important of all considerations. Alum baking powders have been condemned by law elsewhere and by our own and other high authorities for years, and the best interests of the people are in the enforcement of the law, and not with the Baking Powder Combine, which has heretofore been allowed to sell its alum compounds freely in this community.

The people should not be misled in this matter. The sale of alum baking powder is forbidden under penalty of a heavy fine by the law of the state. Grocers should take warning and inform themselves of the character of the goods they sell, as housekeepers are bound to be protected.

Texas Letter.

Carnegie, the big-hearted and wise-headed millionaire, has again shown his interest in Texas. A year or so ago the little town of Pittsburgh received from him several thousand dollars for a public library. Later Ft. Worth received a gift of $50,000 from him for the same purpose. And now Dallas gets the same amount, and a public library is one of the certainties of the near future. Our city council will donate a lot for the site of the library building and our citizens are raising the building fund. Some rich men are wise enough to administer on their own estates and to build their own monuments.

The Texas Baptists are a happy people just now, and well they may be. Their educational interests for years have been suffering for want of money. B. H Carroll, a great preacher, and pastor of a great church, saw this and saw the sad results to which it would lead, and he determined to do what he could to avert the calamity. He resigned his pastorate and sounded a bugle call to his people to rally round him, and they responded so nobly that in less than a year $100,000, the amount asked for, has been raised and there is great rejoicing in the Baptist Zion. Our Baptist brethren do occasionally quarrel and spat a little, but in spite of this they are doing great things among us.

Every year is strengthening the bridge that spans the "bloody chasm." Not a great while since Texas returned to Indiana a flag which was captured by Texas soldiers from Indiana braves during the war. Indiana, possessed of the same spirit of magnanimity, and having in her possession a flag lost by a Texas regiment and captured by Indiana soldiers, determined to return it to us. Accordingly, Gov. Mount and staff came down with it during our state fair, and in the presence of a great audience, and in the midst of the wildest enthusiasm, he presented it to Gov Sayers, of Texas, who in turn handed it to Terry's Rangers. The speeches on the occasion were appropriate, and the incident will tend to draw the North and South closer together. Gov. Mount's splendid speech closed with this prayer:

"Lord of the universe, shield us and guide us,
Trusting thee always through shadow and sun.
Thou hast united us; who shall divide us?
Keep us, O keep us, the 'many in one.'"

In the presence of scenes like this is it not about time for the obliteration of some of the chasms made in the church during this same war?

The church at Coleman is building a parsonage for its popular pastor, T. D. Secrest, and he deserves it. I have known Secrest for years, and the longer I know him the better I love him and the more I think of men.

M. M. Smith is doing a substantial work at Winnesboro, an evidence of which is seen in the fact that the church debt has been paid. A divine benediction on all such work.

The Junior Society in the Central Church of his city has adopted an orphan girl, of India, and have named her Esther Malone Davis. They call her Esther because they hope she will shine in that dark land like a "star." They call her Malone because the three Malone girls, Misses Fannie, Hattie and Tennie, have been the faithful superintendents of the society. And they call her Davis in honor of their pastor, an honor which he appreciates in the highest.

Some months since the Senior Society adopted a girl in this same country, so that our Endeavorers now have two in that far-away land. And what is so well caculated to save them from the demon of selfishness, and what will make them like the Christ so soon as the spirit of unselfishness?

M. M. Davis.

The Work in the South.

For several years the colored people of Southwestern Virginia have been anxious that educational work should be started among them. The Board of Negro Education and Evangelization has had this matter under advisement for sometime, and last fall all arrangements were made for the opening of the school. Willie Scott, who began his education at the Southern Christian Institute, was sent to take charge of this work, but shortly after going there he was taken sick and his sickness continued so long and proved to be so serious that he was obliged to give up the work for the time, and as the Board of N. E. E. had no one else whom they could send to take his place at that time this work was dropped.

The colored people of this section are again writing concerning this work, and are very anxious that it shall be again taken up and that the Board of N. E. E. shall assume control, and one of the colored brethren writes as follows: "Inclosed you will find fifty dollars for the school that is to be opened at Martinsville, Va. . . . We would like to have the school opened this fall if possible." This is a good way to show interest in a work. The Board of N. E E. has seventy-five dollars in addition to this that they are holding in trust for this work, and if possible school will be opened at Martinsville, Va., in January, 1900, for the benefit of the colored people of Virginia and North Carolina.

The work at the Southern Christian Institute has been enlarged during the past year and the institution is ready to do a greater work during the coming year than it has yet done. It makes a fine report of work done during the past year, notwithstanding the fact that the Gulf States were visited by two epidemics of disease. During the year the following improvements on the plantation have been made: Two hundred rods of wire fencing were put up; the new college building and surrounding campus were put in good condition; a laundry and stables were built, and the tool house and granary enlarged. Then a crop of seventy acres of fine corn and peas and thirty acres of cotton and ten acres of truck were raised. Not only has this been accomplished, but in the accomplishment many young colored men have been taught how to work with their hands.

Mrs. Allison, writing concerning the sewing department at Southern Christian Institute, says: "The church at Millersburg, O., sent us a box containing two hundred and fifty yards of cloth, besides thread and buttons, and they also sent $12 50 and paid the tuition for a day pupil. . . . . The church at Gibson City sent about one hundred yards of cloth and Miss Monahan brought seventy-five yards. Bro. J. S. Ross, of Wooster, O., sent $3."

It was recommended by the Board of N. E. E. and endorsed by the convention, that a special fund be raised this year for the purpose of erecting a hospital and two dormitories at the Southern Christian Institute. The wave of yellow fever which has swept over that portion of the South for two successive seasons and the epidemic of typhoid fever which followed this year have emphasized the need, not only of a hospital, but of a training school for nurses. Two of our workers at the Southern Christian Institute died during the past year. In memory of those who gave their lives for the cause this hospital building will be built.

Three weeks ago the Board of N. E. E. purchased for the Lum Graded School a tract of twenty acres of land adjoining the tract of five acres already owned by the school. Mrs. Daniel Mercer, of Bowling Green, O., and other friends of this cause, gave liberally to the fund for the purchasing of this land. The board hopes to make it the basis of an industrial department for the Lum School.

Robert Brooks, principal of the school, upon receiving the letter telling of the purchase of this land, wrote as follows: "I received your lette eat rejoicing because I realized the fact long ago that the success of the Lum School in one instance at least, depended on the purchase of the land around. This is a great and benevolent step for the board and we feel honored that we are the receipients of such munificent gifts. We are exerting every energy within us for this work, and this means encouragement for all.

"School opens on the 16th of October. We have things in better shape now than ever before. However many little things are yet needed to complete the schoolrooms."

From a recent issue of the Christian Educator I quote the following: "The Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society confronts facts too stubborn to be neglected. Its achievements are monumental, its burdens most weighty, its duties appalling. The four million freedmen have become ten million wards. Pushed out into the sea of liberty, they have reached the surf line where it is too deep for them to wade, and they are not yet able to swim. They seem to be neither citizens nor serfs, having the difficulties of both conditions and the full blessings of neither. Their almost hopeless struggle presents a picture nearly as pitiful as any in the long story of their wrongs and sorrows.

"Added to these wards are the helpless multitudes providentially committed to our care by our new possessions. Now our wards number more than twenty five millions. Their destiny and ours are inseparable. Justice under the law and spirit of the Christian school are the only forces given under heaven among men whereby they can be delivered and elevated.

"The Board of Bishops in the spirit of earnest prayer and unhesitating faith recommend the Board of Managers of the Freedman's Aid and Southern Education Society to make a comprehensive and persistent effort to utilize the twentieth century thankoffering movement for raising one million dollars, not for current expenses, but for the obligations and for the endowment of the schools under their care, and of schools which must be opened in our new possessions and in the home fields.

"We ask our people to remember that our work for our old and new wards is not completed, but rather only fairly commenced. The sympathy and liberality of the past must be greatly increased. Pray for these millions, and give for their evangelization and enlightenment."

It is well for us to know something of what other peoples who have wrought long and earnestly and given most liberally of their thought and lives and money in this Southern mission field think of it. The above shows something of what the M. E. Church has done, what it thinks of the conditions and what it expects still to do. A million dollars for the endowment of schools already established and for the establishment of new ones. No steps backward in rounding out the century in the great work to be done among the negroes of the South. One of the workers in this field says: "Give us the million dollars and the silent conspiracy of the Christian school will walk about defenseless to ward off the demon and dethrone the mob." In another place he says: "The criminal negro is not the product of Christian education. No student of the Freedman's Aid and Southern Education schools has ever been lynched." We must go on in our work in the South—clothing and feeding and ministering unto these "little ones"—taking to them the light and liberty and uplifting power of the gospel.

Notes and News.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Every school in the state ought to open the nter campaign with a good, enthusiastic, ely rally, and the fourth Sunday in this nth is a good day. The Boys' and Girls' lly for America is the event and the exer- e sent out by B. L. Smith makes a fine and ried program Send to him at Y. M. C. A. ilding, Cincinnati, O., and your school will e on new life generally. Why not?

The Monroe City school held their rally in tober, inviting me to participate, which I gladly. It was a great day, with the gest attendance in their history and an ering by the classes of nearly $12. The ung misses had charge of the music, while ers of the school gave us recitations, so t all in all it was a great day with us and us. M. J Nicoson has a knack in such rk that makes everything go off so smoothly d evenly that one thinks it was no trouble all. It did the school good, it did the urch more good, it helped the entire com- unity. I am sure that Bro. Nicoson's signation was a mistake, but some other ngregation will profit by it; only let it be a ssouri church. Monroe [reluctantly accept- it.

Elmer Shepard is to be our evangelist in utheast Missouri, not Eugene Burr. He is a . Louis boy, is just from Eureka College, s the heartiest commendation from J. H. rdin, and will do his uttermost to honor God d establish the cause. Any one needing his lp write me at once.

We now have five men in the field, hoping to h our work to the front as we have never ne, and if the schools will only sustain us in is effort to honor God in Missouri, I am just re it can be done.

"Girls' and Boys' Rally Day for America" w has the right of way, seeing that State ission Day is past, and with such good re- lts. Send to B. L. Smith, Cincinnati, O., r anything you want in the shape of a good ogram.

Next spring we are to push new school work, t now we are striving for new houses, new ethods, new workers and such like, and to is end institutes are in order. Am holding em every week with good attendance.

T. A Hedges, La Grange, now has arrange- ents made for institutes at Bible Grove, lenwood, Rutledge, and if you would have a lly or institute write him as above imme- ateiy.

The Saline county meeting was not largely tended, but the interest was good, the ad- resses were above average and the entertain- ent was after the Blackburn fashion, gener- s and abundant. The preachers taking part the program were C. Q. Shouse, W. G. rber, J. I. Orrison, J. M. Blalock and H. . Davis, while J. A. Gordon and Dr. Ish did uch in the conferences to enthuse us. Bro. ordon does not shy much, but knows the way ible-school work should be done, and he has is school do it.

My work at Nelson was among some d-time friends, so that it was a visit as well. . Q. Shouse, the minister, has always been ne of our most helpful friends, so that I joy- lly reciprocated by doing the very best ossible for his "charge." N. M. Ireland, n old Miami boy, superintends, while the taples and McAllisters seem as pillars in the ouse of God. It does one good to work with nd for such people. Our drills seemed so njoyable that the superintendent has ordered ne chart and will continue the work until astered by the school. Good for Nelson. he brethren were kindly considerate of our ims and gave us financial support.

Now that we are coming near the time let us et a good ready on for "Girls' and Boys' Rally Day for America." It is the fourth unday in November, and every Missouri school should observe it. Your exercise is ready for you in such quantities as you need without price; only write B. L. Smith, Cincinnati, O , and write him immediately.

The Higbee school is planning for a rally at C. H. Strawn's coming appointment, and S. E. Marrs has the ball rolling now. Bro C. H. will give them a helping hand in the good work, while all will enjoy the exercises from opening song to benediction.

Was glad to give the Keytesville school a helping hand, for they deserve it and appreciate it too. The superintendent, B. H. Smith, seeks nothing else so much as the school's success, but weeks' confinement to the home has interfered much with his plans, but not with his fraternal spirit and hospitality. With all their burdens the school has never failed to help our work and never will while the Knappenbergers, Smiths and Venighauses are there. Miss Eva Knappenberger is our Charitan county superintendent, and one who loves to work for Christ and the church.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE ILLINOIS C. W. B. M.: Educational Day is drawing near. Are you preparing for a splendid day, full of enthusiasm which will be rich in results?

The members of your state board are very desirous that every auxiliary in the state observe that day, and that you begin now to prepare an interesting program. Make a vigorous effort to secure new memberships for your auxiliary. Let each sister try to secure one new member and you will double your number.

Strive also to increase your donations. Let the inspiration of the great Jubilee Convention permeate each heart, let those of you who were present tell the good news to all others about you, tell them not only of the hosts in attendance and of the excellent programs, but bear the good tidings of great joy, of hopes in contributions realized, and even surpassed, and the great outlook for the future as we press onward and upward with the deeper devotion and increased loyalty to Christ and the advancement of his kingdom.

Happy indeed the women for this God-given privilege. Let our Savior's first sweet message to the faithful few be an incentive to action. Let us be more zealous as the passing days bring us nearer the time when our work must cease.

May the coming year be filled with activity, and in consequence richer in results, than any past year of our history.

With a message of love for each sister of our beloved C. W. B. M.,

JOHN A. SMITH.

remedy, Gloria Tonic. It cured them so completely that they were anxious that their recovery be published in order that other afflicted persons may profit by their good fortune. Owing to their advanced age they considered their condition very critical, especially so after having exhausted every known remedy. They heard of Gloria Tonic, tried it, and the result was glorious indeed as shown by the following extractions from their letters. Mr. John Mesel, of Okarche, Okla., a gentleman of 70, wrote the maker of Gloria Tonic in a recent letter as follows:—"I am 70 years of age, and since using Gloria Tonic I feel healthier than I did for many years for which I am very thankful." Miss Emily Kreuter, of No. 339 North Winchester Ave., Chicago, Ill., expresses herself as follows:—"My mother, who is 75 years of age, was cured through Gloria Tonic after everything else failed." Mr. Michael Muth, of Perrysburg, Ohio, a gentleman 77 years of age, reports equally as favorable, saying:—"My right arm was totally lame, could only sleep two hours a night and expected to remain a cripple. I could not even dress myself, but thanks to the Lord Gloria Tonic cured me completely." Mrs. Catharine Muller, of Meggers, Wis., an old lady of 80, declares that Gloria Tonic cured her when all other remedies failed. This remedy enabled her to plant and work her vegetable garden as in former years. In thousands of other instances the results have been the same. It might interest the readers that Mr. Smith had been a sufferer from rheumatism himself, and by a lucky chance hit upon a combination of drugs which completely cured him after his case had baffled every doctor that treated him. Mr. Smith will send a free trial package to any reader having rheumatism who will send their address. His full address is John A. Smith, 538 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee Wis.

Eighth Anniversary.

October 25 was the eighth anniversary of the Christian Church of this city, and the occasion was fittingly celebrated by the members and friends of the church.

Eight years ago 12 members of this church held a meeting at a private house and decided to call an evangelist to conduct a series of meetings and endeavor to effect a permanent organization of the Christian Church in this city. In response to the call G. L. Brokaw came and conducted an eight weeks' series of meetings, at the close of which the church was organized with a charter membership of 125. The services of this church were conducted in the operahouse until April, 1893, when the prssent handsome church edifice was completed and dedicated. S. M. Johnson was pastor of the church from the time of the organization until July, 1896, when he was succeeded by the present pastor, Sumner T. Martin.

The anniversary meeting was largely attended and very interesting. After an anthem by the choir and prayer by Chancellor Craig of Drake University, G. L. Brokaw preached an eloquent reminescent sermon. This was followed by reports from all departments of the work. The report of the clerk, H. I. Prussia, showed that at the time of the dedication of the church building the membership was 246; at the close of the second year, 358; third year, 422; fourth year, 449; July, 1896, 451; sixth year, 696; the beginning of the eighth year, 897. Eighty-five have been added during this year, making a total membership of 957, of which 200 are nonresidents. There have been six deaths during the year.

The report of the treasurer showed that the amount of money which passed through his hands was $3,968.65, and in addition to this the societies raised $1,532, swelling the amount to $5,500.65. This includes about $600 in unpaid pledges, leaving a clear balance of $4,809.65. The amount raised for home and foreign missions during the year was $715.

The report of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions shows that organization to be the largest in the state, with a membership of 134. This society raised $244 for missions during the year and the society subscribed for 30 copies of the Missionary Tidings.

The Junior Christian Endeavor report shows that organization to be the largest of its kind in the state with a membership of 108. Two new features of the society are the organizing of the Little Light Bearers and the Little Sunbeams. The little tots belonging to the Light Bearers raised $3.25 for missions, and the whole organization raised $80.62.

The report of the Y. P. S. C. E. showed a total membership of 85 with $52.70 raised for missions during the year.

The report of the Sunday-school showed an average attendance of 246 in the main school and 62 in the mission school, and the total money raised during the year was $397.39. The home department is a new feature of the Sunday-school added this year with a present membership of 221 and offerings amounted to $63.01.

The Ladies' Aid Society, which is in two branches, showed by their report that $84.82 had been raised by them during the year.

Pastor Martin's report was not very long, but it covers a vast amount of work. During the year he preached 152 sermons, of which 82 were preached outside the Mason City pulpit. He also solemnized 15 marriages and conducted 11 funerals.

Three months ago it was decided to make a special effort to raise the amount of the church indebtedness, and yesterday the congregation had the pleasure of hearing the financial secretary's report that the whole amount, $1,500, had been raised and that the church was free from debt.

At the evening meeting the address of Chancellor Craig, of Drake University, was the feature. After an anthem by the choir and short address by Bro. Brokaw, Pastor Mart introduced the venerable chancellor, who d livered one of his characteristic addresse There was a large audience present and t address was highly appreciated by all.

Family Circle.

"Father, I do not ask
That thou wouldst choose some other task
And make it mine. I pray
But this: Let every day
Be molded still
By thine own hand; my will
Be only thine, however deep
I have to bend thy hand to keep.
Let me not simply do, but be content,
Sure that the little crosses each are sent;
And no mistake can ever be
With thine own hand to choose for me."

"In Remembrance of Me."

S. S. LAPPIN.

It was a bright Lord's day in autumn; the worshipers were gathering at the chapel in a village in the Corn Belt of Illinois. Sturdy, brown-faced farmers drove up in front and left their families to wait on the platform till the horses were tied. Well-dressed, smooth-shaven young fellows in shinging rigs rolled in along the black, waxy roads, and sweeping grandly around the corners by the hitching rack, came stalking in presently. The fairer young folk, returning from a half-block stroll after Sunday-school come in by twos and take places near the front. Within a rustling quiet reigns, save now and then a loud whisper or a sound of some restless youngster noisily getting ready for a nap. Subdued voices are heard from the door now and then as the comers greet each other in the vestibule without. In the front seat but one is a row of young people who have but recently obeyed the gospel. Here and there in the room are the pillars of the congregation in their usual places. The audience is larger than common, and two preachers are in the pulpit, for a revival is in progress and an evangelist is assisting. No excitement is evident; in fact, it has not been an exciting revival. The gospel way has been made plain and hearers urged to accept the Savior. When the "second bell" rang a hymn was announced and all the people sang—

"Again the Lord of light and life
Awakes the kindling ray,
Unseals the eyelids of the morn
And pours increasing day.

"Ten thousand different lips will join
To hail this welcome morn,
Which scatters blessings from it wings
To nations yet unborn."

As the last melodious note swelled out and died away the audience arose and the pastor led them in reading that noble psalm beginning, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall hide under the shadow of the Almighty," and at its close the evangelist offered a fervent prayer to God to direct the minds of his people in the worship. When the sweet, solemn notes of "'Tis midnight on Olive's brow" filled the house, the two preachers took their places among the people. When the hymn was finished six men — two farmers, a grain dealer, a carpenter, a banker and a salesman—walked quietly forward and were seated two at the table of the Lord and four on the front seat; they were the elders and deacons of the congregation. Plain men were they, but brethren in Christ and "of good report of them that are without." A few words were spoken by one of the elders, plain unpolished words, but earnest and to the point, and the people stood while thanks were offered for wine and loaf. As the deacons passed the emblems to the brethren and sisters a solemn hush fell over the service. Heads were bowed and hearts searched; eyes were wet with tears and vows were remembered anew as one by one the disciples ate and drank in memory of the risen Lord.

There was a sermon after that, but what sermon can deserve special mention after a scene so impressive? It was a retelling of the story of Jesus and his love, and that alone made it worthy a hearing. There was many a pleasant greeting and many a hearty handshake after the benediction, and the congregation went one by one to their homes, strengthened for the daily cares again.

The evangelist was tired with his labors and homesick a little besides that day, but his strength was renewed and his heart filled to the brim by that sweet service, and wherever his changing life shall lead him the precious memory of the day will go with him. The little circle was made up of the plainer people for the most part; no deep learning and no boasted culture, but they were the kind Jesus liked to be with; and who can say he does not love their company still? It was a humble feast, unlike those of our great conventions, or those in the city churches, where each one has a cup to himself and the minister leads while all drink at once; it lacked the enthusiasm of the former and the systematic formality of the latter, but perhaps it was nearer the apostolic spirit and practice than either. Have we thought of Christ as looking down from above upon his people as they eat and drink in his memory? I tell you there was no vacant place at the table that day; the Lord was there among his own.

God Almighty's common people! What hosts of them there are! How touchingly simple, yet how sublime and grand are these sturdy lives, dedicated to God! How good to be among them—to be one of them at the Lord's table, to breathe again the atmosphere of frank, crude, every-day righteousness. These plain, plodding churches are the brooding-places of great lives and great influences. Who can tell what tremendous issues may one day turn on the work begun and carried on in this little church. Many of us met the Man of Nazareth first in just such a place. And we used to feel his presence near indeed as we sat by the open window breathing the air from growing crops or fragrant forest trees, thinking meanwhile of the One who walked the lanes and fields of Galilee. Since then we have often sat in greater crowds amid more gorgeous furnishings, but we have never been nearer God than we were in the old church at home. Even now our eyes grow moist as, in memory, we see the plain old building again, and God's acre near by, with its sad, sweet associations. So soothing, so restful, so comforting is the scene before us, we feel that heaven must be very near the plain old country church. And who shall say it is not?

"GRASP ALL and lose all." Many are so intent on "grasping all" that they lose their health. Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped many a business man on the road to success by making and keeping him healthy.

The Man Without the Hoe.

MRS EMMA G. WILLIAMS.

Lo! all downtrod and degraded,
With brow like gloomiest night,
Comes creeping to my door unguarded
A visitor my soul to so affright.

So plain his mark, no need for introduction,
But what in that eye of hope or pride?
What that sees afar! What of illumination!
Unless a remnant abide—
With sparks driven off like planets from a nebula.
What is there of sense to duty or shame?
What of thought in that inert brain? Aye!
We shudder at this self-abnegation, this life without aim.
Unfurnished he with facilities for battle,
We catch from the heart of social passion
The plaint, "'Twere not we more than ye ate the apple,"
And of gifts the goddess bestows few have possession.

Is this the outcome of divine inspiration,
Worthy the prophets of old?
Is this we see the law of evolution,
Leading on to divinity foretold?
Leading on by agencies human,
Whose wealth is ever and forever increasing?
This soul—back to God will it slowly be drawn,
Or overthow the ages' tradition?
Misshapen by the burden of a heavy load,
Was it passed from the portal by the potter's hands
A thing of beauty, now broken with its God?
How grapple with the problem: "Philanthropists and millionaires?"
What say ye the original cause?
How came it? what is it?
What the end? Here we must pause.

From a palace we trace, of titled fame,
One who ne'er o'er steeps hath climbed
To Freedom's air. The palace of thought and brain
Stands honeycombed o'er, but alas! we find
A soul in a prison is chained,
And, if I err not, with cold disdain
Spurns what by toil might be reclaimed,
And bears away what others gain.
His jeweled hands he cannot use
To cast his fetters off, and with sting
His soul must early wither as vanish the morning dews,
And cling to its support as to the cliff the May flowers cling,
Not doomed to toil, like him at our door,
And he sinks, the billows carrying both under.
Rise! Up to sight, oppressed and oppressor!
Rise! High Priest, with your twin brother!

But forbid me tell of guilt and shame,
Where virtue dwelleth not. Let the goddess her nectar infuse,
And we'll little care. A damp cold creeps o'er my frame,
For to rescue these we've no time to lose.

President Lincoln and the Flowers.

President Lincoln, with his great, kindly nature, to which children and music appealed so strenuously, was of course passionately fond of flowers, and during his administration the conservatories assumed a form, very similar to their present appearance. Very often when Lincoln wished to be absolutely alone he sought the solitude of the conservatory, and those about him, as soon as they became appreciative of this fact, exercised the greatest care that his wish for privacy should be respected. Often when the cloud of war and desolation hung darkest over the country, the old gardener in charge would come suddenly upon the President standing dejectedly among the foliage, his eyes bedimmed with tears.—Woman's Home Companion.

An Evening with the Cates.

J. FRAISE RICHARD.

It was my pleasure to spend, recently, an hour in an exceedingly interesting family—the household of the Cates. The family is quite a large one, and includes members of widely different characteristics.

On the occasion referred to I was not privileged to find all the children at home; and inasmuch as I give the names of only those with whom I was permitted to form a personal acquaintanceship, I am frank to confess my list is not complete. I hope, however, through the aid of admiring friends, to secure and publish the list entire.

I feel confident that my readers will be gratified to know something concerning the various members of this family. To avoid impartiality I begin with the head of the list.

ABDICATE—to give up, or resign a throne, expresses an event that has occurred often in the history of the world. The step is usually an involuntary one.

ADJUDICATE—to settle by law, affords extensive occupation to lawyers and judges.

ADVOCATE—to plead for, or support, calls into service the abilities of preachers, teachers, editors, orators, lecturers and active people generally.

CERTIFICATE—a written declaration, cheers the heart of the recipient from the humblest child in the day school or Sunday-school to the highest officer in the government. Who would refuse a gold certificate?

COMMUNICATE—to give or impart, is very extensive in its description of the processes that transfer benefits from one person to another.

COMPLICATE—to entangle or mix up, indicates a condition very annoying to persons, firms and parties.

CONVOCATE—to assemble, implies a gathering of people for some special purpose.

DEDICATE—to consecrate or set apart, recalls a ceremony quite frequent as applied to both houses and monuments.

DEFALCATE—to show a lack of funds, expresses a condition of either bad bookkeeping or lack of honest purpose.

DELICATE—sensitive, refined, is applied to the objects of nature, to indicate a quality much admired by intelligent people. A condition of delicate health is hardly desirable.

DEPRECATE—to regret; to desire or entreat that something may not be, implies a wish to avoid the happening of evils or misfortunes to mortals.

DOMESTICATE—to make tame or homelike, is an admirable quality in persons and families.

DESICATE—to dry, provides a vegetable compound easily transported but less valuable than that of the objects in their natural state.

DUPLICATE—to double, is quite useful as a means of preserving objects that have a value in themselves.

EDUCATE—to train, to develop, is the panacea for most of the ills of life. Solomon was right in saying: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

EMBROCATE—to rub with a lotion, is a remedial agent of no inconsiderable significance.

EQUIVOCATE—to use ambiguous or doubtful language, indicates a condition of mind and heart not frank and manly. It is hardly to be commended.

ERADICATE—to root out, suggests one of the necessary processes in all true education. As applied to bad habits it is especially commendable.

EXPLICATE—to explain, or make clear, is essential to enable people to form rational ideas on all important subjects.

EXTRICATE—to set free or release, frequently affords relief at an opportune moment.

FABRICATE—to make by art, to falsify, shows a disposition either good or bad, and may, therefore, be commended or condemned.

HYPOTHECATE—to pledge as security, is a term very popular in dealing in bonds or stocks.

INDICATE—to show, suggests the index finger on the signboard and performs valuable service. It is a valuable guide to the pathway to be trodden.

IMPLICATE—to involve, often gets people in trouble by connecting them as particeps criminis.

IMPRECATE—to invoke as an evil, exhibits a disposition wholly unlike that of the Master, who said: "Forgive them, for they know not what they do."

INTRICATE—perplexed, obscure, portrays a state of things that has puzzled many a brain.

LUBRICATE—to oil, to make slippery, is a wise and humane effort to overcome the roughness of life by using some means to counteract excessive friction.

MASTICATE—to chew, reveals a condition highly essential in these days of rush and worry The teeth need to be used more; for a new set can be had at any time, but a new stomach never.

PREVARICATE—to quibble, to evade the truth, is a sleek, slippery person found in every community. She is a very unreliable and untrustworthy creature.

PREDICATE—to declare, to affirim, a personage often mentioned in English grammars when dealing with the analysis of sentences.

PROGNOSTICATE—to predict, to foreshow, has some important connection with the Weather Bureau, and assists Old Probabilities in making his storm forecasts.

RUSTICATE—to live in the country, reveals a species of earthly happiness supremely enjoyed by one who takes a most needed rest.

SUPPLICATE—to petition, to entreat, describes an act which all such smokers should be glad to perform. They should beg the pardon of all decent people for the unpardonable breach of the commonest propriety and respectability.

SYNDICATE—to associate,, to traffic, represents one of the most severely condemned members of the Cate family, and yet it is the one that is most potent to-day in controlling the business and financial world.

TRIPLICATE—to occur by threes, indicates a condition in life of not frequent occurrence.

VACATE—to abandon, to annul, would leave the impression that the original enterprise was to some extent a failure, and a change was deemed necessary.

VINDICATE—to justify, to sustain, implies a result most gratifying to a tried soul. It affords satisfaction to compensate for all trials and indignities endured.

I repeat that it would be difficult to find a family containing a greater diversity of character than the one I have mentioned. Some are lovable; some are despicable; some are friends; some are doubtful; some are outright enemies.

I was at first disposed to recognize as a member of this household, Miss Katy-did; but on reflection I recalled the fact that she has been conducting a self-opinionated controversy, a portion of the time maintaining "Katy-did," and then changing it to the opposite side and insisting with equal fervor, "Katy didn't." I finally concluded that the family had a sufficient burden to carry in sustaining the ambiguous character of Miss Equivocate and Miss Prevaricate. Miss Katy-did was therefore refused recognition in this select family.

Remodeling a Gown

becomes a pleasing occupation, provided it was stitched on a Singer Automatic. The elastic seam made by this machine is perfectly safe when locked, but can be taken apart in an instant when unlocked. Thus its use is especially desirable for the clever woman who wishes to make over a garment so that it may conform to the changing styles. Whether in the hands of the amateur or the expert, this simple bit of mechanism is the most convenient and effective of any.

Having all the advantages claimed for other "automatic" sewing machines, the Silent Singer has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by comparison. Of faultless construction and finish, it is absolutely the lightest-running, the simplest and most compact. It is more easily threaded, and its parts are better protected from dust. The broad treadle better promotes the health and comfort of the operator, because it is lower and the position of the feet can be changed at will. These points are worthy careful consideration by those of delicate health or unaccustomed to continuous use of a sewing machine.

The Danger Line.

LAURENE HIGHFIELD.

It isn't so hard to refrain, dear,
From doing some grievous wrong,
As it is to do right in the trivial things
That arise as we journey along;
To always be patient and loving
And faithful and loyal and true,
And to do minor duties the best that we can,
Though they try us and worry us, too.

It isn't so hard to do right, dear,
When some great thing is to be done,
When the sacrifice made is a momentous one
And approval and praise may be won,
As not to do wrong in small matters,
Or cruel and cross words to say,
Be neglectful or thoughtless, unjust or unkind
To the people we meet every day.

And so you will find throughout life, dear,
The choice between evil and good
Will be hardest to make when there's little involved,
Though its ethics are well understood.
Strength is given to meet sore temptations,
And the soul nerves itself for great deeds,
But a courage that's steadfast when small trials come
Gives to life the divine touch it needs.

Quincy, Ill.

Our Population is 75,000,000.

In June of next year the people of the United States will be counted for the twelfth time since the establishment of our government. "It will require about fifty thousand enumerators," writes Clifford Howard in the November Ladies' Home Journal, "to take the census, and their work must be finished in one month's time, or by the first week in July, 1900. That means that about seventy-five million people must be recorded in thirty days, or at the rate of two and a half million a day. The rate will be even greater than this, however, for in towns and cities of eight thousand inhabitants the enumeration must be completed within two weeks. The enumerators will not be permitted to have any assistance in the work; it must be done by them in person, except in such sections of the country as contain a great many foreigners, where the employment of interpreters will be allowed, as otherwise it would be next to impossible to secure the necessary data. The enumerators will be paid for their services in accordance with the amount of work they are called upon to do."

Canada a Commercial Competitor.

Commenting upon the growth of exports from Canada of cheese, butter and flour, Hon. George Johnson, statistician for Canada, says: "The development of the cheese export trade is marvelous. We sent a little over $500,000 worth of cheese to Great Britain in 1868, and in 1898 we sent $17,522,681 worth, thus far surpassing the exports of the United States, which, last year, to the mother country, were only $3,267,607. Of the total exports of Canadian manufactures in 1868, cheese only formed 3 per cent. in value, while in 1898 it formed over 31 per cent. of the total exports of manufactures. The exports of manufactures of wood, as is quite natural, occupy the highest place, but they have not increased relatively to the others as rapidly. In 1863 the exports of manufactures having wood as the raw material were 61.7 per cent. of the whole, while in 1898 they were 40.3 per cent. During the 30 years Great Britain has taken of our manufactures of wood over $258,000,000 worth, while the United States has taken $242,000,000 worth, leaving Great Britain the better customer by $16,000,000.

Singular Epitaphs.

From more than a column of old and singular epitaphs in the Christian Endeavor World, Nov. 2, we republish the following:

In a Biddeford (England) graveyard may be found this account of why a bridegroom of long ago did not appear at the time set for his wedding:

"The wedding day appointed was,
The wedding clothes provided,
But ere the day did come, alas!
He sickened and he died did."

More than one visitor to the churchyard at Brixham, England, has gone away smiling over this verse found on an old tombstone:

"Underneath this stone
There lies two children dear;
One buried in Ashburton,
The other buried here."

A visitor to another very old cemetery came across the following surprising inscription, almost erased by wind and weather:

"Here lies the mother of children three,
Two on earth and one with she.
Her husband did this stone erect,
As a token of his deep respect."

Brief and right to the point is the following from a tombstone in the state of New York:

"She was in health at 11:30 A. M.
And left for Heaven at 3:30 P. M."

The remarkable matrimonial exploits of a certain Captain Tully are thus set forth on his tombstone, which may be seen in Exeter Cathedral:

"Here lies the body of Captain Tully,
Aged one hundred and nine years fully;
And threescore years before a mayor,
The sword of this city he did bear.
Nine of his wives do with him lie,
So shall the tenth when she doth die."

In a Connecticut rural cemetery may be found an inscription of somewhat ambiguous import. It runs as follows:

"Here lies the body of Obediah Wilkinson,
And Ruth his wife.
Their warfare is accomplished."

A very common epitaph in New England cemeteries is the following:

"Stranger, reflect as you pass by;
As you are now, so once was I.
As I am now, so you shall be;
Prepare for death, and follow me."

In a Maine cemetery may be seen the following:

"Here lies the body of John Mound, Lost at sea, and never found."

A busy body was Betsey Brown, as the lines on her tombstone in Maine testify:

"Here Betsey Brown her body lies,
Her soul is flying in the skies;
While here on earth she sometimes spun
Six hundred skeins from sun to sun,
And wove one day, her daughter brags,
Two hundred pounds of carpet rags."

The Advance Society.

But what about the Advance Society? It is flourishing; the members with unabated enthusiasm are reading their five pages of history and thirty lines of excellent poetry each week. Each week they are stowing away in their minds an admirable quotation; every day they are reading at least one verse in the Bible, and to cap the climax, they are keeping an account of this work in their notebooks. Why this poetry and history and quotation-learning? To cultivate themselves, to develop our possibilities, that we may be as bright as the brightest. Some people wonder why a certain person (somebody else's kin) is not bright. The answer is simply, they neglected to put any oil in their lamps. No wonder a person is stupid when he is burning his wick in an empty head! Pour in the oil of good literature, and see how that wick will draw in rich nourishment and make a blaze! Yes, the Advance Society is flourishing. Who else will come and join for their own good and for our encouragement? Vera McCain, Coldwater, Miss.: "Here comes a Mississippi sand-raker to join your society and advance with you. In twelve weeks I hope to be on the Honor List." Mabel Noris, Abingdon, Ill.: "I didn't know there was such a thing as the Advance Society till I heard there was a letter from Vivian Aten in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. She is one of my best friends, so I hunted up the paper and in that way I got interested. So one evening I hunted for all the back numbers and read them. Now I would like to join the society and keep the rules. Sometime I will write and describe how a sod house is built, if you wish." (I wish it very much. I know how to build a frame house. All you have to do is to get a good carpenter, put all your fortune at his mercy and look for as many disappointments as there are rooms in the plan.) "I am sorry the story about the Westons stopped so soon. I would like to join the society. I am 10. My name is Maudie Kelley. I live at Beardsley, Minn. My sister, Graca, would like to join. She is 12 years old."

But now we come to the ten favorite characters of fiction. You will remember I asked you to name the ten fictitious characters that were dearest to your fancy. If you are like me you like to think over story-people, and to talk about them to your friends. I kept a faithful tally of your votes as they came in. Madge Masres, Ozark, Ark., had on her list seven of the general favorites. The one who came next in naming the most popular was Stella Strawn, Moberly, Mo. The third honor goes to Nelle Campbell, Escondido, Cal. Many characters were named. The ten most popular are: Jo (Little Women), Polly (Old-fashioned Girl), Ellen Montgomery (Wide, Wide World), Florence Dombey, John Halifax, David Copperfield, Gertrude (The Lamplighter), Elsie Dinsmore, Black Beauty and Lucile (a tie vote between the horse and the lady), and the very most popular of all (for Jo comes second), Evangeline. Since Madge Masters named seven of these, you would like to know her other three. They are: Ursula (in John Halifax, Gentleman), Topsy (need I say which Topsy?), Laurie (Little Women). A few who received almost as many votes as the first ten: Amy (Little Women), Rose (Eight Cousins), Ben Hur and Ione (Last Days of Pompeii).

What five persons of history are your favorites? Which five would you rather have met in real life? This was my next question, and of all names submitted, the following five received the largest number of votes: George Washington, Joan of Arc, Empress Josephine, Abraham Lincoln and Thomas Jefferson. Close behind these came Queen Victoria, William Wallace, Oliver Cromwell, General Wolf and Columbus.

And now let us have a quiet chat among our members. Charlie Mountain, West Liberty, Ia.: "O, but I do hate to write this! —I kept the resolutions until June. I have been in poor health—missed the spring and fall terms from school. The doctor won't allow me to go to school, he also don't want me to read very much. I am improving and hope soon to be at work again. The continued story is grand. When my big brother was small he went to the cellar to get some apples. He came running and calling, 'O, mamma, I saw something running down the wall big as Shep!' (Shep is our big dog.) It was nothing but a cat. [This is certainly a startling adventure—did he ever get the apples?] Hope there will be lots of snow this winter, then we can go coasting, and won't I have some fun!" Nelle Campbell: "I am in the ninth grade and and take five studies, Botany, Algebra, Latin, History, English. I like Latin and Botany best. I am glad the Advance Society is prospering." Robert Close, Waco, Tex.: "I think I know just how the mystery of the Red Box Clue will turn out. I think Frank Douglas is none other than a long-lost daughter of that rich and proud Mrs. Clarmont. I believe Mrs. Clarmont will change and be good to her when she finds this out." Stella Strawn: "I am very much interested in the Red Box Clew. I can hardly wait for the next paper. I joined the society June 1st." Lilamay Dawson, Dawson, I. T.: "I am going to save all the chapters of the Red Box Clew and paste them in my scrap book. I feel so sorry for poor Vega. How many members have we now? [About 500.] When I joined the society we were living at Turley, I. T." (I wonder if people living in Indian Teritory ever make a slangy pun by saying they are always in IT? But perhaps this is an old chestnut down in I. T.) Henry L. Cash, Pennville, Ind.: "Bro. Underwood is preaching at our church. I confessed Christ and was baptized last Lord's day. We have a good Sunday-school and I love to attend." Madge Masters: "My favorite quotation—

'Let fate do her worst, there are moments of joy,
Bright dreams of the past that she cannot destroy,
Which come in the nighttime of sorrow and care,
And bring back the features that joy used to wear' (Moore).

But mamma says the one I need most is, 'Consecration alone conquers'" (Buxton).

Stella Nichols, Stone Fort, Ill.: "I am going to school and having a fine time." (Good for you!) Nelle V. Campbell: "I have read a chapter every day in the Bible for three months except the night of commencement. I came home late and had company to stay all night, and forgot my chapter. I have been reading the Last Days of Pompeii and My Opinions and Betsy Bobbit's. I am reading Ben Hur at present. I was very sorry when the Wilson story stopped, but believe I will like the Red Box Clew as well." Emma Robinson (14), Boston: "I have decided to join the Advance Society. I wish the members could meet me here some Saturday afternoon and go with me on an excursion to the sure-enough house where Jo and Amy and the rest of the Little Women really lived. I often see the place where Miss Alcott wrote her books, and once I went to Concord as an invited guest to the home of Emerson. The Red Box Clew is just fine, but for all that I think I can guess the secret. I think Frank Douglas is the daughter of that nice housekeeper, Mrs. Dew; and I believe Mrs. Dew will turn out to be a fine person. I think may be Vega will regain her hearing. I am anxious to learn if I am right, because my sister, Cleda, says Frank will turn out to be the daughter of an English lady, living in an old English castle, but who was lost in a big crowd, or something like that. If I am right and Cleda is wrong, won't I crow?—because she is 15; and, by the way, she wants her name put down as the very newest member of the Advance Society."

New Honor List: Stella Strawn, Moberly, Mo.; Nelle V. Campbell, Escondido, Cal. (secod quarter); Madge Masters, Ozark, Ark. (third quarter); Ethel Mae Taylor, Harlan, Ia. (third); Stella Nichols, Stone Fort, Ill.; Alvin B. Cash, Pennville, Ind. (fourth quarter—and hurrah for you!); Harry L. Cash; Nannze D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky. (third.)

Next week the Red Box Clew will contain the adventure of the tower porch; and there will be one hint as to the mystery of Frank Douglas' life. I wonder who of my readers will be shrewd enough to guess the rest from this little clue? I will be pleased to hear from you upon that subject, or upon any that interests you. A subject that is particularly interesting to me is Winter Amusements. Let everybody write to me about the way they get fun out of witer.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The narrative which opens with the eighth chapter of Nehemiah, or rather with the latter half of the last verse of the seventh, is distinctly separated from the section extending from the opening of the book to the middle of verse 73 of chapter 7, which is taken from the personal memoirs of Nehemiah. In the account from which the present lesson was taken it is seen that Ezra and Nehemiah are co-operating. Whatever hypothesis regarding the work of these two men may be adopted, it is seen that this period is later than that of the rebuilding of the walls, concerning which Nehemiah has given us his narrative. If Ezra's work preceded that of Nehemiah, as it has been usually supposed, then he seems to have been absent during the entire period of Nehemiah's most strenuous work; otherwise we can hardly account for the absence of any mention of him in the governor's reports. If, on the other hand, Ezra arrived in Jerusalem about the year 397 B. C., in the reign of Artaxerxes II., as seems probable, the narrative which begins with Nehemiah 8 has to do with the period after his arrival, when he and Nehemiah would be drawn together by their mutual purposes of reformation. Ezra had come to Jerusalem bringing with him the law, and the main object of his coming was to impress it upon the mind of the community as the only safeguard and assurance of success for Jerusalem. To this enterprise Nehemiah would naturally lend his most enthusiastic assistance, for he was not concerned alone with the external rebuilding of the city, but equally in its moral revival. The earnestness with which he had undertaken the work of restoring Jerusalem to its former prosperity shows that he was deeply interested in his countrymen in Judah and would gladly utilize every means for their improvement.

We have then in this lesson two men of radically different characteristics co-operating for the same great purpose—Nehemiah, a Jew of prominence in the court of the Persian king, voluntarily leaving his high position at Susa to take upon himself the lowly and arduous tasks of assisting his countrymen in Palestine and devoting to this enterprise his splendid abilities and his considerable wealth; Ezra, on the other hand, of the priestly party, a scribe, perhaps the earliest of the scribes, a man whose contact with practical affairs had been comparatively small and who had spent his time in the study of the law, but was equally interested in the prospects of Judah, viewing them, however, from a slightly different angle. Nehemiah had seen that Jerusalem needed rebuilding and especially needed the protection of walls. Ezra believed that it needed education and particularly a grounding in the elements of righteousness laid down in the Levitical code which he brought from Persia. A man of scrupulously exact ideas with regard to conduct, he was prepared to bring just the elements which were needed to complete the reformation begun by Nehemiah, who had already insisted upon a separation of the people from their heathen neighbors and the observance of the Sabbath day. In this combination of forces may be seen the necessity for an internal as well as an external element in every religious work. It is not by formal reformation nor by external equipment alone that the work of God is to prosper There must be a genuine revival of intelligence and zeal on the part of the church if its mission is to succeed. Nehemiah and Ezra must go evermore hand in hand. The energetic and enthusiastic organizer must be assisted by the teacher.

The work of public instruction in the newly received code of law, which whatever its character and date, seems not to have been in the possession of the Jews of Jerusalem, but to have been brought to them for the first time by Ezra, was undertaken in the seventh month. This was the period of the year set apart to the autumn festival of thanksgiving called the Feast of Tabernacles, and it was therefore marked by the gathering of the people at the sanctuary according to ancestral custom. This does not connect the narrative with that immediately preceding, as we have no means of knowing the year in which this gathering was held, but it was the occasion best suited to such an enterprise as the public reading of the law (cf. Ezra 3-1). The province of Judah was comparatively small, extending only a short distance in various directions from Jerusalem, but it was dotted with small towns in which the Jews had been more accustomed to live than in Jerusalem itself up to the time when the city began to be rebuilt. This particular year the people celebrated the autumn feast in an especial manner. Ezra, the reformer, had already made known the fact that he had brought the book of the law and that it was necessary to the welfare of the community. Sufficient interest had been created to cause the people to ask for a larger knowledge of its contents. Ezra, therefore, produced the sacred rolls when the congregation met in an open space in the city not far from the water gate, and here upon the first day of the seventh month a public exposition of the law took place. This law had to do with the ceremonial life of Israel as a sacred community, and its tenor may be understood by consulting the Books of Leviticus and Numbers, with the latter part of the Book of Exodus. That the whole of this law was not rehearsed is evident from the fact that it would be impossible to read so voluminous a document through in half a day, the time said to have been taken in this public reading, but it is worthy of note that the people were attentive for something like six hours to religious instruction of this character and that they gave the most serious attention to the reading. In order to secure the purposes for which they were gathered Ezra himself stood upon an elevated platform and was assisted by a number of Levites, perhaps scribes like himself, who interpreted to the people in various parts of the congregation the words which he spoke, or it is possible that these men relieved one another in the task of reading in a loud voice so that all the people could hear. It was necessary that the earnest attention of the people should be secured, and this seems to have been accomplished from the fact that their responses of Amen at the close of paragraphs of the reading showed that they understood what had been said and were willing to conform to the demands of the law.

But it was not sufficient that the words should be so pronounced that they could hear and comprehend. Many of the people were ignorant and consequently unable to interpret for themselves the terms of the law. Therefore, the readers gave explanations here and there or paraphrases of what they read to bring it into range of all the people. This is what is meant by "reading the law of God distinctly and giving the sense."

But the knowledge of the contents of this code produced a depressing effect upon the people, just as the discovery of the lawbook in the temple alarmed Josiah in his day, for the sanctions of the law were high and the people were conscious that they had not lived in accordance with it. Many, therefore, wept as they heard its words. But the governor, Nehemiah, who was perhaps of a more sympathetic nature than the scribes and who was interested to look at things from the popular point of view, assured them that the real character of this day and service was joyful and not sad. If the law held up a high ideal, it was cause for rejoicing rather than grief, and if they had failed to keep the divine commandments it was because they had not depended sufficiently upon the divine strength. The joy of the Lord should be their strength hereafter. The day was not to be clouded by lamentations on their part, but rather to be regarded as a red-letter day in their history, the beginning of a new period of prosperity to the state. With finished temple and rebuilt walls they were now to proceed to the more quiet task of developing their religious life in accordance with the principles laid down in the law. Then he sent them away to observe fittingly the day with feasting and gifts to the poor, rejoicing in the new knowledge that had come to them concerning the will of God.

It must not be supposed that the Hebrew religion depended for popular knowledge of the divine will upon such assemblies of the people as this. It was only on rare occasions that a resort was had to such mass meetings for Bible study. The regular and orderly business of instructing the people in the Word of God so far as it was then in existence was carried forward in the homes. They were to teach their children the precepts and commandments of the Lord, to bind them upon their minds by constant attention to religious instruction in the home. Whenever public gatherings were held for this purpose they were rather supplementary than primary in character. It is certainly true that whatever criticism we may have to offer upon the Jewish religion as such, the fact remains that these people gave great attention to the study of the Scriptures and were never found ignorant of their contents, though they may often have been formal and pendantic in their application of them.

This lesson needs to be taken to heart in the present day when the Bible is being neglected for almost every form of literature which comes in such teeming quantities from the press. The family altar, which in earlier days was a safeguard to the life of the children as they went out of the home, is in too many cases neglected or abandoned and no care is taken to have the children commit Scripture to memory as was the case in former days. The result of this is apparent in a startling degree of ignorance on the part of otherwise intelligent Christian people regarding the contents of the Scriptures. There needs to be a revival of enthusiasm in the study of the Bible. It has suffered many elements of opposition in the past—from persecution, from suppression from ridicule and from rationalistic attacks—but all of these combined are insignificant in their power for evil as compared with the neglect which the Bible suffers at the hands of those who believe in its divine character Many there are no doubt who would be willing to give their lives for the Bible who could not pass a common-school examination upon its contents. And with the Word of God excluded from public schools and from state universities, in spite of the fact that it is the basis of all our culture and has saturated the best literature of modern times with its language and thought, there is needed a strenuous effort on the part of Christian people to reclaim for it the place which it occupied in educational and family life in former days. There are many signs that Christians are beginning to realize the situation and are taking steps to improve it, but the lesson of this great meeting for Bible study in the days of Ezra will be lost if it does not kindle a new enthusiasm in many quarters for a study of the Word of God in our own day.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 19.

LIBERTY AND LOVE.

(Rom. 14:1-23.)

(A Temperance Meeting.)

The only means we have of judging one another is by outward appearances. Manifestly this is altogether inadequate, and the Scripture so informs us. Indeed, the basis of the Sermon on the Mount is the proposition: "The motive is the test of the action." Until we have pierced beneath the outward appearance to the true springs of action that are beneath, we cannot truly judge of one another. Even the laws of the land take into account, in a measure, the motives for acts. Of course, the law is compelled very largely to proceed according to outward acts and evidences, nevertheless the intent of the deed has much to do with judgments of bench and jury. But it is with extreme difficulty that we find out the motives of the heart, hence we should be careful how we judge another.

Such is the spirit of the words used by the apostle in our lesson. It is to our own Master that we stand or fall. No one else can see into our hearts or is capable of judging of our actions. He understands us. He sees and knows us, motives and all. So, then, let us all, temperance advocates that we are, be temperate in judgment, never infringing upon the liberty of others.

Then, let us also, in the liberty of our actions, be influenced by love as the deepest motive. If eating of meat, or drinking of beverages make my brother to offend, the motive that should lead me to refrain is the motive of brotherly love. This is the strongest possible argument for total abstinence. It is no doubt true that many of us could partake of wines and other liquors without excess. Many persons have done so. But so many more have been unable to do so, and have been lost to all goodness and nobility by indulgence, that we ought to forego the use of liquors because of the dangers of our friends.

There is, therefore, a limit to liberty—a place at which liberty becomes destruction. Liberty is bounded on the right by love, on the wrong by license, on the north by the coldness of excessive individuality, on the south by the fervent heat of melted and sacrificed personality. Liberty has a true circle, out of which it dare not swing. Every man has the right to do as he pleases—yes, so long as he pleases to do right. This is a country in which every man is a king—yes, because a king is one who loves and serves. "I serve," is the motto of the truest king. Each of us is a sovereign, so long as he holds the sceptre—love. Love is the only thing that rules personality in this world or the other. Love is the thing that truly is greatest in this world.

What An Octogenarian Says. Lick Creek, Ill., Oct. 27, 1898. Rev. Josephus Moss writes: "Your Blood Vitalizer was received in due order, and has been thoroughly tried. I am now 81 years old, and your medicine has helped me wonderfully. I was down with kidney disease and general debility. I had very severe pains in my back and hips. Your Blood Vitalizer has completely restored me and made me fat and healthy. I weigh more now than when I was in the prime of life. I am thankful to God for your wonderful medicine."

In old age when the natural strength begins to give way, a mild invigorating remedy becomes an actual necessity. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is especially adapted for such cases. Its salutary effect is noticeable after a few doses—not a drug store medicine—sold to the people direct by the proprietor or through local agents. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A SOCIAL QUEEN.

"Who would ever believe that she is the mother of five children." These were the words that caught the ear of the Woman Reporter as she moved among the throng at a fashionable reception. Just before her stood the hostess, a young-looking, handsome woman receiving her guests with that air of hearty vivacious enjoyment which all the world considers as the special prerogative of youth.

There was sparkle in her eyes, a soft clear natural color in her cheeks; she had a firm and rounded form, and that steady easy poise of the whole body which betokens strong limbs and healthy nerves.

It was the Reporter's business to be curious; moreover, she was a woman; and receiving gracious permission to call on the following day, she duly presented herself armed with a hundred such questions as only a woman can ask.

"Yes, I have five children" said the hostess, with a tone of earnest happy pride; "hope I'll have five more. I love every one of them. They are good children too, and a comfort to me all the time."

"You can't understand it of course, and my friends wonder that I keep my health and strength and do my work; but that I take care of myself is the reason. I never used to be strong. I was thoughtless and careless. After my first baby came I was all broken down and prayed that I might never have another, but I have learned better and I am stronger now than I ever was in my life."

"Women break down because they go without the little extra help they need to tide them over hard places. When a woman expects to become a mother she ought to be at her very best. But that is exactly the time when most women feel weak and sick and miserable. They grow melancholy and anxious as the time approaches and when it comes they have no strength or stamina of body or mind to go through the ordeal."

"No wonder they suffer and nearly die sometimes, and are all broken down for months or years. If they would take the right care of themselves and strengthen themselves in a natural way, they would never suffer as they do; and instead of dreading to have children they would welcome them as a real blessing."

"It is simply a case of a 'stitch in time saves nine' or rather nine hundred. A little natural reinforcement at the time when baby is expected will save months, perhaps years of suffering and weakness. At such a time I always take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; it invariably gives me the extra strength and healthy nerve-power which a woman needs to bring her baby into the world safely and comfortably."

"It is the most wonderful thing in the world to build up a woman's nervous system and strengthen the special organism of motherhood. It gives you the recuperative power that a woman cannot get in any other way. It carries you through the nursing time beautifully; it helps you to nourish the baby and make him hearty and strong too. My four younger children are the sturdiest youngsters you ever saw. This one grand 'Favorite Prescription' has made me the healthy, happy mother I am."

"I can tell you of a dozen women who have had almost the same experience as mine. I saw a letter written by Mrs. Jennie J. Jackson, who lived at Fergussons Wharf, in Isle of Wight Co., Va. These are her own words: 'I have enjoyed better health since taking Dr. Pierce's medicine than I have since I have been married. I can work hard all day and sleep well at night. I was almost gone when I wrote to Doctor Pierce three years ago. I had uterine trouble very badly, but, thank the Lord, I am very well now. My doctor did not have any faith in 'patent medicines,' but he says, 'something has done you good.' I tried many different medicines and got no better until I tried Dr. Pierce's medicines. The first bottle gave me ease. I have taken six bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and I feel as well as ever in my life, and can work hard all day and do as much walking as I ever did. I was nothing but a skeleton. I was so thin in flesh that it hurt me to lie down."

"I think Dr. Pierce has done more toward making healthy, happy women than any other man in this country."

"If you want a heavy cloth-bound copy of the book, like this one, (picking up and exibiting to the Reporter a large beautifully bound volume) send 31 stamps, and address World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y."

Literature.

THE TEACHINGS OF THE BOOKS; or, the Literary Structure and Interpretation of the Books of the New Testament: a Work of Collaboration. By Herbert L. Willett and James M. Campbell. The Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago.

The general character of this book is set forth with sufficient clearness in the title and sub-title, given above. The authors, Messrs. Willett and Campbell, consider "the literary structure" and give the "interpretation of the books of the New Testament." The first part of the work has been done by Prof. Willett, the last by Mr. Campbell.

In a "Prefatory Note" the authors explain that this "handbook has been prepared especially for advanced Bible-class work," and the hope is expressed that "it may be also found useful to the pastor and to the general Bible student." "It is designed to furnish something more than an introduction to the study of the books of the New Testament." The separate books are examined for the purpose of discovering "the essential truths which they contain." "The proper classification and arrangement of the literary material is valued only as an aid to the interpretation of spiritual facts." "The aim of the book is to get through the letter of Scripture to the Spirit, through the shell to the kernel, through the bone to the marrow." And this the authors have succeeded well in doing. "The Teachings of the Books" is a helpful volume.

"The results of the older and of the newer learning are alike gladly accepted when they can assist in seeing things from the author's standpoint, in giving to his words their appropriate historical setting, and in getting through them to the mind of the Spirit."

"The sections upon the literary structure and historical background of the separate books are the work of Herbert L. Willett." After some things that have been said in the papers recently concerning Prof. Willett, his conservatism as seen in this volume is a matter of surprise. His intellectual independence is everywhere apparent. He is the retained attorney of no school. He is no special pleader. Truth is his watchword. What are the facts? is his question.

Again and again he contradicts McGiffert in the conclusions which he records. He has, for instance, no doubt as to the Pauline authorship of the Pastoral Epistles.

There are, of course, conclusions that will be called in question by some who will open "The Teachings of the Books" for the purpose, primarily, of discovering doctrinal errors.

Mark's "Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God," is "regarded as by several years the earliest of the Gospels." Contrary to the teaching of Prof. McGiffert, Prof. Willett regards the Book of Acts as giving us an accurate and, therefore, reliable picture of New Testament Christianity. "This treatise," he says, "is our only source of information regarding the origin of Christianity." He quotes approvingly Prof. Schaff as saying, concerning the Book of Acts: "It is the best as well as the first manual of church history."

As to the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews, Prof. Willett seems to be in accord with Pres. McGarvey, as the latter expresses himself on this point in his "Handbook for Bible Study" for the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Circles. In fact, he seems throughout the book to be in much closer fellowship with McGarvey than with such men as Briggs and McGiffert.

The genuineness of the Second Epistle of Peter, he says, "has been much disputed, and with a good show of reason;" but before leaving the subject he says that "its inspiration, if tested by its moral value, stands unquestioned."

The Book of Revelation "is a great drama, written at a great epoch," by an unknown author. "The value of the book, however, does not rest on the questions of authorship, unity or data, but on the contribution which it makes to our knowledge of Christian thought and experience at a period so near the life of our Lord." The early date of Revelation is assumed.

So much has been said about Prof. Willett's part of "The Teachings of the Books" that but little space remains in which to speak of the work of his collaborator, James M. Campbell. "The spiritual teaching of the books" is admirably brought out by Mr. Campbell. His task does not lead him into the department of criticism as does that of Prof. Willett. He accepts without question the conclusions of his coworker and proceeds on this basis to exhibit most helpfully the doctrines of the separate books of the New Testament.

NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

Rollin Lynde Hartt's new article, "The Ohioans," in the Atlantic for November will attract a wide circle of readers. In this article Mr. Hartt carries his characteristic method into a new and widely interesting field. Mr. Hartt's methods of observation are not superficial, and his treatment, while distinctly facetious, is not flippant; but he has the unique faculty of seeing the salient points of a community, and presenting their humorous side in a manner that is not merely amusing, but also covers a serious purpose, and a keen and thoughtful analysis of the situation.

The November number of the North American Review contains two articles of conspicuous authority and extraordinary ability upon the conflict which for sometime has caused bitter dissension and division in the Church of England. The Earl of Portsmouth gives a most interesting account of the origin of the Royal Supremacy and of the purposes which it is intended to serve, while he forecasts the deplorable consequences which, in his judgment, are to be apprehended from the success of those who are now in rebellion against it.

The Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour argues against the Ritualists that their extreme course in following practices that have been unknown in the Anglican Church for three hundred years prevents the church from receiving a larger measure of autonomy than she now enjoys; and he deplores the serious injury done to the cause of religion by the unseemly disputes in which churchmen engage over matters which, compared with the deeper religious questions now occupying the minds of thinking men, are as nothing in the balance.

The leading literary feature of The Century magazine for 1900 will be a historical serial on the life and times of Cromwell by the Right Hon. John Morley, M. P. Mr. Morley was selected by the Gladstone family to write the biography of Gladstone, and no man is more competent to treat the life of Cromwell at this time. The article will be finely illustrated with original drawings and unpublished portraits. The accompanying features of this serial article in The Century will also be of remarkable interest from such writers as Ernest Seton-Thompson, Richard Whiting, Sir Walter Besant, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and others of international fame in Europe and in America. Another special feature of The Century will be its art work. Timothy Cole's unique and beautiful wood blocks will continue to be a feature, with the work of many other engravers who have made the American school famous. The fine half-tone plates—re-engraved by wood-engravers—for which the magazine is distinguished, will appear with new methods of printing and illustrating.

In the November magazine number The Outlook prints a portrait and brief sketch of Mr. James Barnes, now on his way to the Transvaal as special correspondent for The Outlook. The articles from Mr. Barnes on the Transvaal War and on the problems of South Africa will undoubtedly prove as attractive a feature in this journal as have the two series of articles on Cuba by Mr. George Kennan. Another series of equal importance will be that on the Philippines by Mr. Phelps Whitmarsh, author of "The World's Rough Hand." Mr. Whitmarsh is now in the islands as a special commissioner for The Outlook. An article on Hawaii in its present relations to the United States, including an interview with ex-President Dole, appears in The Outlook for October 28th, and forms the first of Mr. Whitmarsh's series under the general title "Colonial America." CANTERBURY.

Oliver P. Canterbury died at Cantrall, Ill., October 23, 1899, in his 76th year. He was born in Fleming County, Ky. With his parents he came to Sangamon, Ill., when but two years old. He lived here from infancy until death. He saw every stage of development in his community and added much to its progress. He was a man of good counsel; active and industrious in his business relations. Even during the last ten years of his life, while suffering and enfeebled by paralysis, he attended to his business affairs He became a Christian in early life, and always loved to defend the principles and ordinances of primitive Christianity. He leaves, besides a community of friends, an aged widow and nine children to mourn their loss. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Canfrall Christian Church. L. T. FAULDERS.

Harristown, Ill.

DAVIS.

Mrs. B. F. Davis, wife of B. F. Davis, was born near Chicago, Ill., August 28, 1855; died October 24, 1899. She leaves a husband, two children and a large circle of friends to mourn her departure. Sister Davis gave her heart to the Savior in October of 1892, and was baptized in the Central Church of this city by F. G. Tyrrell. She became a member of the Fourth Church in 1894, and remained a faithful member of same until our Heavenly Father called her home. "They're gathering homeward from every land"

"Weep not that her labors are o'er,
Weep not that her race is run;
May God grant that we may rest as calmly
When our work like hers is done."

KILLINS.

Joseph Killins, son of Andrew and Hannah Killins, was born in Greenfield, now Coal Center, Washington County, Pa., May 30, 1858. October 16, 1884, he was married to Mary E. Edwards. In October, 1887, he obeyed the gospel and united with the Christian Church at California, Pa., of which organization he was a member at the time of his death. During a long and painful illness he bore his sufferings patiently and hopefully. He died October 9, 1899, aged 41 years, four months and nine days. His funeral services were held October 11, and were conducted by the writer.

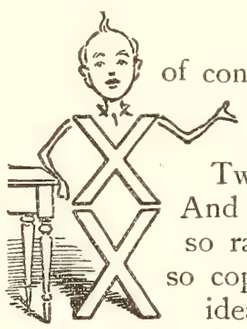
W. N. ARNOLD.

McCORMICK.

Mrs. J. H. McCormick, living five miles south of Sedalia, Mo., departed this life at 6 A. M., October 27, after an illness of four days. She was unconscious from the first and died in that condition. She was laid to rest Saturday, October 28, in the Bohon family burying ground, two miles south of Smithton, the place she selected fifty years ago to be buried. The funeral services were held at the Smithton Christian Church by Rev. W. H. Rodgers, and were very impressive. Mrs. McCormick (nee Bohon) was born in Mercer County, Kentucky, September 16, 1829, removing to Pettis County, Missouri, in 1838, where she has since resided continuously. She was married to J. H. McCormick on May 2, 1850, they living together for nearly half a century. She leaves behind to mourn her loss her husband and four sons—Wm. E., Walter V., George H. and James E. McCormick; also three brothers and five sisters. Well may it be said, "A good woman is gone," as humanity has never known one better. She was self-sacrificing at all times; was always ready to lend a helping hand in the hour of distress. She was a good neighbor, a devoted wife, a tender and loving mother and a consistent member of the Christian Church for over fifty years. She has gone to just reward. Although there is a vacant chair and aching hearts at her earthly home, all is peace and loveliness beyond the skies.

A FRIEND.

ONE IN EVERY FOUR.



One Person In Every Four Suffers From Piles.

About one person in every four suffers from some form of rectal disease. The most common and annoying is itching piles, indicated by warmth, slight moisture and intense, uncontrollable itching in the parts affected.

The usual treatment has been some simple ointment or salve which sometimes gives temporary relief, but nothing like a permanent cure can be expected from such superficial treatment.

The only permanent cure for itching piles yet discovered is the Pyramid Pile Cure—not only for itching piles but for every other form of piles, blind, bleeding or protruding. The first application gives instant relief and the continued use for a short time causes a permanent removal of the tumors or the small parasites which cause the intense itching and discomfort of itching piles.

Many physicians for a long time supposed that the remarkable relief afforded by the Pyramid Pile Cure was because it was supposed to contain cocaine, opium, or similar drugs, but such is not the case. A recent careful analysis of the remedy showed it to be absolutely free from any cocaine, opium, or in fact any poisonous, injurious drugs whatever. Sold by druggists at 50 cents per package.

THE EXILED PROPHET

By J. G. ENCELL

This book is of especial interest to Sunday-school teachers just now. Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the third quarter of 1899 are taken from the Book of Daniel, and the first seventy pages of "The Exiled Prophet" contain an Essay on the Book of Daniel, written by the well-known author and Bible scholar, Dr. D. R. Dungan. This essay will explain the Prophecy of Daniel, and should be read and studied by the Sunday-school teachers of to-day. Having read this they will be prepared to present the Sunday-school lessons in the present quarter to their classes in an acceptable manner. In addition to Dr. D. R. Dungan's explanation of Daniel the book is an able treatise on Revelation, the author of which has devoted many years of study and investigation to what many think is a "Sealed Book."

The book embraces 245 pages, neatly bound in cloth and profusely illustrated. Send orders to CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS.

True Economy

The difference of cost between a good and a poor baking powder would not amount for a family's supply to one dollar a year. The poor powder would cost many times this in doctors' bills.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder may cost a little more per can, but it is more economical in the end, because it goes further in leavening and insures perfect, wholesome food.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder used always in making the biscuit and cake saves both health and money. Made from pure, grape cream of tartar, most healthful of fruit acids.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO., CHICAGO.

NOTE.—You cannot, if you value good health, afford to use cheap, low-grade, alum baking powders. They are apt to spoil the food; they do endanger the health. All physicians will tell you that alum in food is deleterious.

HIGHLY COMMENDED.

N. J. Aylsworth's new book, "Frequency f the Lord's Supper," is highly commended by those who have carefully read it. This little book is rapidly gaining in favor among our people. It ought to have a very large circulation and its influence for good would be to deepen the spirituality of the church membership. The following is an extract from J. S. Lamar's opinion of this little book: "I have read N. J. Aylsworth's Frequency of the Lord's Supper with sincere pleasure, unqualified approbation and great spiritual profit. I heartily commend it to ministers, elders and all earnest Christians whose hearts are reaching after the best things in our holy religion. No such person can afford to pass by this helpful little book." The price of this little book is 25 cents, postpaid. It is bound in paper and contains 103 pages.

ITS MERITS RECOGNIZED.

The editor of the Baptist Standard, the leading Baptist paper of Texas, in a recent issue of his paper highly commends "Queen Esther" to his readers. We can here only give the following extract from the notice as it appeared in the paper: "The book itself is well written, high in tone and marked by intellectual strength and devout purpose. The author thoroughly enters into the spirit of the period described and his application of the truths of Esther to existing conditions are discriminating. It is unusual to find so complete an account of the delicacy of mind and devotion to refinement which led to the dethronement of the gentlewoman, Vashti."

THANKSGIVING CONCERT.

Now is the time to begin to prepare for Thanksgiving entertainments. The "Harvest Home," a Thanksgiving service, arranged by W. W. Dowling, is well adapted for an entertainment on Thanksgiving day. It consists of Scripture readings, recitation and songs, with the music. It can be creditably rendered by the average Sunday-school of to-day. When it is fully set forth before an audience it is both entertaining and instructive. The price is 25 cents per dozen or $2 per hundred copies, postpaid. Sample copies sent on application.

MOSES, THE MAN OF GOD,

Is the title of the latest book by Dr. D. R. Dungan. The many who have read the former works of Dr. Dungan can rest assured tha "Moses, the Man of God," will fully sustain the author's reputation as a Bible scholar and writer. This book is now in the hands ot the binder and will be ready for the reader in a few days.

The ordinary student of Old Testament characters will find that Dr. Dungan brings out into clear light the many grand traits of character in the life of Moses. The book will be neatly bound in cloth and the price is $1, postpaid.

California Notes.

The little church at Escondido has had a somewhat precarious existence in the past, but God has been with us, and we are to-day a living church, praises be to his holy name, hoping for a brighter future, as we look to him for guidance.

Yesterday we stood beside an open grave weeping with the bereaved ones, as we paid a last and loving tribute to our sister in Christ, Mrs. Martha E. Smith. Sister Smith had been a great sufferer for many months, and we know that death to her was a happy relief, but it seemed very sad to us as we thought of the darkened home from had gone forever the loved wife and mother. All was done for her that loving hands could do, and the devotion of her own family, which was beautiful and complete, did much to soothe her dying pillow. A husband, two interesting daughters and many friends remain to mourn her loss. May God comfort the sorrowing ones in his own sweet way.

While we shed tears of sorrow yesterday, to-day fell tears of joy, as one strong in his manhood came forward and confessed his Savior before men. The father of an interesting family, a sterling business man of standing and influence in the community, the hour of his conversion seemed one of peculiar joy to us all.

So it is. We have our seasons of sorrow and rejoicing. May we bear each as becometh Christians. It has seemed to us, at times, that our periods of sunshine have been comparatively few, but we have had them. In an existence of some eight or ten years we have been, with the exception of one year, without a resident pastor. By far the greater part of the time we have had no preaching. Bro. Crabtree, of San Diego, of whose noble Christian character we cannot say too much, has come to us often in our need, with such words of cheer and comfort that we have been impelled to press on toward the mark of the high calling. He held us several meetings and we had a most remarkable growth, finaly being able to call Bro. D. A. Russell to the pastorate. He labored with us earnestly for one brief year. Then came two successive years of drouth, which resulted in a veritable exodus from this section, our church losing some forty or fifty members by removal, again rendering us unable to hire a minister. Many of those who had stood by us in prosperity now deserted uo in our day of great trial. How the dear Savior must grieve over such faithlessness, and how unworthy we must seem of the price with which we were bought.

Three months ago, through the influence of Bro. Crabtree, the state board sent to us Bro. R. A. Hopper. Surely, there must have been divine guidance in this, for Bro. Hopper is so exactly the man we needed. Eloquent, learned, experieced and deeply consecrated, what more could we desire? And now our prospects grow brighter. Frail in body, but strong in spirit, Bro. Hopper proclaims the gospel with great power, and surely God's Word will not return unto him void when presented so strongly and beautifully by his servant. We feel confident that many will be won to Christ as a result of his ministry. Bro. Hopper goes to Los Angeles this week to supply the pulpit of the First Christian Church in the absence of Bro. Smither. His health permitting he will return here Nov. 1st to continue his work.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

Vol. V.	Little Generals.
Vol. VI.	Little Statesmen.

The author thoroughly understands the mental wants of the child, and in these volumes these wants are happily met. The biographical sketches of the great men of the world, while they were growing into greatness, are always fascinating to the children.

These stories are presented in such an attractive manner that the mind of the child will retain them all through life. The little folks that will carefully read these stories will be in possession of many of the incidents in the lives of a large number of the greatmen and women who have blessed the world with their lives. These little volumes should be placed in the homes of this country to bless children. The little ones of the family should know the facts given in this series of biographical stories, and thus early in life they can be taught that the "Lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime."

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxvi. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, November 16, 1899. No. 46

CURRENT EVENTS.

To a dispassionate and nonpartisan observer it appears that the results of the state elections on last Tuesday are not nearly so decisive in either direction as both parties try to claim. It is true that the Republicans carried Ohio by a plurality of about 50,000 after a campaign which centered chiefly on national issues. But a Republican plurality of 50,000 in Ohio is nothing overwhelming, and even that would have been less if it had not been for the independent candidacy of "Golden Rule" Jones, whose 100,000 supporters seem to have come more largely from Democratic than from Republican ranks. And the Jones campaign, which apparently helped to win the victory for Nash, has nothing to do with national issues. The immediate outcome of the battle in Ohio is the freezing of John R. McLean's political aspirations, which, be it said, were never more than a fatuous dream, based on the two improbable contingencies that he would win a Democratic victory in McKinley's state and that fusion forces would be defeated in Bryan's state. Even in that event it is scarcely credible that McLean could have succeeded the Nebraskan in the leadership of the Democracy. Not even his newly acquired brother-in-law-hood to Admiral Dewey could give to that dream a semblance of probable reality.

The result in Nebraska was about equally decisive with that in Ohio and on the other side. There were fewer disturbing elements in the way of personal enmities, outcry against trusts and independent candidates, but a straightforward campaign on national issues. The "fusion" was harmoniously fused and was backed by Mr. Bryan's strong personal influence. But the Democratic victory must be interpreted as a tribute to Mr. Bryan's personal popularity in his own state even more than as a rebuke of the policy of the administration. There is room for all sorts of opinions as to the soundness of Mr. Bryan's economic views and financial theories, and there may well be varying estimates of his intellectual strength and of the actual merits of his style of oratory; but to deny his influence or to overlook the fact that for vast numbers of people of average intelligence there is a halo around his head and a glamour about his very name, is merely to play the ostrich. Eminent Democrats differ as to whether the chief issue in next year's presidential campaign will be anti-expansion or free silver, but no one has been able to mention any other probable candidate in either case than William J. Bryan.

Kentucky's election has been marked by features characteristic of the "dark and bloody ground." Election day was disturbed by feuds and fights, and nobody knows yet which way the contest at the polls has gone. Nobody will know until several legal points have been fought through. It was a close vote and the plurality will not be large on either side. In either case the election has little or no significance for national politics, for local issues completely occupied the field. Even Bryan's personal advocacy of Goebel, the regular Democratic candidate, could not give a national turn to the matter. It was a fight over Goebel, and if Gen. Taylor and his ticket are finally declared elected it will not be because of Kentucky's approval of the Republican program, but because of the division of the Democratic party. The same is true, with the names changed, in Maryland, where the division of the Republican party was responsible for a Democratic victory. The result in Iowa was the most thorough and decisive victory for the administration on purely national issues.

While the suggestion is coming from many quarters that the President or Congress ought to declare definitely that it is the administration's intention to grant autonomous government in the Philippines, there comes something more decisive than a declaration of intentions—the thing itself. On Oct. 2nd there was a general election in the Island of Negros. The right of suffrage was determined by ability to read and write and by a property qualification. At that time there were elected a governor, a judge of the supreme court with three subordinate judges, twelve councilmen, an auditor and a secretary of the interior. On Monday of last week these officers, all of whom are natives, were inaugurated under the supervision of Gen. Smith, who has been military governor of the island. The islanders were all present at the ceremony and engaged in a three days' celebration of the event according to their own customs. Thus begins the autonomous government of the Philippines in this island, which submitted peacefully to the authority of the United States. It ought to be a good object-lesson to the deluded followers of Aguinaldo and some others. The great danger in Negros, according to Gen. Smith, is the intrigues of native politicians, and the United States must keep an eye on the situation to prevent the wrecking of the newly founded government.

The settlement of the Samoan complication is on the whole a much more satisfactory one than was anticipated six months ago, and it has a significance which is by no means limited to this small group of Pacific Islands. The old system of joint administration is abolished and the territory is divided between Germany and the United States. Great Britain withdraws her claim so far as Samoa is concerned. The United States gets the island of Tutuila and its smaller neighbors in the eastern part of the group. Germany gets the remainder, perhaps two-thirds of the total area, including the capital, Apia, but grants to the United States equal trading privileges. England's withdrwal was not a gift, but was purchased by Germany by several concessions which are not yet clearly defined. At any rate England gets the Tonga Islands, Savage Island and two of the Solomons, and in addition there is a certain "understanding," between England and Germany, not very well defined as yet, but highly significant as indicating their willingness to regard each other as friends in South Africa and China. What this may mean with reference to South Africa is still a diplomatic secret. As to the Chinese Puzzle, it means that Germany is added, or is likely to be added, to the combination of powers which stand for the "open door," viz., Great Britian, America and Japan.

The news from the Transvaal is so scanty and unreliable as to be scarcely worth repeating, so far as the reports from day to day are concerned. The situation is practically unchanged since last week, except that with the delay of reinforcements the conditions are becoming more and more serious for the British. Col. Baden-Powell is still defending Mafeking againt daily attacks. Gen. White is still shut up in Ladysmith waiting for something to happen. The wires being cut and the railroad broken, it is impossible to send orders to Gen. White,and one large source of anxiety is that he may get tired of waiting and risk a decisive engagement in an effort to atone for his previous error and loss. The Boer forces around Ladysmith outnumber the British in the town about three to one. In estimating the danger of the situation at Ladysmith it must be remembered that there was plenty of opportunity to retreat along the railroad before the retreat was cut off by the capture of Colenso, but when there was every prospect that it would be cut off, Gen. White deliberately chose to remain. Evidently, he believed that the position was defensible. The movements of the Boer forces are chiefly matters of conjecture, but it is believed that they are moving south from Colenso and that Pietermaritzburg is in imminent danger. The column that has been detouring through Zululand may also turn up unexpectedly somewhere along the line to participate in this southward movement along the railroad.

Many persons will doubtless be surprised to learn that by the inheritance tax laws, now in force, the bequests of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt Yale and Vanderbilt

Universities and to a number of religious and charitable organizations are subject to a federal tax of 15 per cent. Besides this, the bequests to servants and to friends outside of the family are subject to an additional 5 per cent. state tax which is imposed by the laws of New York upon all legacies to "strangers in blood." By these provisions, the public receive about $100,000 from the amounts left to the family servants and to Dr. Green, Dr. Depew and other friends, and a somewhat larger amount from the bequests to the colleges and hospitals. The inheritance tax law is a good thing, but it does seem that this is carrying the matter too far. By the New York State law one per cent. is collected on estates over $10,000. This is good. By the recent federal law, a two and one-forth per cent. tax is levied on personal estates of more than $1,000,000. This, too, is good. The entire $70,000,000 of the Vanderbilt estate is subject to these two taxes and thereby the state and national treasuries realize $2,275,000 without working hardships to any one. But it seems rather hard that the family servants should be required to give one-fifth of the amounts left to them, and harder still that educational institutions should have their bequests reduced by nearly one-sixth. As the federal law stands now it is a direct encouragement to the concentration of great fortunes in families and a deterrent to post mortem beneficence, which is the sort that comes easiest to most men. The federal law should be amended to exempt educational and charitable institutions from this tax, as the New York State law does.

SPIRITUAL CULTURE: ITS MOTIVE AND ITS MEANS.

That man is a spiritual being and not a mere animal, that he was made in the image of God and was destined to be like him in character, is one of the great truths of revelation. Indeed, the great end of God's revelation to man and of the establishment of the church and its varied ministrations is the moral and spiritual culture of man until he emerges out of bondage to his lower nature into the perfect freedom of the child of God. The only claim which the church has to-day upon the confidence and sympathy of men is that it is an efficient agency for carrying forward this spiritual culture. The moment that it ceases to be efficient in the great work of spiritual training, it has forfeited its right to exist and ceases to be a divine institution.

Not only is it true that this is the end for which the church exists—the conversion and moral education of men—but it is the end toward which every rational human being should struggle. Every man is bound by the highest obligations to his Creator to make the most of himself. God has given him the divine ideal in Jesus Christ, and to be like him is the highest motive that ever animated a human heart. The man who lives for anything less than this has missed the true aim of life. Conversion is the turning of the mind and heart toward this ideal life and character, and spiritual culture is the process of realizing this ideal. Men enter the church, if they do so intelligently, that they may receive help in living this new life and to assist in bringing others under its divine influence and uplifting power.

It is a pertinent question to raise as to what extent the various local churches are fulfilling the end for which they exist. Admitting that this work is twofold, viz., the conversion and spiritual education of men, let the question for the present be confined to the efficiency of the church in meeting this second requirement. Has the average church a true conception of this twofold character of its mission? Has it any well-matured program for accomplishing this work? We fear there is a great lack here, both in clearness of conception as to the work needed to be done and as to the means available for its accomplishment. It is evident that no church can succeed in any marked degree without either of these elements of success. To know what to do and how to do it is as essential for an organization as for an individual.

To begin with, the church must hold up a high ideal of what the Christian life is and what a Christian man should be. The church whose ministry fails at this point will fail all along the line. The pastor who fails to create in the members of his congregation a dissatisfaction with their spiritual condition, and a hungering and thirsting after a higher degree of righteousness, is not likely to lead them up to a higher level of life. As we have often had occasion to say, the great trouble with the average church member is that he has too low an ideal of what it is to be a disciple of Christ and of what Christ expects of him. It is the function of the ministry of the church to arouse such members from their spiritual lethargy and to impart to them a lively sense of their shortcomings, and to awaken in them a desire for something far better than they have ever realized. A preacher has accomplished no small task when he has done this for his congregation.

But this desire once created, how shall it be realized? It may be doubted if the public meetings of the church are as helpful in this direction as they should be. It is easy enough to criticise preachers, and many who indulge in it might be better engaged in criticising their own lives. No doubt the preaching of the average preacher is better than the living of the average church member. But granting this, it must be said that the sermon often fails to create a passion for righteousness or to bring nourishing food to the hungry soul. It is not for more literary finish in the sermon that we would plead, but for more moral earnestness, for more spiritual power, for sermons which have been steeped in prayer and that throb with an intense spiritual purpose.

But the sermon is not the only feature of the public worship. The singing, the prayers, the observance of the Lord's Supper, the offering—all these should have a direct bearing on the spiritual culture of the people. They are too often regarded as mere accessories to the public worship. With what care should the hymns for the public worship be selected with a view to their sentiments and their adaptation to awaken spiritual aspiration and to express the soul's adoration! With what care, too, should a large number of popular hymns be excluded from use in the public worship, because, in words and in music, they fall below the dignity of Christian worship. An improved hymnology in our churches would be an important step in the direction of promoting spiritual culture.

The question of the order of worship should receive a great deal more attention than it has received in the average church. How to make the service impressive, satisfying to the soul, full of the very spirit of worship and of the atmosphere of heaven—what is more worthy of devout study than this? There is lacking in many of the churches the spirit of reverence which adds so much to the value and impressiveness of public worship. The preacher can do much by his own demeanor and by his teaching to impress this spirit on the congregation.

It is agreed upon all hands that the Word of God is the great means of spiritual growth and culture. How shall we get people interested in it so as, not only to read it daily, but to ponder it and seek after its deepest meaning is a problem of the highest importance. The Sunday-school is an important factor in this work, but much remains to be done to make this agency what it ought to be. There must be much more conscientious work both on the part of teachers and pupils before this means of spiritual culture attains its highest value. When we come to a higher appreciation of the value of biblical instruction in our churches it is not improbable that one of the public meetings on the Lord's day will be devoted to this work.

What of the prayer-meeting? This meeting of the church contains great possibilities as a means for spiritual culture, but is often sadly neglected, not by the members alone, but even by the preacher, who fails to give it the study and preparation it deserves. This should be pre-eminently a devotional meeting, but the fires of devotion are sometimes best kindled by reports of work accomplished or needed to be done in the immediate locality. It should be made one of the most popular and attractive meetings of the week, and no church has a right to be satisfied with its spiritual status as long as its prayer-meeting is neglected by a large portion of its members.

We have called attention to these matters with a view of awakening thought and, if need be, discussion on the whole subject of church worship and edification. We are sure there is great room for improvement and that the churches are not doing all that it is in their power to do in promoting the spiritual growth of their members. Anything that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can do to stir them up to greater efficiency it will be glad to do, as we believe that in this way we can best promote the progress of our own religious work and the advancement of the kingdom of God.

THE MISSOURI BIBLE COLLEGE.

It has been sometime since we have said anything editorially concerning the enterprise above mentioned. The plan of having the Bible taught to the students of the State University in Missouri has attracted wide attention. They have been watching our experiment with a view to determining the feasibility of such an enterprise. The attendance at the State University this year, in consequence of free tuition and increased facilities, is greatly increased over any preceding year. This fact emphasizes the value of the work we are trying to accomplish in Columbia.

Owing to increased attendance of students at the university and the time spent in organizing the classes, together with other hindering causes, the classes of the Bible College have only recently been organized. At a meeting of the board of trustees, held in Columbia last week, arrangements were made with C. H. Winders, pastor of the church at Columbia, and J. W. Monser, who resides there and was for many years librarian of the university, to organize and teach classes in the Bible during the remainder of the current year. Dr. W. T. Moore, dean of the college, will also probably give some lectures, but at the request of the board he is to give his special attention, during the remainder, of this term, to increasing the endowment fund of the institution.

The board of trustees was unanimous in the opinion that every year increases the evidence of the wisdom of the undertaking we have begun there, and of the necessity of carrying it on to success in order to the best interests of our cause in Missouri. The opposition that was manifested at the beginning of the work has given way, on further investigation and reflection, and, so far as we know, the brethren in the state are of one mind and one heart concerning the desirability and practicability of establishing Bible instruction at the seat of our State University.

In view of these facts we desire to urge upon the brethren of the state the importance of assisting in the work and increasing the endowment of this Bible College. We bespeak for Dr. Moore a cordial reception wherever he may go, and a favorable consideration of the claims of this institution. He would be glad to enter into correspondence with brethren in the state who feel an interest in the Bible College and who have any suggestions to make as to means or methods of promoting its welfare.

EVANGELISTS AND EVANGELISM.

One of the most interesting meetings in connection with the Jubilee Convention was the conference of evangelists. It was more largely attended than was either of the other conferences. The enthusiasm was such as was not seen in the other similar meetings held at the same time. The room in which the conference was held was crowded. Carefully prepared addresses on evangelistic work were delivered by men who have had large experience in this department of Christian effort. At Chattanooga a preliminary meeting was held. Out of the Chattanooga conference of pastors and evangelists came the meeting in Cincinnati. If any doubt existed previously that the Disciples are essentially an evangelistic people, there is no longer reason for such a state of mind. Evangelistic work seems to appeal to the popular heart among us as no other enterprise. Because this is true we ought to study the subject afresh and thoroughly. To conclude that we know all that can be known about this character of work will be to make a serious mistake. The last word has not been spoken on the subject of evangelistic work, nor will it be for sometime to come. Much remains for us to learn on this subject as well as on all others.

It is but natural that the Disciples should be marked by a strong evangelistic spirit. The text of our fathers in the inauguration of our movement was this:

"Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us: THAT THE WORLD MAY BELIEVE THAT THOU DIDST SEND ME."

Note well the fact that the unity for which our Lord prayed was "THAT THE WORLD MAY BELIEVE." This was the object of this unity. And this was the object that the fathers had in mind when they began their work. It was a desire to lead the world to faith in Christ, saving faith in the Son of God, that inspired our fathers to undertake the work which has grown to such vast proportions and has been so wonderfully blessed from heaven. The unity for which they pleaded was a unity and union for effective evangelistic work. How they did ring the changes on: "So, then, faith cometh of hearing, and hearing by the Word of God!" And this thought is in the text from the seventeenth chapter of John, the prayer of our Lord, which furnished the original inspiration to such men as Stone and Campbell. Jesus spoke to the Father of those who "believe in me through their word." Faith comes through the Word preached. But the preaching of the Word is evangelistic work.

The one book from which we receive instruction in the religious life is a book of evangelism. From the New Testament we learn that the heralding of the good news is the work of the church.

The Master was a tireless evangelist. He went to every part of Palestine preaching the gospel of the kingdom. He conducted at the same time a school of evangelists. After instructing his students, by word and example, he sent them out to herald the good news concerning the kingdom.

After the triumphant resurrection of our Lord he spent almost six weeks with his disciples. During this time he gave them additional instruction concerning their work—the work of evangelization. When the time came for his departure he commanded the men whom he had trained to make disciples of all the nations. And this they proceeded to do after they received a spiritual enduement—a blessing previously promised by their Teacher. One of the historians says that "they went forth and preached everywhere," i. e., they did the work of evangelists.

It was understood by the early disciples of the Christ that this work was not limited to those who were especially trained for this service by our divine Lord. Their commission itself makes plain the fact that evangelism was to be perpetual. Read the following:

"And Jesus came unto them and spake unto them, saying, All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you."

Note the fact that those who received their commission from our Lord were required by him to "teach" their converts "to observe all things" that he had "commanded" them; but he had just commanded them to "maks disciples ot all the nations."

Next to our Lord, Paul was the prince of evangelists. His call to the ministry explains his diligence in this great work. When the Lord appeared to Saul of Tarsus he said:

"To this end have I appeared unto thee, to appoint thee a minister and a witness both of the things wherein thou hast seen me and of the things wherein I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people and from the Gentiles, unto whom I send thee to open their eyes, that they may turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive remission of sins and an inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith in me."

This was Paul's commission. He was required to do the work of an evangelist. It was his duty to bear such a testimony in behalf of our Lord Jesus as would cause men to turn from Satan to God. He influenced men to do this by preaching the crucified Christ. He said, you remember, to the Corinthians, after a year and a half of evangelistic work in their city, referring to his experience with them:

"I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified."

Paul understood that the work to which he gave his life, after his conversion, was to be perpetual. Timothy was one of his helpers in the publication of the joyful message. He solemnly charged this young man to continue the work after his decease. Here are some of the things that Paul said to Timothy in his last letter:

"Preach the Word." "Do the work of of an evangelist." "The things which thou hast heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also."

Hour of Prayer.

THE HIDDEN WORD.

(Psa. 119:9-16; Col. 3:16, 17.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, November 22nd.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The Old Testament and the New unite in regarding the Word of God, not only as the right rule of life, but, when taken into the heart and retained there, as the very means and inspiration of a true life.

The superiority of the Bible in its moral teaching above all other books is seen in the emphasis which it lays upon moral cleansing. Many books are written to tell young men how to become rich; how to get on in the world; how to become a scholar; how to succeed in politics; how to gain social prestige, etc., etc., but these matters are all waived aside, and the question is raised, in this lesson, as it is so often raised in the Bible, "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?" The question is not, how a young man may smooth his way from difficulties, or shorten his way to some goal which he has in view, but, how may he cleanse it—make it pure.

The answer is, "By taking heed thereto according to thy Word." This signifies that the Word of God is a rule of life and conduct. But it is even more than that, as the Psalmist himself understood, for he immediately adds: "With my whole heart have I sought thee." When one seeks the Lord with his "whole heart" he is sure to find Him, and finding Him, he is sure to endeavor to be guided by His Word.

It is not as an external rule of life that the Word of God can save us, but as an indwelling seed that begets new life, becoming an internal force that molds our outward conduct. It is only as the Word of God gets into the heart that it is able to control the life. It is remarkable how clearly the Psalmist grasped this truth when he said:

"Thy Word have I laid up in mine heart,
That I might not sin against thee."

It would be well for us to question ourselves just at this point, each for himself, as to how much of the Word of God we have laid up in our hearts. [Suppose the leader here asks for a number of quotations, from those present, of those passages which have been especially helpful to them.] The Psalmist proceeds to tell of his meditations in the precepts of the Lord, and how he delights in His statutes, and how he will not forget His Word. All this implies something more than reverence for the Word of God as external authority. There is an inward delight in it, which is the highest assurance that it will be obeyed in spirit as well as in form.

The exhortation of Paul in the Colossian letter falls into beautiful harmony with this teaching of the Psalmist. There is one difference only. Paul has become acquainted with Jesus of Nazareth, who was the Christ of prophecy; hence his exhortation is more specific. He says: "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom." Here is the same thought, however, of the internal dwelling of the Word. It is not enough that it be on the outside. If must be on the inside. We should say that the great trouble with most Christians to-day is, that so little of the Word of Christ dwells in us "richly in all wisdom." There should be an abundance of it in order that the life may be a rich and abundant life.

But this Word is not to dwell in our hearts as an idle, inactive force, but as a life-giving and life-imparting potency, expressing itself in "teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God." This is the music that is real worship, and nothing else is. When the Word of God thus dwells within us, it is then possible for us to comply with the apostolic injunction, "Whatever ye do in word or deed do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father through Him." Such is possible only to those whose hearts are richly stored with the Word of God.

This lesson, then, does two things: It exalts the Word of God as the rule of life, and it impresses the necessity of having that Word within the heart in order that its cleansing and life-giving power may be manifest in our lives.

PRAYER.

O Thou God of all truth, we thank Thee that Thou hast spoken to the children of men, revealing Thy will and making known Thy ways. We thank Thee, above all, for the incarnate Word, who, taking flesh, dwelt among us, and whose life is the light of men. We thank Thee for the great and precious words Thou hast spoken through Him, and we pray that these words may indeed dwell in our hearts richly that we may be cleansed in our thoughts, in our motives, in our purposes and in all our lives. Help us to delight in Thy glorious gospel, and to walk with joy in every path of obedience to Thee, that we may share with Thee, eternally, the joy of the life everlasting, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

And so it has come about in God's good providence that our relations with the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which have existed for so many years, are to be continued. We had submitted the whole matter to God, and were prepared to accept any disposition of it, no matter how contrary it might be to our own judgment, as the will of God. When our resignation was offered it made us realize, as we had never done before, how hard it was to sever relations which have been growing closer and stronger through so many years. Nothing short of the most conscientious conviction of duty, in standing for what we believe to be a vital feature of religious journalism, could have induced us to reach such a decision. Happily, as God would have it, it was not necessary to carry out this decision. More than ever are we convinced that there is a "divinity which shapes our ends," and a Power not ourselves that guides the course of our lives. More than ever are we determined to lean not on our own understanding, but to commit our way unto God and ask His guidance in the difficult way that lies before us. The path in which He seems to be leading us may, for aught we know, contain more thorns than roses, and may involve more burdens and responsibilities than some other path, but no matter about that. If it be the Lord's will that we go this way, we are content.

Next to our feeling of obligation and of gratitude to God for His guiding hand is our feeling of gratitude to our readers for the unanimity with which they have stood by us in the crisis through which the paper has been passing. There is before us as we write a stack of open letters from every section of the country, offering congratulations and expressing confidence and appreciation which would touch any heart that is not a stone. We cannot answer all these letters personally, nor do the writers ask it or expect it, but we do wish them to know our deep sense of gratitude to them for their sympathy and support, and for their promises of hearty co-operation in the future. We do not know how we are ever to repay our friends for all their kindness, except by increased efforts, if possible, to make the paper more worthy of the name it bears and the cause it serves. This, with the assistance of many co-operating hands and hearts, we hope to do. Surely, a man ought to be able to do his best work when he feels that he is serving in the place where God wishes him to serve, and when he feels assured that he has the approval and the prayers of so many good men and women. It is a compensation for the seeming adversities of life that they serve to bring out in bolder relief than would otherwise be possible the strength and value of the divine and human sympathy and friendship.

In speaking of the unanimity of sentiment among our readers we do not mean to say that there are none who differ from the editor, and are not in full sympathy with the attitude of the paper toward the questions of our day. There are such, of course, and we have heard from them, too. It is not strange that this is the case. The strangest thing is that there are so few of these in comparison with those who have expressed their entire confidence in the course of the paper as a whole. We have never asked or expected the unanimous concurrence of our readers in all our sentiments. The most that any editor can hope for in this respect is that his readers will have confidence in the steadfastness of his loyalty to Jesus Christ and in his wisdom on the whole in shaping the editorial policy of the paper. Reasonable readers do not expect an editor to be infallible, but they have a right to expect that he will hold his paper steadfastly to the great purpose for which it exists and grow wiser by even his mistakes. We do not regard those who differ from us as our enemies, or as less sincere in their loyalty to Christ than ourself. We extend to them the same charity which we would like to have from them. We do not for a moment doubt that many of those who have differed from us in some things in the past will be among our most steadfast supporters in the future. We feel sure that this experience will do us all good and will tend to increase that charity for each other without which all our knowledge and our faith are as nothing in the sight of God.

And so, encouraged by the tokens of divine Providence, and by words of brotherly sympathy and appreciation, we take up the pen which we were about to lay down, and resume the onerous duties and increased responsibilities of our editorial position. We wish to cultivate the closest personal relations with our readers, as heretofore, and to keep in touch with their needs and their aspirations. We hope they will feel free to write to us on anything that relates to the interest of the paper or to the advancement of the cause. We may not always be able to answer the letters personally, nor to print all the articles that may be intended for publication, but we shall read them and be benefited by them, no doubt. As much as in us lies, we shall keep in correspondence with our readers. After all, how small a part of an editor's work goes into his paper! The smallest part of our writing ever appears in print. There are thousands of personal and private letters which go out from this office every year in response to inquiries of every nature from those who feel that they have a claim upon our time and attention. This feature of our work has come to make great demands upon our time and strength, and must necessarily be limited by other demands upon us. What is needed now, it seems to us, is the joining of hands all round, yea, and of hearts, too, both to make the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST more and more a messenger of light and of comfort, and to give it access to a still larger number of homes and hearts. We will be grateful to all who will enter with us into this fellowship of service.

It takes a great deal of courage simply to be yourself, and yet to be yourself is the line of power. We are all the time thinking that if we act and speak or feel as others do we shall be right; but once in a while, in a moment of illumination, it comes over us that we are not just like any one else, and that we have to act and think and feel according to our nature. The grace of God is not designed to make all Christians alike. It is designed to liberate and purify the personality, not to adjust it to a mold that some good man has set.—Watchman.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

VI. Conclusion.

A. McLean.

In this concluding article it is proposed to give some facts that are deemed of general interest. They are as follows:

1. The Officers. The Foreign Society has had only two presidents. Isaac Errett served in that capacity for fourteen years. At his death Charles Louis Loos succeeded him; he still fills that office. Among the vice-presidents have been Jacob Burnet, James Challen, A. I. Hobbs, O. A. Bartholomew, J. B. Briney, Dr. E. Williams, Robert T. Mathews, B. C. Deweese, E. T. Williams, T. M. Worcester, B. J. Radford, Dr. A. B. Thrasher, C. J. Tanner, H. McDiarmid, J. Z. Tyler, J. A. Lord, L. E. Brown, G. A. Miller and Geo. B. Ranshaw. Two men have served as treasurer, namely, W. S. Dickinson and F. M. Rains. The recording secretaries are as follows: B. B. Tyler, James Leslie, S. M. Jefferson, A. P. Cobb, C. W. Talbott, J. H. Hardin, P. T. Kilgour, I. J. Spencer and S. M. Cooper. The society has had four corresponding secretaries, as follows: Robert Moffett, W. T. Moore, W. B. Ebbert and the present incumbent. J. F. Wright has served as auditor and Dr. P. T. Kilgour as medical examiner. One man, and one only, has been a member of the executive committee from the beginning. W. S. Dickinson was treasurer for twenty-one years; since then he has been one of the vice-presidents. F. M. Rains was elected financial secretary in 1893. When Mr. Dickinson resigned, three years ago, Mr. Rains was elected treasurer. His duties now are substantially the same as they were from the first. His main work is to raise money for the society. Since his election, six years ago, the receipts have increased nearly threefold.

2. Some Early Friends of the Society. In the early years of the society several men assisted the secretaries most cordially. Some of these were state secretaries; those deserving of special mention are Robert Moffett, of Ohio; B. F. Clay, of Kentucky; N. S. Haynes, of Illinois; L. L. Carpenter, of Indiana, and J. H. Hardin, of Missouri. They were careful to see that on all state and district programs the work of Foreign Missions was well represented. They invited the secretaries to visit their conventions and made out trips for them among the churches. Robert Moffett took up the collection on Children's Day and forwarded the proceeds in bulk to the society. Prof. J. W. McGarvey was unwearied in his advocacy of world-wide missions; with tongue and pen he did what he could to enlist churches and individuals. Mrs. A. A. Johnston, of Dallas, Texas, was one of the warmest and wisest friends the society has ever had. She took special interest in the Turkish mission. She did not stop with that field; her sympathies embraced the whole world. Timothy Coop and his sons contributed on a generous scale. On looking over the books of the earlier years one finds that almost every large gift came from England. In later years A. M. Atkinson, F. M. Drake, J. F. Davis, T. W. Phillips and others contributed largely and regularly. One man to whom the society owes as much as to any other is one who has never had a prominent place in any of our conventions. He has been a steadfast and generous friend of the society since its organization. He has planned and wrought unseen for the enlargement of the work. Comparatively few know his face and fewer still the value of his services. Not more than a score are aware of what he has done for this cause. Russell Errett has been in a position where he could help; he has quietly and persistently and joyfully done what he could to send the gospel to those who are sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death. In recent years the helpers are so numerous that no attempt can be made to enumerate them and to set forth their labors and sacrifices.

3. The Press and the Colleges. Our religious papers have aided the work most effectively. They abound in missionary information. There is not an issue in the year which does not contain some matter relating to world-wide missions. They have line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a great deal. The editors give much of their space to articles from the secretaries and from the missionaries, and write stirring articles of their own in the interest of every missionary appeal. Without their co-operation the society could do little. The colleges have made their contribution. In 1875 our schools knew nothing at all about missions. The students were not taught anything on the subject and had no interest whatever in it. Now in every school there is a band of missionary volunteers. Some of the schools support their own missionaries on the field. Every student is informed to some extent, and he is more or less interested in this divine enterprise.

4. Finances. The income for the first year amounted to $1,706. In the sixth year the income was $13,178.46. The next year, that is, the year in which it began work in the non-Christian world, it was $25,063.94. The receipts constantly advanced until they amounted to $50,000. Some predicted that was the extreme limit. Notwithstanding this prediction the receipts continued to increase year by year. For several years the society aimed to raise $100,000. Three years ago this limit was reached and passed. Some thought the next year would see a decided falling off, but this was not the case. The next year the receipts amounted to $130,925.70. Last year they amounted to $152,727.38. There has not only been an increase in the contributions, but there has been an increase from year to year in the number of contributors. In the first year of the society's work twenty churches contributed; in the sixth year the number increased to 217. Seven years later the number was 1,038; last year it was 3,051. In the second year of the society's history two Sunday-schools contributed. The Sunday-schools began to make offerings before they were asked. Children's Day was first observed in 1881; that year 189 schools responded. Six years later the number of contributing schools was 1,064, while last year 3,187 made offerings for the support of the work of the society. Even in hard times there was an advance in the receipts from year to year. No year closed without a small balance in the treasury. Every year it is necessary for the society to borrow money to pay the missionaries and helpers. From the time of the annual convention in October to the March offering the receipts do not amount to as much as one-third of the expenditures. From the time of the March offering until the convention the receipts exceed the outlay. The policy of the society has always been conservative. The executive committee has been in favor of going as far and as fast as it could induce the brethren to go with it, but no faster. Debt has been studiously and religiously avoided. The Lord has put it into the hearts of the people to give more liberally as the work expanded and as its wants multiplied. At each convention there has been a determination to go forward and to enter new fields. There has been no thought of calling a halt or beating a retreat. The war-cry for this year is, "Two hundred thousand dollars for Foreign Missions in this the year of Silver Jubilee."

5. Bequests and Annuities. The society has received from bequests from the first $94,122.36. The largest bequests were from the following: Mrs. H. Tubman, of Georgia; Albert Allen, of Ohio; Abram Farewell, of Ontario; John Stark, of Illinois; Timothy Coop, of England; J. D. Metcalf, of Illinois; Mary O'Hara, of Pennsylvania, and Asa Shuler, of Ohio. The first large bequest came from Mrs. Tubman; it was for $30,000. It was received in the nick of time; it enabled the society to erect buildings and to enlarge its work. The other bequests have been used in the same way. The society has received on the annuity plan $61.815. Most of this has been invested in buildings on the mission fields. It has been found expedient to house the missionaries and to provide schools, chapels, orphanages and asylums. The missionaries will live longer and do better work because of these conveniences. Besides, it is much cheaper to pay interest on this money than it is to rent buildings in the non-Christian world. At the death of those giving the money on this plan their gifts will belong to the society.

6. Summary of the Work. The gospel is preached in nine different countries. The forces in the field number 229. Of these 97 are missionaries; the remainder are evangelists, teachers and helpers. These work at 113 stations and out-stations. Seventy-nine churches have been organized. The whole number of members is 5,280. Some have died, some have removed to other places. These are living and under the care of the missionaries. Great numbers of Gospels and other portions of Scripture and tracts have been sold and distributed. The good seed has been sown beside all waters. Schools have been opened in India, Japan, China, Africa and Turkey. The number of children under instruction is 1,570. Some of these are being taught and trained to assist in the work. In four fields there are medical missionaries; they treat about 40,000 patients annually. The whole amount received by the society from the first is $1,292,587.69. Of this amount $236,000 has been invested in mission property. Last year the gain in regular receipts was $23,548.57; this is the largest gain that has ever been made in any single year. This gain shows that the cause of world-wide missions is finding a large place in the thoughts and affections of the people constantly. The outlook is bright and full of promise. There are those now living who will see the Foreign Society receiving and disbursing a million dollars annually.

7. The Co-operation of Other Lands. From the very first England contributed handsomely to the treasury of the society. The women of England now support Dr. Mary T. McGavran in Damoh, India. Dr. McGavran has charge of the dispensary at that station. The churches in Australasia support three native helpers. They support also Miss Mary Thompson in Hurda, India, and F. E. Stubbin in Damoh. Miss Thompson works among the women in Hurda and in the villages round about; Mr. Stubbin gives most of his time to the industrial school. The women of Ontario and of the Maritime Provinces support Miss Mary Rioch in Japan. This is a small part of what is done by the friends of the work in Canada. The Foreign Society is an international organization; its supporters are not confined to the United States.

8. New Work. This day, October 24th, four missionaries left for Cuba. Their names are Lowell C. McPherson and wife, formerly of Buffalo, N. Y., and Melvin Menges and wife, formerly of Stanford, Ill. They go to Cuba to preach primitive Christianity. While mastering the language they will preach to the people in English. After they have gained sufficient knowledge to preach in Spanish they will attempt to reach the Cuban population. It is believed that Cuba is a most promising field. The priest-ridden people are ready to welcome those who come to them in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ. Lathrop Cooley has given the society $5,000 to help establish a mission in the Hawaiian Islands; there are over 30,000 Japanese on these islands. They are at work on the sugar and coffee plantations. The society is looking for a man to open a work there. Some months ago the society received a letter from Chaplain Herman P. Williams, who was then with one of the Iowa regiments in Manila. He urged the society to send some men to the Philippines to preach to the people. The society asked him if he would be one of the number; he consented. He has just returned home to be mustered out. He will be ready to return in a few weeks. The society hopes by that time to find one or two men to send with him. Mr. Cooley promises $5 000 more when the work is begun in the Philippines. Dr. Susie Rijnhart, who spent some five years in Tibet, is urging the society to work there. This mission will be the extension of the work in China. Dr. Welpton, who is now in Lu Cheo fu, is anxious to go to Tibet. He believes that in the high latitude of Tibet he will be free from malaria and enjoy better health than he has in Lu Cheo fu. The society has not yet decided what it will do with respect to Dr. Rijnhart's request.

9. Literature. Quite a literature has grown up since the society was organized. Tracts and leaflets have been published and scattered by the million. In the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses there are three books on missions. One is entitled "A Handbook of Missions;" this was prepared by the secretary. The other two are, "Mission Fields and Forces" and "Missionary Heroes;" both of these have been prepared by W. J. Lhamon, of Allegheny, Pa. A volume of missionary addresses from the pen of the secretary has been published by the Christian Publishing Company, of St. Louis, Mo. A booklet on China has been written by W. R. Hunt; this gives some account of the people, their religions, their customs, their needs, and the missionary work that has been done in China. The same writer has given the world a little work on "Evangelist Shi." James Ware, of Shanghai, has published a little book entitled "A Peep into a Chinese Library." Other books are in preparation and will appear in time.

10. Two Foreign Towns. One of the most dramatic and memorable events connected with the work of the society was the sending of Isaac Errett, the then president, to the Holy Land for a season of rest and to gratify a long-cherished desire on his part. Fifteen hundred dollars was contributed by his friends to defray expenses. The purse was presented to him at the Kansas City Convention in a most felicitous and touching address by Prof. Radford. The president was taken completely by surprise. His tears and broken utterances were more eloquent and more effective than any elaborated speech. Some months after, in company with Z. T. Sweeney, J. T. Toof, W. T. Moore, G. T. Smith and some other friends, he visited Egypt, Palestine, Asia Minor and the most interesting places in Europe. The trip was a great joy to Mr. Errett and his family and friends; it is probable that his strength was overtaxed, and his life shortened by what his admirers intended for its enrichment and prolongation. Another event similar in character was the sending of the secretary around the world to see the workers and their work This action was taken at the convention in Richmond, in 1894. Almost enough money was raised at the convention to pay the expenses of the tour. The next July he started; he was gone a year and a month. On this tour he visited the Hawaiian Islands, Japan, China, Hong Kong, Malaysia, Burmah, India, Ceylon, Austral asia, Aden in Arabia, Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Cyprus, Asia Minor, Turkey in Europe, Greece, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, France and Great Britain. He wrote a series of letters describing his experiences and the lands through which he passed. These letters were revised and published in a book entitled "A Circuit of the Globe."

11. The Chief Need of the Society. The most serious problem before the society is that of getting men to serve as evangelists. There is no lack of qualified and consecrated women; ten apply where one can be sent. There is no lack of medical missionaries; the society can get twice as many as it needs. The most pressing need is that of men to preach the gospel. It took eight years to find a suitable man for Turkey. In the last year the secretaries searched the continent in vain for two or three evangelists. Men are needed in Japan and in India. They are needed for the new fields now open. It is difficult to obtain them. There is no lack of men for the army and for the civil service. For every vacancy there are fifty applicants. It is not so in the case of the Foreign Society. When young men who are qualified volunteer, parents and friends oppose. There is no objection when young men offer to go to Klondike or South Africa to dig for gold. When young men leave home to serve in the army or navy they are congratulated; their departure causes rejoicing on all sides. It is hard enough to get money for the work; it is far harder to get men. The church needs to pray the Lord of the harvest to send out laborers into his harvest.

12. The Effect of the Foreign Society Upon Our Other Work. The confident expectation that the work at home would be blessed and prospered because of the efforts put forth to preach Christ where he had not been named has been abundantly justified. For twenty-five years we sought to carry on home work without any foreign work. Our efforts ended in a dismal failure. For twenty-one years out of that time the churches gave less than $10,000 annually. For thirteen years out of the twenty-five they gave less than $5,000. For four years out of the twenty-five they gave less than $3,000. For two years they gave less than $2,000. Only once did they mount up to over $15,000; the next year they fell off almost one-half. As the work abroad has been prosecuted the work at home has flourished. It is not too much to claim that what has been done at home in the last two or three years has been made possible, in part at least, by what has been done to carry the gospel to all the ends of the earth. Twenty years after the Foreign Society was founded Robert Moffett said that the zeal for Foreign Missions had multiplied the zeal for Home Missions everywhere. He saw the hand of God in the organization of the Foreign Society. He saw how this created and fostered a spirit which is indeed the spirit of Christ, and which has been a spirit of life to preachers, Sunday-school workers and church workers generally. "Wherever this broad missionary spirit has gone, and in the ratio in which it has been dominant, it has united discordant churches, it has lifted mind and heart above contention about small things, it has given new tone to preaching, it has filled the church with a new and lasting fragrance, it has organized workers and filled them with hope, it has helped in the education of the Disciples of Christ into Christlikeness. The Lord has been with the society, and the Foreign Society has been a benediction to all who have prayed for and worked for its success."

The Lord has dealt graciously and bountifully with the society. He has raised up men to go out, and has sent to the treasury the funds requisite to their support. He has strengthened our faith when it was weak and faint and ready to perish. By the success which has rewarded our feeble and faltering efforts he is calling us to go forward and to do far beyond anything which we ever dared to imagine. We should respond eagerly and joyfully to his call. As has been said, we should push our prows into all ports, and wherever there is a people sitting in darkness and the shadow of death, let the shout go up, bursting through the valleys and sounding over the hills, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price!"

"IN HIS STEPS."—I.

A Lesson of the Hour.

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

I have just finisned reading "In His Steps," by Chas. M. Sheldon. It is a remarkable book—not as literature, but because it speaks the truth of the hour. It is a novel, but it is a work of great value to the religious world. It is the latest service of the imagination to the spiritual life. It is an exploration; it is a discovery. Columbus discovered America, but Chas. M. Sheldon has discovered the Christian life—not a new continent, but a deeper lying continent. He has broken the crust of conventionality and shown us real Christianity, and this startling vision is the sensation of the hour. Since the world began has any book sold like this?—over three millions of copies already; and it has passed into nine languages.

Probably most of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are before me in this reading, so I may speak of the contents of the book intelligibly without relating them. If any have not read it, let them invest fifteen cents and read it at once. No Christian in all this land should fail to read this book.

There is one thing that stands out very clearly in this story, to which I wish to call attention. After the tramp had made his speech in the fashionable church at Raymond and fallen to the floor in a dying condition, the people were profoundly moved; but the impression would have passed over the church like a wave and vanished, had not Henry Maxwell given it direction and embodiment in his talk the next Sunday morning. When he uttered the watchword, "What would Jesus do?" he touched off a magazine. Not one of that large, intelligent church had reached that point before him; and the moment he announced it, the best part of his people were at his side.

It may seem like an easy thing to strike out into a new course of action, but it is not. It requires independence of thought; power of initiative, and spiritual insight, as well as courage. Most men see spiritual things dimly; they see men as trees walking; there are few to whom the spiritual world appears in broad daylight. Hence, they grope and feel their way; and follow others blindly. The remarkable acceptance which this book has received is due to the fact that it says, "Here is the way; come." The astounding truth that this book brings home to the ministry of our time is, that the people do not lack the will, but the way. They do not need to be preached at so much as led. True, the book is fiction, but it lies surprisingly near to the truth.

More than thirty years ago the writer was called to the pastorate of a fine church in a flourishing town. It had more than its share of the solid material of the place in its membership, and was in all respects a good church. On getting acquainted with the situation the new pastor found that but one family in the entire church practiced family worship. What should he do? His first thought was to preach on the subject; but, after a little reflection, he was compelled to admit to himself that the best sermon he could preach would probably produce only an evanescent impression and fail to bring the family altar into a single home. He decided not to preach upon it. What then? He studied the question carefully and did this:

He asked the entire church to meet him on Sunday afternoon to "consider an important matter;" and, in a few words, laid the subject before them and asked them what they thought about it. For some moments there was profound silence, then a brother arose and said in tones quivering with emotion: "Brethren, I see it. I have been wrong. God has given me a family that are dearer to me than my own life, and I have not done my duty to them. I promise in your presence and before God that this very day the voice of prayer and praise shall be heard in my home." It was like an electric shock. It thrilled the assembly like a voice from heaven; and soon another was on his feet with the same pledge, and another, and another. The fountain of tears was opened and there was weeping all over the house. Holy words were said out of melting hearts. The church went down humbly before God, and the Spirit swayed them like a Pentecostal storm. They spoke, and spoke, until a large part of the church had taken the pledge that had not even been asked—business men, professional men, women with unbelieving husbands—all classes and conditions. At last the minister arose and said, "Brethren, I thought I knew you. I feel that you have made me a better man;" and closed with a few words of prayer.

That single meeting was a revival. There had been no preaching, no exhortation; only the conscience of that church had been brought face to face with a duty, and here was the result. That was a revelation to me, and I never forgot it. Other experiments were made not less gratifying during the few years of ministry that failing health permitted.

A minister went into a city where the church was very much run down. The morning audience represented less than one eighth of the membership, the Sunday-school was poor and the prayer-meeting was very low. Within one month the prayer-meeting was one of the finest in the city. How did it happen? It was not spoken upon from the pulpit; there was no teasing, no exhortation. One or two quiet things were done, and the miracle took place. A good people had been shown the way, and here was the result. I need not say that this prayer meeting swept into a revival and the church entered on a new period of prosperity.

A minister once found a body of young people sitting in a general prayer-meeting, silent, or if called on, rising and forgetting all they would say, or floundering through a sentence or two and sitting down in discomfiture. He did not upbraid them, he did not exhort. He asked himself what was the matter, and held his peace until he found out. Then he took them together behind closed doors and taught them to pray, and had at a single meeting about thirty brief prayers without the asking. And they were prayers—without cant and from the heart. It was an inspiring service, and the young people went away feeling how sweet it was to pray. He afterward taught them how to talk, and they used it as a privilege. In all this they were glad, and thanked him for showing them the way. This was long before Christian Endeavor was thought of. Those young people lacked not the will, but the way.

A few years ago, in an Eastern town, a pastor studied carefully how he might draw forth the spiritual resources of his young people. When he had succeeded, his idea escaped to other churches and swept on and on like a conflagration, till the whole world was on fire. We call this sea of flame the Y. P. S. C. E. When Francis Clark did that quiet little thinking, he let loose an avalanch. Not the will, but the way was wanting. This sea of spiritual potency needed a channel through which to flow.

Chas. M. Sheldon writes a simple story and reads it to his church out in Topeka, Kansas; but it gets away from him and girdles the world. Not the loudest thing said is in the book, but in its reception. This is a cry from a dumb church that does not know how to tell its heart. It is a cry in the night, an inarticulate, pleading cry. Ten thousand tongues preach at this church every week and it makes no answer, but—it has bought this book. What is this cry? Like the voice of many waters this dumb thing is saying, "Show us the way! show us the way!" Let him who has ears to hear, hear what the church is saying to its ministry! Such a flood was never waiting to burst its banks as swell in the bosom of the church to-day. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, president of Union Theological Seminary, recently said in an address: "We are coming to the social settlement as a vehicle for the gospel of Jesus Christ; and the social settlement has not begun to be used as a factor in the relief of the world, until it is frankly acknowledged as the agency of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

"There is a demand for this from the great Christian laity of our time, which is setting an example to the ministry, so much so that I tell my students that it must be their endeavor to rise to the level of Christian laymen."

The world has been smitten with a new vision of the Christian law of love. It has been discerned out in the world, even, that this is latest science as well as best religion. Labor is moaning for its coming. Such a cry never went up from this world before for the life of Christ. As we sweep across the line of another century this is the world's new mission. Who can tell what will have happened by 1925? After nineteen centuries, the century plant is ready to break into bloom. Who can tell when its corolla will burst and fling its magnificence over the earth? Steam escaped from boiling water for thousands of years, till Watt came with his engine, and then commerce was new-born. Where is the Watt who will harness the holy hearts of the church that are escaping in songs and aspirations, to humanity's car, that the millennium may arrive? The heavenly fires are here; it needs but to use them. There are many things which Mr. Sheldon's book does not decide. There are a hundred particular situations in every church to be solved. Solve them and you shall have a following. The mute appeal of every church to its pastor is, "Show us the way!" Make a path through this thicket of the nineteenth-century overgrowth and say, "Here is the way; come," and your people are ready. Russell H. Conwell, the Spurgeon of America, has Spurgeon's eloquence, but he excells in showing the way, and he has outrun Spurgeon. The new article which should be written in every creed in capital letters is, "I believe in my people." He who does this can work miracles.

HOW WE KNOW THE FATHER.

P. B. HALL.

"Love is born of heart, not mind."

Jesus said: "I am he that beareth witness of myself, and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me. They said therefore unto him, Where is thy Father? Jesus answered, Ye know neither me nor my Father: if ye knew me ye would know my Father also." In another Scripture we told that "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God is in the face of Jesus Christ."

It is not a new lesson about the revelation of God in the person of Jesus Christ that needs to be taught, but the old one learned over and over, until the light breaks from it and the soul can say, "Abba, Father." There is a general acquiescence in the teaching of the Scriptures that they who see Christ see the Father also, but it is perhaps a mental confession rather than an experience. It is true that he is the solution of all the puzzling problems about God. He is the way by which the "meek and lowly in heart" may enter into the presence of the Father and find rest "unto their souls." But those who are proud stalk about with heads high and talk learnedly and grandly about God, yet have no real acquaintance with him. Enoch walked with God and Abraham was a friend of God, but to many who call themselves disciples of Jesus and teach others about him might be applied these words: "Ye neither know me nor my Father."

I have no wish to be unfair by the above statement. I wish simply to arrest the attention upon a neglected doctrine that seems to me to be taught in these words of Jesus. It is this: The Fatherhood of God is revealed in our humanity.

Christ is our humanity. "In the face of Jesus Christ" is an expression for the person of Christ. Our humanity is found in its perfection in the personality of Jesus. He is the Son of Man. In this relation he said, "If ye knew me ye would know my Father also." Now on the divine side Christ was in nature with God. He was God. Obviously, then, "if ye knew me" must refer to his humanity, for it is in the human we know the divine Son. In seeking for God we may overlook this human way and call our mental creations God. But it will be a false god. Such a god stills not the passion of the soul, nor seems at all like a father. The Fatherhood of God does not differ in kind from the fatherhood of man. It is a loving, confidential, dependent relation. It is by no means a cold, metaphysical relation, but a warm-hearted comradeship. And to know Jesus Christ is to have the sense of the Fatherhood of God in an infinitely greater degree than the sense of an earthly fatherhood.

But how must we know Christ? We are told of his birth, life, death, resurrection and ascension. But we may be conversant with all these facts about him and still not know him. The true knowledge is not of the nature of a thought, for thought implies a thing external from us. It is a condition within us. We must feel ourselves one with Christ on the plane of his humanity. When our fallen human nature is redeemed and we stand on the same plane with Jesus we will know the Father. The evidence that we do know him and are therefore in Christ, is that we love one another. "If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen cannot love God whom he hath not seen." This is a startling announcement. To talk of love for God when in our hearts we despise any one of our brothers in Christ is a false position to maintain. The natural result of being in Christ is that we love one another. We cannot help it. "He that dwelleth in God dwelleth in love." Love makes us one. The brother of low degree and the brother of high degree are one. When we are one with God we are one with all who are God's. Any other condition is a false condition. Here opens a door of practical thought that startles one. When we see the actual condition of the nominal church we very much need the wisdom of some clever theologian to convince us that we behold a state of love. The idea of church has been so constantly prominent in our minds it is little wonder that the formal, external religion takes precedence with us. There is not much of the milk of human kindness in some very religious persons. Religion with them means going to church, mumbling prayers or the formality of the Lord's Supper. But may I ask, Does Christ care more for the form of remembrance in church than for kindness of heart and a sincere interest in the good and happiness of our fellowmen?

"Man's inhumanity to man Makes countless thousands mourn."

And the shame of it is that the oppressors of the poor are often professors of Christianity.

There is much good in praising God in the congregation. This ought we to do. But they who get the most good out of it will be the most humane, the kindest and most loving.

I wish to emphasize the importance of human love as the only way to realize the Fatherhood of God. The soul that is begotten of God must be born from the virgin womb of humanity. "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is begotten of God, and knoweth God." "Write me as one who loves his fellowmen," said Abou Ben. We need not be surprised to find that "his name led all the rest."

There is much being said these days about deepening the spiritual life. This is emphasized in conventions, and some have a kind of formula by which they suppose it is done. This kind of religious exercise has a certain value. It makes an impression for the moment, and no doubt it is a means of leading many to deeper reflection and entire readjustment of their lives. But the spiritual life has its roots in the human life, and the deeper the mellow soil of human love the taller will grow the beautiful tree of divine life. Then song will not ripple over the surface of the soul and tickle it into a momentary feeling of delight, but it will burst from the inner depths of our being and pour forth in joyful, rapturous melody.

"Beloved, let us love one another." Then, like Jesus, we will know our Father who is in heaven and will have continuous joy in his service.

"Love which, on earth, amid all the shows of it,
Has ever been the sole good of life in it,
The love, ever growing there, spite of the strife in it,
Shall arise, made perfect from death's repose of it.
And I shall behold thee face to face,
O God, and in thy light retrace
How in all I loved here, still wast thou!
Whom pressing to, then, as I fain would now,
I shall find as able to satiate
The love, thy gift, as my spirit's wonder
Thou art able to quicken and sublimate
With this sky of thine that I now walk under,
And glory in thee for, as I gaze."

Ebensburg, Pa.

A Great Sermon.

As all have read of the marvelous giving for missionary purposes in a meeting recently held in Carnegie Hall, New York, by the Christian Alliance people they will be interested in knowing of all the knowable influences that were brought to bear upon that people to so influence them, one of the chief of which was Rev. A. B. Simpkins' sermon preceding the offering. The array of facts and conditions presented in that sermon seem enough to move any movable body of people to liberal action in giving. The offering on this occasion, as you know, amounted to more than $50,000. Here is the peroration of the sermon as it appeared in the Christian Missionary Alliance:

And now, beloved, let me give you some conception of the vastness of this vision. Were I to bring the heathen myriads of Africa alone into this vast hall in three great audiences every day at the rate of ten thousand a day and give them just one chance to hear the gospel, it would take sixty years for all the heathen of Africa to be brought here to listen to one sermon, and in those years two more generations would have been born and died without the gospel. It would take a hundred and twenty years more to bring the myriads of China and Japan, and a hundred years for India's millions. And so it would require two and one-half more centuries, at this enormous rate, even to preach the gospel once to the world's lost multitude. And were we to put them all on shipboard to bring them across the ocean, it would take fifteen rows of ocean steamships stretched from shore to shore, only ten feet apart from stem to stern to hold the multitudes that would be transported across the sea. And yet while we are talking about it they are dying so fast that their corpses for a single day would fill this building thirty times over, and it would take all the adult men in New York City to act as pall bearers at the funeral of the dead heathen of a single day, and then they would have to begin to-morrow and continue the sad procession forever. Their graves would stretch in a single line all the way from New York to California; would fill a city block for forty miles long and would require two thousand acres for the cemetery needed for a single day. The heart grows sick and sad, and the mind sinks paralyzed under such a weight of woe and we can only say, Lord, pity, Lord, help, Lord, help us to help them

Our time will only permit us to dwell in conclusion on one other point in this text, namely, the urgency of the work. "Say not there are four months and then cometh harvest. The fields are white already to harvest." The Master undoubtedly means that the work is urgent and instant and will not brook delay. God has long been preparing for the crisis of missions and it has come. If there was nothing else to urge it it is enough to know that the present generation is perishing and in a little while will be beyond our reach forever. But this has always been true.

These are, however, special reasons for present urgency. We are living in emergency times. It is the last year of another century. It has been a marvelous year of startling providences and great public events. God's hand has been opening the doors of heathen lands as never before and God's voice is saying to us, "Go forward." Prophecy has been rapidly fulfilled and now there is nothing that seems to hold back the coming of the Lord but the one great prerequisite, the preaching of the gospel as a witness to all nations and in all the world. What we do we must do quickly. Stay not, beloved, for a more convenient season, for more fitting opportunity, for some more favorable circumstances. If you mean to give anything, give it to day. "Redeem the time, for the days are evil," or as we might better translate it, buy up the opportunity, meet the crisis hour of the age, and of the world, and be on time for your great life work, and for the meaning of the age in which you live.

Our Budget.

—An aggressive campaign in pushing the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is now in order.

—The forces are now being mobilized for a forward movement.

—Unless all the signs fail us, this is to be the greatest year, thus far, in the history of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and Christian Pub. Co.

—The whole force in our establishment, numbering half a hundred, are of "one mind and one heart" in a united effort to supply the brotherhood with the best religious paper, the best series of Sunday-school supplies and the best books to be found.

—The news from the churches are full of encouragements. Many successful meetings are in progress. The St. Louis churches are showing symptoms of a genuine revival and forward movement. The signs for a great ingathering are on every hand.

—Admiral Dewey persists in being an insolvable enigma to the adoring public. Of course, his wedding will be the social event of the season, thought everybody. But alas! it was a private affair, only three being present as attendants. But this is Dewey to a dot. And if he could have had his way he would have landed at some out-of-the-way place at an unknown hour instead of the reception he got in the city of New York. But Dewey is a typical American, and hence the happy blending of greatness with simplicity.

—At the annual meeting of the Disciples of Christ in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, held in Coburg Street Church, St. Johns, Oct. 5th, it was decided to try to raise $1,500 for Home Missions and to add 500 souls to the churches in the provinces named. The annual meeting was not as largely attended as was desired, but seems to have been one of the best held in many years. The reports of work were encouraging. The Christian, which is the organ of these churches, has just entered its 17th volume and the convention pledged itself anew to extend its circulation. It is a great pleasure to note these signs of growth in our sister congregations across the line, and we shall hope and pray for their continued prosperity.

—The church in Independence, Mo., recently pledged $1,000 for Church Extension. Of this amount there were six life directorships at $100 each, one life membership at $50, a number of $25 pledges and several five-year pledges. A good part of the $1,000, however, will be paid this year. Independence is the home and long pastorate of Alexander Procter. Bro. Muckley was, of course, present at this giving, Noveber 5th, and the occasion was one of enthusiasm and most enjoyable as reported to us. This is an intimation of the liberal spirit in which Kansas City will receive the General Convention next year, and a good example for the churches in order to raise the $50,000 for Church Extension necessary to complete the quarter-million mark set by the two last conventions for this work; but it will take persistent work and liberal giving this year to reach that amount. There will be no time for resting our oars if we are to quit ourselves as men in the task laid upon us for 1900. Let the churches take up the burden of the conventions at once and proceed to liquidate the requests.

—The federation of colleges, like the federation of churches, seems to come about only under the force of external pressure. As in other affairs there is that dreadful fear of centralized power. But when a problem gets beyond the resources of any given people there is nothing left but a resort to federation with churches or institutions having a common interest in the problem. The Baptist Churches in Missouri are now wrestling with their educational problem from this standpoint. Their General Association has recommended the inauguration of a movement looking to the federation of their colleges in this state. It seems to us that the recommendation is timely and wise, not as a denominational measure simply, but in the interest of a better grade of schools, and especially in the interest of the weaker institutions which of course should not be left out in the cold.

—One who appreciated the consecrated ministry and character of our lamented brother, A. M. Atkinson, has contributed a poem to his memory, which you will find in our Family Circle this week. We should be glad to give the brother's name, but he will not permit.

—The King's Business, edited by John E. and Jessie B. Pounds, is now published in Cleveland, O., instead of Indianapolis. By the way, this is one of the most promising journals in its line that comes to our table. It is a neat, healthful, vigorous journal and worthy of a wide circulation.

—In this paper will be found an article on a missionary conference to be held in New York City, in April next, of vast importance. We have before called attention to this meeting, but Bro. McLean's article will give a more complete revelation of its purpose and importance and we ask for the article the careful attention its importance demands.

—The fortieth annual meeting of the St. Louis Provident Association was held in its new central station, 1623 Washington Avenue, on last Thursday evening. The association has now established permanent headquarters at this point. Heretofore it has been as a moving tent. And yet, wherever located it has been a blessing to the city's unfortunate families and individuals. And while far more men have employment this year than for several past years, it is predicted that the burden of this and other benevolent associations the coming winter will hardly fall below the average. If true, this presents a strange condition of things, and should not pass without the attention of the student of sociological conditions.

—Dwight L. Moody was to begin a meeting in convention hall, Kansas City, Mo., this week. The pastors and churches have been making great preparations for this meeting and all are hoping that this may be the occasion of a great religious awakening in that metropolis. Moody depends upon the co-operation of the pastors of a given city to do his work, and if so great a man as Moody must be strengthened by co-operation how much more, then, is co-operation essential to the success of lesser men in their work, especially the pastors of a given city. Denominationalisms are not essential to the regeneration of men and are hindrances to religious awakenings.

—By presenting the picture of John Smith on our first page this week we do not wish to incite any comparison of the present disturbed political conditions in the state in which he immortalized his name with the religious distractions of his day, but to better acquaint the younger part of the church with a man who, because of his strong personalities, lifted himself from obscurity to a place of renown and immortality, and that, too, in the religious sphere. John Smith is one of the remarkable men of the passing century. He was born Oct. 15, 1784, in the hills of East Tennessee, but his field of operation was chiefly in Kentucky and in the first half of the present century. He became a staunch advocate of primitive Christianity and one of the foremost preachers of his day. His boldness and defiance in the presentation of his religious convictions naturally made him an object of hatred by religious opponents, but his courage and his wit never failed him and he prevailed. But we cannot here enter into a study of this remarkable life, a good outline of which you will find in Bro. Grafton's "Men of Yesterday."

—Sad as it may seem that civilizations are aided by war, yet we are confronted with the fact that our independence, our unity and our rank among the nations of the earth, have been fixed by war. The first was with Britain for our independence; the second with ourselves for the unity of the states, and the third our war with Spain gave us our present national position in the world.

—We shall hereafter insist more strongly than ever upon condensed articles, reports and news. If not suitable to our space we shall edit them either by condensation or division. This is absolutely necessary to the increased usefulaess of the paper which is our ambition and your enrichment.

—Those who aspire to fame as authors should not become unmindful of the two essential prerequsites therefor, viz., (1) suitable mattor; (2) suitable language. These are the two feet by which all famous authors attained their respective summits. If you have these two feet you may climb into fame; if not the world will never know your name.

—We recently heard of a certain people who in the auditorium of a church listened to a midweek sermon from the text, "Weighed in the balance and found wanting." Immediately after the sermon on the same evening they were dismissed to the basement of the church for refreshments and were served with less ice cream at ten cents per dish than could be bought at any restaurant for five cents. The common remark of the evening was, "Weighed in the balance and found wanting," and some strangers who were there applied the remark to the church and went back no more. The church cannot force a moral standard for business upon men that it will not practice itself.

—Not for a long while has there been such activity in the Church of Christ in this city as was indicated by the preachers reports in this office on last Monday. At the Second Church in a protracted meeting there have been 44 additions in three weeks, and in a meeting in Carondelet, conducted by our city evangelist, Bro. Marshall, there were 21 additions in two weeks. The First Church has had 17 additions at regular services in the last two or three weeks and larger audiences than ever before. Bro. Gillett reports 14 additions at Tuxedo since he began there in August. Two additions were reported at Beulah yesterday and one at Compton Heights. Bro. McFarland, of the Fourth Church, began a meeting yesterday and other churches are expecting to do likewise soon, so that we can report a general forward march movement. All the reports showed increased audiences.

—The meeting at the Second Christian Church, this city, closed last Sunday night with 44 additions. As before stated, this meeting began with F. O. Fannon, of the First Church, preaching. But sickness closed his work with the first week and left Brother Pittman, who has been preaching for the church all summer, to continue the meeting with the result stated. This, we hope, marks the beginning of a new era of prosperity for the church. Much of the material gathered in this meeting will be of immediate help to the church in various ways. The children gathered from the Bible-school and the Endeavor Society will renew and strengthen the interest of the parents of the church while all will feel the responsibility of the work in a renewed sense. Brother Pittman, be it remembered, is one of the successful business men of the city, but one who knows how to combine business and Christianity to the profit of the church. On last Sunday he and Brother Aldinger, of the Beulah Church, exchanged pulpits, but in the evening he was in his own pulpit again, preached to a large auditorium packed with peopie, had four additions and baptized 10 who had previously confessed Christ. We rejoice in the success of the work at our old stand. W. W. H.

—They that trust in the Lord shall prevail.

—"Better than ever" is what we hope to compel you to say of us.

—The next edition will be our Thanksgiving number.

—There is nothing slouchy or lazy on our pages this week.

—We should have made mention of the original poems in our Family Circle last week. If you have read them you will agree with us that they were excellent.

—All our departments, though large and full to the brim this week, would not contain all that we have on hand for this number, equally good.

—In talking politics some men seem to be bound by no laws of science or sense.

—The persistent association of the term immortality with the soul on the part of preachers and authors in the religious world reveals a singular disregard for the scriptural association of the term. Only that which is mortal can be immortalized, to wit, our bodies.

—The silver anniversary convention of the W. C. T. U. is something worth reading about. It was held this year in Seattle, Washington. The treasurer's report showed larger receipts for their work this year than in any previous year excepting those of the collections for Armenian sufferers. For a full report of the convention, see convention number of Union Signal, Nov 9th.

—W. P. Bently, our missionary in Shanghai, China, edits and publishes a paper in Shanghai called the Eastern Star. Though Oriental in name it is Occidental in appearance. It is a newsy journal Here is an item from its columns: "Since our last issue eleven persons have been baptized and received into the church. The following are their names: Ung, Hoo, Tsang, Chang, Dzing, Tseng, Woo, Kao, Ting, Dzien and Li" The Christian Church in Shanghai now has one hundred members, and the usual church activities. An American would not feel like a stranger at its services.

—The Missionary Intelligencer for November contains the annual report of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in full and is much larger than usual as to pages. The reports from the field are interesting reading, especially the list of contributing churches, schools, Endeavor Societies and individuals. A copy of this number of this magazine should be in every household in the land for study, for reference and for wholesome missionary reading. If you would know what is being done in the foreign field, if you would know the names of our missionaries in foreign lands, and especially if you would know how and by whom they are supported in this great work of love, then send to A. McLean, Cincinnati, Ohio, for a copy of this magazine for November and read it.

—For the next 18 months, beginning Jan. 1st, 1900, the Sunday-schools of the world under the international system will have their minds upon the Christ of the New Testament. Such a scene has not occurred in the history of Christianity as will be witnessed in those 18 months. In that time the four quarters of the globe will be united in the study of the meek and lowly Nazerene. What an inspiration! What a fitting close to the old and equally fitting introduction to the new century. May it not be that the opening century will be the dawn of that new era on earth of which God's grandest seers have sung? It at least means the dawn of a purer Christianity and a higher civilization. With the beginning of the next year every one ought to take up the study of the life of Christ anew. Study that life with a clear, unbiased mind. Study it as though for the first time in your life. Study it from the record that God hath given. Study it in the light of its influence upon the world. Study it in the light of human weaknesses and human hopes.

—October 28th was a fatal day for criminals in the great state of Texas. Three men paid the extreme penalty of the law for crimes of which they had been convicted.

—The C. W. B. M. have already sent out four new missionaries this missionary year, though it be not two months old. They also state that ere the winter opens they will have four missionaries in Mexico. The others have gone to India. And in addition to this they are enlarging their home work. Certainly do these women believe in expansion, and that of the kind that is beyond controversy. You will find in this paper an article from them in the interest of their work, to which your attention is requested.

—The Central Christian Collegian for November says that the churches of Harrison County, Mo., are contemplating the employment of an evangelist for the needy districts of that county. If this can be done without forcing him to raise his own salary, thus becoming a financial agent instead of a proclaimer of glad tidings, he will be a blessing to the needy districts and an example worthy of emulation by other counties.

—How to absorb and expel a harem at the same time will be one to the complex problems of the next Congress. To extend the right had of fellowship to the Sultan of Sulu and at the same time to withdraw it from Roberts, of Utah, will look somewhat like partiality. Just how to treat these two polygamists in a manner acceptable to the American people under present circumstances will be a problem of no small dimensions. As a solution of the difficulty the Church Progress humorously suggests that Roberts, of Utah, be sent as advisor to the Sultan of Sulu. That Mr. Roberts' domestic complexities would not disturb the Sultan's moral equipois and thus relieve our country of a serious embarrassment. But satire or jesting will not solve the trouble. The national recognition of polygamy in our civilization at home or abroad is a phase of expansion that our country is not yet prepared to endorse.

—We publish this week the first of two articles from the fascinating pen of our dear Bro. N. J. Aylsworth on, "In His Steps." Bro. Aylsworth's keen discernment of spiritual things pre-eminently qualifies, him, not only to appreciate the book referred to, but to to point out and assist in its effort to set forth and apply the teachings of the Christ to the daily affairs of life. Those who have read "In His Steps" will greatly enjoy these two articles from the pen of our beloved Bro. Aylsworth. We also commend the part of "A Great Sermon," in this paper, to the careful consideration of all who attempt to raise money for missionary and benevolent purposes. The preponderating power of ponderous facts cannot be improved upon as a method for moving the people to action.

—The Sunday-school Times for Nov. 11th contains an editorial on "The Man With a Grievance" that is worth reading. But if you have not the article it will pay you to make a somewhat extended investigation of the grievance class, now that the matter has been suggested. You will not have to go far, doubtless, for a subject.

—It doesn't take extra time to be a Christian. All time will do, and that as it comes. There is no conflict between Christianity and business integrity and industry.

—We come to our readers again this week with another large report from the evangelistic field. A number of meetings with large additions are reported, the largest being that of the Updike, Dorris and Millard meeting in Georgetown, Ky., with 188 added to date. Such a meeting as this sends a thrill of enthusiasm and renewed energy all along the line. God bless all our pastors and evangelists who are speaking in the name of Christ.

—The protective tariff in Japan, since it became a full-grown commercial nation, does not seem to have a healthful influence upon its commerce. A statement just received by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics shows that the total imports of Japan during the first seven months of the present year were 111,531,744 yen, against 177,074,378 in the corresponding months of last year, while the exports in the same time were 106,770,121 yen, against 82,-188,791 yen in the corresponding months of last year. Thus, while her exports have increased 25 per cent. her imports under the new tariff, which is mildly protective as compared with its predecessor, have decreased. The old tariff seldom exceeded 5 per cent. on any article.

—See the notice of the Louisville meeting next month on the origin of the Foreign Society. This is one of a series of such meetings.

—About the hardest hit we have yet seen on church entertainments is a cut in Union Gospel News of recent date, in which there is the front view of a church on which are hung out the following bulletins in different places, of course:

'Revival Postponed Until After the Busy Season."

"The United Society will hold its Annau Fish Pond Tuesday Night."

"Come to our Oyster Supper Monday Night, N. B. Each lady will bring a pint of oysters."

"Cleanliness is next to Godliness. Our young people are selling Suddy's Soap."

"Buy your fuel from us to help the missionary society. The heathen must be saved from the fiery pit."

"Two Services on Sunday and Prayer meeting on Friday Night. P. S. The gospel is free."

Is it any wonder that the churches are so worldly? Just as well hang out the sign saying, strangers are welcome at the prices printed on the tickets, as to cover the face of the church with bulletins announcing pay entertainments. It is a wonder that over some churches of which we have heard the sign does not appear in the heavens saying: My house shall be called a house o prayer, but ye have made it a house of merchandise. Brethren, have ye not houses in which to eat and to drink and to be merry—not on wine, of course—without burdening our holy religion with these dead weights? Or have not sinners enough hindrances without the church putting these stumblingstones in their way? We do not speak against the cultivation of sociability in the church, but only of these lame, halting, meet-you-half-way plans of getting sinners into the church, and of raising—presumably money, but sometimes—the Devil.

—Commerce between the United States and Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Phillippine Islands continues to grow with amazing rapidity. The September Summary of Commerce and Finance, just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows that the imports from these islands are 61 per cent. greater than in the corresponding months of 1898 or 1897, and the exports to them 161 per cent. greater than in the same months of 1898 or 1897. The The total of our imports from those four islands or groups of islands was in the nine months of 1899 $53,273,224, against $34,471,276 in the corresponding months of 1898 and $33,-059,105 in the same months of 1897, while our exports to them in nine months of 1899 were $29,921,783, against $11,933,833 in the corresponding months of 1898 and $11,480,153 in the same months of 1897. There must be some moral stimulus underlying the progress indicated by these figures, but there is danger of and in material supremacy. Unless this marvelous progress be accompanied by suitable moral, intellectual and spiritual evolution it bodes no lasting good to those islands nor other countries. There should be a supreme effort to enthrone proper moral and religious influences in those islands. It is the mission field of the hour and the door is wide open.

—The minutes of the 30th annual session of the Iowa Christian Convention are now in book form and can be had of B S. Denny, Cor. Sec., Des Moines, Iowa, or of the Christian Index Publishing Company, by which it was issued. Its size is indicative of the proportions that the Iowa work is beginning to assume. It makes a neatly printed volume of more than 100 pages. A report of the convention appeared in our columns a few weeks ago.

—We have received a book of views of the University of Illinois, from the University of Illinois and by the Univerity of Illinois. The views are half-tones of the finest quality and were taken by and made in the photography department of the university. They are not only fine, on fine paper and in unique cover, but cover all departments of the university in structure and in field. The perspective view of the buildings and grounds are deeply impressive and on a scale of magnificence in keeping with the wealth of the great state of Illinois. One of the special pictures is that of an oxyoke made by Abraham Lincoln. The original we presume is held in the museum of the university as a souvenir of the great hero of the state and the nation. A copy of this viewbook would be an ornament upon home booktable or student's desk as a piece of fine art in photo engravure.

—From the prospectus of the Institute of the Central Church of Christ, Des Moines, Ia., just to hand, it appears that a good work is being accomplished thereby. The Institute includes gymnasium, reading rooms, kindergarten, educational classes, commercial studies, Bible studies, Bethany C. E. Reading Circle, music, child work, woman's work and other features. The Institute is on a membership basis with fees ranging from 50 cents to 10 dollars. For active members, $1; for junior members, 50 cents. The popular lecture course of the Institute for 1899 1900 is an important feature and is made up of a very high order of talent. The Bible lecture course, six lectures, will be given by Prof. H. L. Willett. Such a wide range of work as this Institute is doing is certainly commendable and cannot result other than in a vast amount of good. We have particularized some things in this mention for the benefit of churches capable of and desiring to do a similar work. The Institute in Des Moines seems to be on a practical working basis.

—Two books have just recently come from the press of the Christian Publishing Company that are worthy of special mention. The larger of the two books is entitled, "Moses, the Man of God," and was written by D. R. Dungan, pastor Mt. Cabanne Church, this city. Although of a different character from Dr. Dungan's famous book, "On the Rock," we see no reason why it should not become equally popular. The theme, Moses, is about as sensational and widespread in these latter years as any theme of the religious world, save that of the Christ, and Dr. Dungan was never in a better condition for writing a book than in these later years of his life. His rich experience as a Bible teacher in the Bible Chair and in the pulpit, together with his years of study, travel and research, certainly qualify him to write an interesting and valuable book on the theme named. Probably we should say subject rather than theme, owing to the biographical character of the book, but the term "theme" better suits our purpose in this note. The book is in the best of the bookmaker's art, beautiful type, good paper and over 300 pages, all for one dollar. The second book is smaller, but no less important in its sphere. It was written by our missionary, Wm. Remphrey Hunt, on "Facts About China," and can be had for 25 cents. It contains some astonishing figures and facts, and is a fine missionary document. We predict for each of these new books a very large sale.

—The Religious Herald has proposed that there be held a Pan-Baptist conference and the Standard, Chicago, has seconded the proposition. It says: "By all means let us have a council of our own. Details of arrangements would involve an immense amount of labor and some differences of opinion, but the result ought to pay for the trouble." So we think. The more brotherly kindness that is shown between different religious bodies, especially of a given family of believers, the greater will become their effectiveness in the world.

—One of the special things attempted by the Y. M. C. A. was to see that proper representatives of their order accompany each regiment sent to the Philippines. That such a work is greatly needed is without controversy. Also the influence of religious men and services maintained by the Y. M. C. A. on the morale of the army. But the association has not had sufficient funds to fully meet the emergency and hopes that others who appreciate the importance of the work will supply the lack. Contributions for this patriotic purpose may be sent to the Army and Navy Department, International Committee, 3 West 29th St., New York City, specifying that the contribution is intended to be applied to the work on transports.

—The following notice of the death of a prominent writer, lecturer and publisher, in Boston, Mass., appeared in a recent number of the Watchword:

Rev. H. L. Hastings, editor and publisher of the Christian, died recently of typhoid fever. He has traveled hundreds of thousands of miles on both sides of the Atlan ic, and spoken thousands of times in the chief cities of America and Great Britian, in highway and byway, theaters, tents, churches, wharves, and steamships, or wherever he could find people willing to listen to the words of truth. Adopting as his motto, "No creed but the Bible, no master but Christ, no name but Christian," he has found open doors among religious people of all classes. As early as 1853 he began the publication of religious tracts, and in January, 1866, he issued the first number of the Christian, an undenominational religious paper. In 1866 he began the issue of anti-infidel tracts and pamphlets, of which he has since written and edited a very larg number.

—After reading the following paragraph from Zion's Outlook (Methodist) a few moment's spent in self-examination and meditation will be well spent, even with the best of preachers and men:

Sincerity is the foundation of religious character. If the foundation is destroyed the building falls Be sure you are sincere. Let the heart be true and honest. When the lips open let the heart speak. Do not be two persons—one person in life and lip, the other at heart. Watch every word. Do not let the tongue move without the heart is in line. The preacher of all men ought to be sincere, and yet he is in the very way where insincerity lurks. He is exposed to the temptation of being professional, a sermon-maker, a sermon-monger, a mere tradesman selling his wares, an actor playing a part.

—If you are interested in the purity and perpetuity of the homes of our country please copy the following petition, get all the voters you can to sign it and send it to the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., or to the League for Social Reform, New York City, or direct toyour congressman:

PETITION.

The undersigned hereby eanestly petition your honorable body to reject or expel Brigham H. Roberts, congressman-elect from Utah, which, in electing one who is both a confessed polygamist and an open champion of polygamy, has broken the solomn covenant made with the nation as the condition of statehood, and invited a general repudiation of that covenant by its citizens. We also petition you to pass a bill to submit a constitutional amendment disqualifying polygamists for election as Senators and Representatives in Congress and prohibiting polygamy, so putting the punishment of it under jurisdiction of national officers.

—We are in receipt of the first annual report of the army department of the Y. M. C. A. in the Philippine Islands and feel the work has certainly been of incalculable value. After a detailed account of the establishment of services in various regiments at different times and of relief work done in stations, hospitals, tents on the field and in the trench, the report says:

A total of 120 religious services were held in addition to the 77 other meetings, which include sessions of the Bible classes, literary society and entertainments. Twenty conversions are reported, 33 requests for prayers; more than one-half million pieces of stationery and 25,000 pieces of literature were distributed. The beginning of 1900 will see more than 50,000 of our young men in these islands—many of them for the first time away from restraining influences of home and friends, and exposed to the fierce temptations which are coincident in the opening of new territory. How great, then, is the field for Association effort. A building in Manila is a pressing necessity for the next year, and at least the greater part of the support must come from the home land. Shall the work be hindered? We hope not, and ask for the International Committee at New York, under whom the work is carried on, that substantial support, which the exigencies of the situation demand.

—We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the Christmas number of the Church Choir, published by Geo. F. Rosche & Company, Chicago, Ill., in which are a number of anthems, duets, solos and other music especially arranged for Christmas occasions, services and entertainments.

—Missionary Tidings for November is a much larger number than usual, containing as it does a full report of the C. W. B. M. silver anniversary convention. It contains, in addition to its regular departments, reports of all officers, committees, missionaries and convention addresses, and is valuable for many reasons and uses. There is also the appeal to the C. W. B M auxiliaries everywhere for the observance of C. W. B. M. Day, Dec. 3rd. The C. W. B. M. have fixed their mark this year at $130,000 for 1900, and they appeal to the entire brotherhood "to help those women" whose work is in the Lord's vineyard. In this number will be found an article on the subject, and we bespeak for them a general and hearty observance of the day. The time is short and preparation is important if success is attained; we trust, therefore, that the auxiliaries everywhere will have things in order, that they will be assisted by pastors, schools and Endeavorers, and rejoice in a grand day and a liberal offering.

PERSONAL MENTION.

J. B. Briney is now at Paris, Mo., where he requests all correspondence to be addressed.

The Fillmore Brothers, of Cincinnati, have issued a special catalogue of new Christmas music.

E. W. Brickert, pastor, began a meeting at Sullivan, Ill., Nov. 5th.

W. D. Cunningham has been appointed as evangelist of Ontario Province, Canada.

The Hope Publishing Co. have kindly sent us a copy of their word edition of Pentecostal Hymns, No. 2.

S. M. Martin is now at Huntington W. Va., in a protrated meeting, assisted by J. H. Rosecrans, singer.

T. R. Overton has been employed to preach one-half time for the church in Mapelton, Kan., and is now in the field with fine outlook for success.

W. H. Bagby, pastor of the church in Salt Lake City, Utah, has been invited to remain in that field indefinitely. He begins his third year's work there Jan. 1, 1900.

J. W. Robbins, of Mexico, Mo , was present at the meeting of the preachers in this office on last Monday. Also, J. G. M. Luttenberger, of Dorchester, Ill.

J. Fred Jones, Illinois state secretary, recently ordained elders and deacons in the church in Virden, Ill. The services are said to have been beautifully and scripturally conducted and very impressive.

The beautiful poem written by Jesse Brown Pounds and read by her in the Jubilee Convention appears in the October number of the King's Business. The title, "Voices from the Past," is full of poetry and the poem of eloquent strains.

The poem by B. J. Radford, of which so much has been said in praise, is also printed in the October number of the King's Business. Either of the poems named in this column is alone worth a year's subscription to the King's Business, 353 Franklin Ave., Cleveland, O.

The Christian Index of November 1 says: "Leslie Morgan starts for England next week. He will preach at Southampton. He is held in high esteem and will go with the prayers and hearty commendation of all his brethren."

S. F. Field, pastor at Francisville, Ind., has been visiting his brother, N. M. Field, in this city. He reports the work at Francisville in good condition, and says that District Evangelist T. J. Shuey begins a meeting there Nov. 13th.

Geo. C. Stoll, a preacher from the "Church of God," who recently united with the First Christian Church in this city, is now preaching in Ohio. A very complimentary notice of his work in a meeting in Dennison, O., appears in the Evening Chronicle from that city.

The editor of the Christian Index is announcing a lecture on "Evolution of a Millionaire." Not many editors of religious journals can found a lecture on such a theme on personal experience. But please remember that we are not accusing the editor of the Index of being a millionaire.

J. B. Holmes, pastor of the church Albany, Ore., has begun the publication of an eight-page religious journal called the Christian Helper. It looks as if it was intended for more than local uses. It looks strong enough editorially to go abroad. We wish Brother Holmes success in the enterprise.

"In the Christian Church at Santa Ana, California, at high noon, Oct. 26, 1899, B. F. Morehouse, a talented young business man, and Mae Lucile Bateman, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Bro. and Mrs. R. H. Bateman were united in marriage; the father of the bride officiating, assisted by B. F. Coulter, Los Angeles."

J. W. Ingram preached in his old pulpit in Omaha, Neb., Nov. 5th, and it is reported that he was urged to accept the work there again indefinitely. On accounl of other engagements, however, the offer was declined. He was called to Omaha to preach the funeral of Alvin Saunder's of whose death Brother Ingram makes mention in this paper.

J. E. Cranford wishes to engage with a church in a milder climate, and resigns his work at Acton, Ontario, only because of his disagreement with the cold of Canadian winters. He can be secured at a moderate salary for work in a North Central state. "The church at Acton commends him as an efficient pastor and Christian brother, and invites you to write him if in need of a good man."

R. J. Bamber, of Toronto Junction, Canada, has resigned his work in that field and desires work in the United States again. He was in Toronto two years and says that the church there for which he preached has more than doubled its membership in that time. He will be ready for engagement by Jan. 1st and asks churches wanting a pastor to address him at once as above.

Brother Fannon, of this city, who has been sick, is again on duty at home and abroad. On the 9th instant he attended the Macoupin and Montgomery County convention at Collinsville, Ill., and one night this week is to address the Stat Council of the Royal Arcanum in this city. He was in his pulpit yesterday and seems overwhelmed with appointments. His assistant pastor, Bro. Cook, is also busy with the cares of the church.

Elmer Shepard, well known in this office as a compositor for years past, has now become a preacher and begins his first regular work in the employ of the State Bible-school Board. His field will be in Southeast Missouri. Bro. Shepard is a young man of excellent character, a member of the Fourth Christian Church in this city and a student of Eureka College. He went from here to Festus last week. We ask for him the encouragement and prayers of the brethren to whom he may come, and will ourselves pray for his success in the work.

Sister Luttenburger, wife of J. G. M. Luttenburger, is now improving from the critical surgical operation which she underwent in this city. For awhile her life was almost despaired of, but careful treatment brought her over the crisis and she now hopes to soon enjoy sound health again. Their home is in Dorchester, Ill., but she came to the Mayfied Sanitarium for treatment. Bro. Luttenburger has been detained from his evangelistic work on account of her sickness, but is now ready for work again wherever called. Bro. Luttenberger and his wife think of spending next year in Germany where he will preach the gospel to his own people in their own land.

The following sad message was sent to us by J. J. Lockhart, Macon City, Mo., Nov. 8th: "It is my painful duty to chronicle the death of Sister Mary A. Curtright, who fell asleep in Jesusjon the morning of Oct. 14th. She was 26 years of age, but she had lived so as to mold her character after the pattern of her dear Savior, and the Church of Christ possessed no more loyal member than she. From the time of her acceptance of the Savior, which was at the early age of 14, till the day of her death, she did what she could to promote and advance the cause of Christ. She will be missed very much, as she for many years had been the organist and leader in the song service. She leaves a father, mother, three brothers and a host of friends to mourn her loss, as she was loved by all who knew her."

Quotations from Sermons.

From the published reports of sermons preached in the various pulpits of this city on October 29th, the following strong, eloquent and practical periods are quoted:

If you will be a child of God and an heir of heaven, you must deny yourself of all ungodliness and worldly lusts and live soberly, righteously and piously. You must be loyal to the King, industrious, honorable, benevolent, temperate in all things, rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer. In this way you will be entitled to the honor which comes from God only, being blessed in time and eternity.—DR. DUNGAN (Christian).

The church of God is on a mission to the world. It is Christ's messenger, with Christ's gospel to Christ's world. It must go into the world and preach the gospel to every creature. The gospel of the Son of God in and by a church which regards itself as a kind of close corporation of apostles and prophets and evangelists and pastors and teachers and laity for itself as the special favorites of salvation, i the gospel the world never hears and never wi hear. Obedience to Christ's command is ab solutely essential to the church. "Go preac my gospel." That church must pervade civili zation and the state, not to create a stat church. The church has learned and the stat has learned that the church and state are no the same.—DR. BURNHAM (Congregationalist)

The way to humanity passes through th gentle and tender heart and not through th gateway of knowledge, and the ideals, whic we delight to call our own, which point to regeneration of the whole human family, wil never come to pass until we have educated ou hearts and called to our assistance every nobl sentiment and every deep and pure emotio that human nature is capable of. "Above al things, guard thy heart, for out of it are th issues of life."—DR. SALE (Hebrew).

An impure ministry means a spiritually de clining congregation. It means reckless, law less society It means outlawism in the gov ernment. It means a declining morality and spiritual death. If the ministers of our coun try were absolutely pure, if they would no taste, touch nor handle the slightest phases o impurity, and if they would, on the other hand stand for, aggressively stand for, absolut purity in the pew, in the store, in the shop an on the street, and in the parlor, the worl would be lifted to God within a short period o time.—DR. MATHEWS (Presbterian).

The Babies' Home of the Christian Church.

Because of the crowded condition of the Orphans' Home it was deemed best to rent a separate building for the babies. Hence, June the 1st a furnished house was rented for six months, and there we have taken all the children under two years of age, and cared for 45 since then, besides giving a temporary home to 12 women and finding employment for eight others. Our time is out in the furnished house and we must move this month. We have rented a vacant house, 2821 Chestnut St., but have very little furniture; in fact, scarcely anything to move only babies. We write this to you trusting those who read it will send us something, even if it is only the price of a cup. Those living a distance from the city can't well send furniture, but they can send the price of a bed or chair, or even a clothes line or clothes pins, for we need everything just like we were going to housekeeping; sheets the size for single beds, pillows, towels and so on. $15 will pay for and furnish a bed and maintain it several years; also place on it a plate with any name you wish. Be sure and say it is for the Babies' Home, so there will be no mistake, and send as soon as you can because of our urgent need.

New York Letter.

I have just read with unspeakable delight that charming little book, "Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis, and take the privilege of saying it ought to find a place in every Sunday-school library in the country. It will do much good in the hands of our boys and girls. Preachers also will find it suggestive along sermonic lines, and may get several good discourses by cultivating the seeds which a reading of this book will plant in the mind. Bro. Davis should give us other studies similar to Queen Esther. Both he and the Christian Publishing Company are to be congratulated on the putting out of this delightful little volume.

Last Lord's day we had the pleasure of a visit at the 169th St. Church from Bro. Neil McCleod, one of our faithful missionaries to Jamaica. He occupied the pulpit at the morning service and gave us many interesting facts about the people of that island and the progress of Christianity among them.

The Comforting Circle of the King's Daughters in the 169th St. Church celebrated their tenth anniversary on the evening of the 24th by holding a special service, at which Bro. Denham made a good address on "The Character of the King's Daughter."

The Rev. Dr. W. H. P. Faunce recently preached his farewell to the Fifth Ave. Baptist Church at the close of his tenth year of pastoral service. He goes to the presidency of Brown University, where it is thought he will accomplish a great work. In his final sermon he reviewed the unselfish work of the Fifth Ave. congregation in its Norfolk St. mission and its Armitage House services and its liberality toward all missionary work. He said: "We have endeavored, not to draw a crowd, but to construct an audience. Religion has been greatly cheapened by hippodroming and sensationalism in the pulpit. Many men are without pulpits to-day because of their finesse of feeling, because in many instances the modern church admires the hustler more than the prophet, and many congregations choose leaders who play to the galleries instead of those who try to make their congregations like Christ." He also said that a church that only has two sermons on Sunday and a prayer service during the week has no place in New York. If it fills a place in the uplifting of the city it must be aggressively missionary.

Grace Church corporation, Broadway and 11th St., has purchased property at 88 Fourth Ave., in the rear of its church, for $30,000. It was reported recently that the property was bought to get rid of a liquor saloon on the premises because it was so near the parish house, but Dr. Huntington says that is not the case. It simply means that the church corporation has bought the saloon to enlarge its parish buildings at some future time. But the peculiar thing about it is the fact that Grace Church has possession now, but the saloon-keeper has a lease of the saloon which has two more years yet to run; hence Grace Protestant Episcopal Church, Broadway and 11th Street, New York, has a saloon-keeper for a tenant, for the present at least. And there seems to be no effort put forth to change this anomalous condition.

The Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke announced yesterday that a time had been fixed at which the Brick Presbyterian Church would call his successor. It will be remembered that Dr. Van Dyke accepted a call to a professorship of English Literature in Princeton University. He took up his new work at Princeton at the beginning of the scholastic year, and continues to fill his pulpit in New York every Sunday, though he says the two burdens are too much for his strength. Consequently he wishes to sever his relation with the Brick Church as soon as possible. A number of possible candidates have been mentioned for the pulpit, but perhaps the most popular of all is President M. W. Stryker, of Hamilton College, New York, who has often supplied the pulpit and is said to be quite a favorite with the people. Dr. Stryker would be a strong accession to the ministerial forces of our city, though in the removal of Dr. Van Dyke the metropolitan pulpit loses one of its stars.

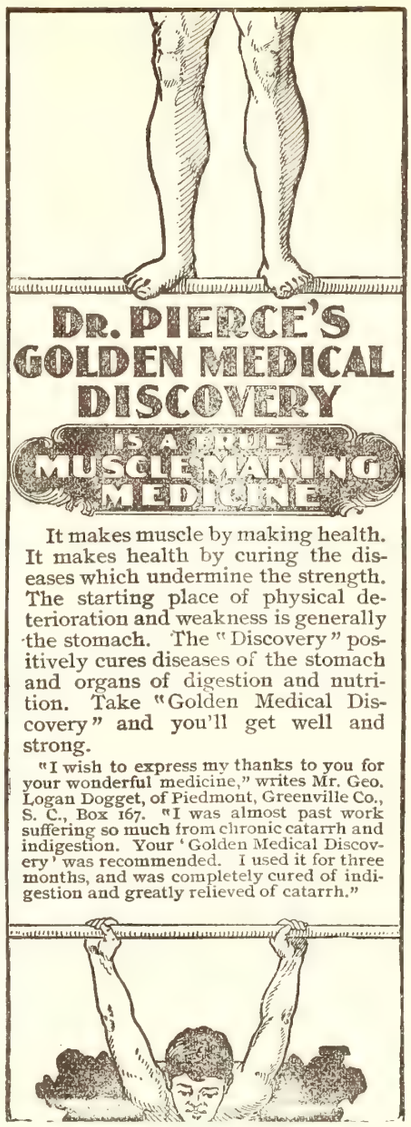
MISS HATTIE L. JUDSON—NO. 4.

"When her heavy task was done,
She stood on Pisgah's height,
And saw far off the westering sun
Drop down into the night."

"Softly as a cloud,
A golden cloud, upon a summer's day,
Floats from the heat of land out o'er the sea,
So her sweet life passed away."

Weary and fatigued with the heavy task of feeding the multitudes, Miss Judson reached Hurda while she was yet in the first stages of typhoid fever. This was the 17th of September. On the sixth day of the following October the Master said: "It is enough; come up higher!" A smile as radiant as the light of angels' wings swept across her face, and she was gone! The memory of the distressing experiences of the famine time at Mahoba haunted her till the last. In the delirium of the fever she would say: "I should like to forget the cry of the people for bread." This prayer was soon to be answered. She was even then on the border of the better land, where inhabitants neither hunger nor thirst any more. Only a little while, and her eager eyes beheld the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne, who feeds his people and leads them to living fountains of water. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. There shall be no more famine, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away.

Mr. Wharton says: "The approach of typhoid fever was not at first recognized. She continued at her post as long as she could walk. She desired to return to Hurda hoping to get rested and soon be ready to resume her work. Dr. Mary McGavran went to be with and treat her. She was glad to get back, but she was completely worn out and exhausted. She had the best care and nursing, but all the tender and loving ministries of friends availed nothing. "She was so tired we could the more willingly let her go." Though young, her work on earth was done—well done. That life is long which answers life's great end. She bequeathed most of her property to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. While she sleeps in her lonely grave, lying out in the dew and the dawn of India, she will continue to speak in many lands and in many tongues. Her associates on the foreign field testified their appreciation of Miss Judson's beautiful life in the following lines sent by Miss Bessie Farrar: "We express our deep sorrow at the loss of a tireless worker, a faithful friend; our gratitude for the brave life that lived itself out in the shadow of India's sorrow; our praise that her influence will not die; our fellowship with those who sorrow with us across the sea, but reunion in our Father's house." The orphan girls at Mahoba were strangely attached to the "Hurda Mamma," as they affectionately called Miss Judson. They have raised the money to have her picture enlarged for the schoolroom. When they read the last chapter of Revelation they say: "We shall see the Hurda Mamma," or the "Hurda Mamma will be there."



Mrs. Emma Wharton, who was absent with her husband at Landour at the time of Miss Judson's death, writes: "We could not reach Hurda in time for the funeral. The Methodist minister, however, was there. He was exceedingly kind, doing all he could to help Miss Thompson and Dr. Mary McGavran at that sad time. He officiated at the grave. His wife told me it was the most beautiful funeral she ever attended. Miss Judson's face wore a happy smile as though her soul was in ecstacy. She wore a simple but daintily made robe. All the flowers that could be found were arranged about her. At the grave was a simple service. The native Christians sang her favorite song in Hindi. The English begins: 'Here we suffer grief and pain.' It sounded so holy and sweet in the quiet of the moonlit evening." Mrs. Mary McGavran, her faithful physician, says of the last sad experiences: "Mrs. Jackson, Miss Thompson and I were with her when the Master called. For several days she had not spoken except to answer 'yes' or 'no,' and that only a few times. She was conscious till the last. She died at 7:30 Wednesday morning. At 6:00 in the evening we took her to the Church of England burial ground. It was dusk by the time we reached the cemetery, but the moonlight was bright, and in the quiet hush of the evening time we laid her to rest near the graves of Miss Sue Robinson and Dr. Durand's little babe."

"There the palms, like banners bending,
Drooped in starlight and in gloom;
There, when that sad day was ending,
And the pale moonlight was blending,
With the stars now fast ascending;
There they mute and mournful bore her,
With the stars and shadows o'er her,
And they laid her down—so tender—
And the next day's sun in splendor
Flashed above the 'Shama's' tomb."

FINIS.

Macatawa in Autumn.

Inasmuch as all the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are more or less familiar with Macatawa, Michigan, either having visited there or been introduced to it by the "Lakeside Musings" of the editor, this letter, written by one who has lingered after the summer throng, may not be devoid of interest.

The exodus from Macatawa begins the last week in August, and continues through September. By the close of the second week in September the Park seems deserted, compared to what it was a month before. Most of the cottages have been closed with the massive winter shutters, a glance along the beach shows but few wanderers, the trains have ceased to run to Ottawa Beach, across the bay, only a few boats are to be seen on Black Lake and the autumnal calm has begun to pervade the erstwhile busy, lively resort. After the first of October the calm becomes intensified. One of the Chicago steamers has gone into winter quarters, and the other makes three trips each week across the Lake. The "Lizzie Walsh," "Harvey Watson" and "Gladys" have retired to Holland and tied up for the winter, and all ferrying between the Park and Ottawa Beach is done by rowboats. A few families yet remain, and these, if they were strangers in August, when the population of the resort was between 2,500 and 3,000, speedily become acquainted, now that the atumnal exodus has reduced the number to fifty or less. When November comes, few indeed are left. But three cottages are occupied. Macatawa is a deserted city. The "Soo City" is still running to Chicago more or less regularly, and the electric cars run to Hoiland every honr and fifteen minutes. The post office has hibernated, and we go to Holland for mail, as well as for provisions. The trees are almost bare of their foliage, and the bold outlines of the sandhills, which are hidden in summer, now stand plainly against the sky. The quiet and calm are broken only by the roar of the surf and the whistling of the November winds; a sabbath stillness reigns around. The red squirrel is much in evidence, gathering acorns and chattering at the human interruper in a tone that makes us fear that his language, if translated, would be unfit for publication. Flocks of wild ducks fly across the waters of both lakes. The famous white perch of Lake Michigan, so hard to ensnare during the hot summer, has now entered Black Lake to spend the winter, and may be caught with ease. At night the water of the bay is fairly churned by the white bass. A number of pickerel have been caught off the Macatawa dock.

The weather throughout September and October has been delightful. There have been, I believe, but six rainy days since September 1st. Last week there was a vigorous snowstorm which lasted all one afternoon, but by the next morning all the snow had melted away. There has been no cold weather yet. Our summer cottage, with no means of heating but the kitchen stove, has been comfortable at all times.

I have spent many summers at Macatawa, but none of them have been so delightful as this autumn. O, the delicious quiet and rest of it! The wicked have ceased from troubling and the weary heve been at rest. Blessed is the man who can rise up in the morning knowing that he has before him a day of uninterrupted quiet in which to do some of the pet work he has been projecting for years, and can lie down at night with the blissful consciousness that it will make no difference to any one if he doesn't get up until nine the next morning.

Often had we heard it said that October was the ideal month to spend at Macatawa, and now we know it to be true. It is worth two Julys. Barring perhaps the nightly "hops" at the hotel, the October visitor may enjoy everything that the August resorter has. We went bathing October 15, finding the water agreeably warm. The fishing is better than in the hot summer; the society is more select; the temperature is even more comfortable than in the summer; opportunity for reading, study or any brain work are infinitely better.

We must leave soon, of course, for an unplastered cottage, built for summer habitation, would hardly serve for shelter when the winter gales begin and the temperature falls below zero. We would like to remain and enjoy iceboating and fishing through the ice, but we cannot. When we depart it will be with genuine regret that we must exchange the quiet, peaceful, tranquil Macatawa for the hurry and bustle and roar of the city. RUSTICUS.

Macatawa, Mich., 7 November.

The Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions.

There will be held in New York, April 21 to May 1, 1900, an Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, representing the Protestant missionary societies and missions of the world. It is expected that this will prove to be truly representative of all the foreign missionary work of the Protestant world, both as to the societies conducting it and as to the missionaries actively employed in the great world-field. This being so, no gathering more important to the interests of Christ's kingdom can be well conceived. All the societies and religious bodies of the United States and Canada are included as entertaining hosts. It is time now that preparation for this conference should begin. The preparation should not be confined simply to the committee having the matter in charge and to writers of papers and the delegates at large. There should be a threefold preparation of the whole church by prayer, by study, by contribution.

It is recommended that there be a concert of prayer each month for the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ. Prayer for the conference should not be confined to the monthly concert; it should be repeated in church services and in family worship.

In the second place, there should be a new and intelligent study of the great problems relating to the extension of Christ's kingdom throughout the world. These problems are as follows: The relation of the different forms of work to the central purpose of preaching the gospel. Second, the unity and harmony and co-operation of the different organizations working in the same fields. Third, the development of self-support and self-activity on the part of the native churches. These three principles must be applied intelligently in order to the comprehension of the ways and means to missionary economics.

As every evangelical body is invited to be represented at the conference, so every church desiring should have the privilege of contributing something toward its expenses. It is thought that the sum of $5, which will not be burdensome to most churches, will accomplish this object and provide without further cost for the sending of a copy of the report to be issued in two volumes to every church thus contributing to the general fund. Thus the latest results of missionary activity and work will be put within the reach of every contributing church. In such a work and with such an object in view all should bear a part.

Winter in the South.

The season approaches when one's thoughts turn toward a place where the inconveniences of a Northern winter may be escaped. No section of this country offers such ideal spots as the Gulf Coast on the line of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad between Mobile and New Orleans. It possesses a mild climate, pure air, even temperature and facilities for hunting and fishing enjoyed by no other section. Accommodations for visitors are first-class, and can be secured at moderate prices. The L. & N. R. R. is the only line by which it can be reached in through cars from Northern cities. Through cars schedules to all points in Florida by this line are also perfect. Write for folders, etc., to GEO. B. HORNER, D. P. A., St. Louis, Mo.

The Scriptural Plan for Unity.

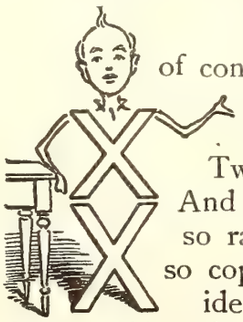
Now we come to consider the fourth and only true scriptural and hopeful plan. Restoration is the one and only hope of those who really care for unity more than for the ascendancy of their own special denominational orthodoxy. This is the Apostle Paul's plan. He derived it from Jesus, the actual author of it. It was the keynote of the New Reformation when that movement was initiated by the Christian Association in America early in this century. It was Barton Stone's plan. It was Thomas Campbell's plan. It was Alexander Campbell's plan. It was the scheme adopted by Walter Scott, Elder John Smith, Jacob Creath, Dr. Richardson, Isaac Errett and Moses Lard. Truly, there were giants in those days, when these men baptized thousands upon thousands every year, many coming over from the multitudinous jarring sects, and multitudes more being converted fresh from the devil. What shall we say of their successors? Truly, they have not left a record to make us ashamed! Denominationalism can show no such shining roll, bright though some of its stars have been and are. What shall we say of such men as Timothy Coop, with his native genius and splendid munificence? Of M. D. Todd, with the pure and mingled blaze of his fiery zeal and his glittering logic? Of McGarvey, with his staunch fidelity to the old paths; and Haley, with his mind open to all that can be freshly found in the inexhaustible Kiondike of truth? Of W. T. Moore, with his passionate love for our nation, for he hath built us more than one synagogue; and of F. D. Power, who has been chaplain to the Parliament of the greatest democracy the world has ever seen? What shall we say of Garfield, the Hiram boy, who became President of that nation of sixty millions, after fighting as soldier and general against slavery under the flag called "Old Glory;" and of Garrison, who fell wounded in battle in the same awful war, but rose from that battlefield to fight in this war, and now, as editor of a gospel journal, daily hurls the inkpot at the devil, like another Luther, from the Wartberg on Mississippi's banks. What of Wharton, who is giving his life for India? Of the young apotles to China, who have already sacrificed, in their missionary devotion, Saw and Hearnden; and of the girls who went forth from homes of American luxury and have gone to sleep in the Far East—Miss Robinson, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Hearnden? What of the young physician who recently went out from our American churches to the Congo, and made his grave in a few weeks, as a first-fruit monument of this mission in Darkest Africa, dotted already with sacrificial sepulchres of noble young heroes like Bentley, Comber, White and others of the Baptist and Guinness missions? What of Shishmanian, whose simple story of his recent visit to Tarsus and his last tour to Asia Minor, baptizing scores as he went, brought tears into my own eyes, as I seemed to be reading over again the missionary journeys of Paul; and what of dear Dr. Holck, the accomplished Danish physician, preacher and editor, who has held the fort at Copenhagen for years, until at last from that point pioneers have gone forth into Norway and Sweden, where a marvelous cluster of many young churches has sprung up as if by magic? Time would fail to tell of Earl, and Van Horn, and John A. Brooks, a great orator in his prime, and the Sweeney who is matchless in debate with terrified sectarians; and Updike, the evangelist who magnetizes vast hungry audiences; and Lamar, whose pen seems to make the page speak aloud; and Briney, whose logic always silences the sophist; and the two Tylers, and Loos, the venerable and accomplished Frenchman, German and American in one, who presides over the Foreign Missionary Society; and of that young Apollos of sacred erudition, Dr. Herbert Willett; and, last but not least, what could any grateful people say that would do justice to that splendid, single-hearted, consecrated secretary, who holds all the missionaries in his great heart, A. McLean? Time would fail indeed to tell of all the heroes in this war of whom we are proud as our past and present leaders, and whom thus I have asked you briefly to pass in review of this Jubilee occasion, when we are gratefully celebrating the poogress of this mighty Reformation.

Has church history in all the ages shown such miraculous growth? I believe that the world and the church have seen nothing even comparable to the origin, the increase and the power of the Disciples, and that the hand of God and the power of the Holy Spirit have never in modern ages been so conspicuously manifested. Here is a movement hardly a century old, which in America takes fourth rank in the number of its membership, and will before long outnumber all other Christian communions in that country which is leading the world in all progress, and is the mighty laboratory of all salutary reforms and revolutions. I was looking with astonishment at that front page of a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST which contained the portraits of the nine principals of our own American universities, for we have a people, though so infantile in years, already grown a magnificent crop of collegiate and academic institutions, which show that this movement is going to conquer the culture and annex the philosophy and subdue the art and science of the world for Christ. To my mind that picture of our university presidents is worth all the Royal Academy exhibitions in the world. Little did Barton Stone and Thomas Campbell and Alexander Campbell and Walter Scott and Benjamin Franklin and John Smith dream of this majestic development when they went forth into the wilderness bearing the pure white flag of the ancient hallowed gospel, and giving to the churches throughout the world the signal of a return from Babylon to Jerusalem.—Extract from the address of W. Durban, president of our English Christian Co-operation—printed in the Christian Commonwealth.

An Example Worth Imitating.

Considerable has been said about the college banquets at the Jubilee Convention. With others I rejoice in the opportunity thus given to meet the friends of our school days. But at the same time it seems to me to be much more in keeping with the spirit of a missionary convention that these reunions be held with the feature of an expensive banquet left out. An overloaded stomach and late hours make a poor preparation for enjoying the intellectual and spiritual food of convention addresses.

The friends of Cotner University, at Bethany, Neb. (I locate the place for one of my classmates asked me, seriously, "Where is Cotner?"), held their reunion on the platform of Odeon Hall on Wednesday evening. Mrs. Alice Harmon, of St. Paul, Minn., presided over the meeting. President Aylesworth led in prayer; J. W. Hilton sang "I will go where you want me to go, Lord." The following themes were discussed: "The Heritage of College Life," by A. D. Harmon;" "The Duty of College Alumni," by George Ritchey; "Our Colleges," by R. W. Abberly; "My Relation to the College," by Grant K. Lewis; "Joys and Sorrows of College Life," by I. W. Fisher; "Promises for the Future," by J. W. Hilton. After a few earnest words by President Aylesworth, A. M. Chamberlain and F. A. Bright, an offering was taken to be given to the Atkinson Memorial Fund. This amounted to sixteen dollars, which was liberal for the number present, most of whom had already made an offering to that work.



It was a helpful meeting and was in accord with the spirit of the school that in the midst of the most adverse circumstances has gone on in its work of educating young men and women for the duties of Christian service. All honor to the men and women who so nobly stood by Cotner in the days of trial. The skies are brightening, a better day is coming. May all the friends of education that are west of the Missouri River rally to the support of Cotner. The school is worthy of your best effort. As a graduate of Hiram, as a preacher in Nebraska for more than three years, and as I view the matter after two months work in Ohio, I candidly believe there is no more important work to Western Disciples than to stand by the work of Cotner University. May the example this school has set in our National Convention be followed by other schools, is my prayer for the good of our Master's cause.

Drake University at the Jubilee Convention.

The founders, the trustees, the faculty, the graduates and the students of Drake University were a large factor in the great convention. In the following sketch I shall not follow the classification just made. It will be more readable to follow another order.

The matter of first importance to our school is that we have a goodly number of mission workers in the field. Hardly any of them were at the convention, but no sketch would be complete without mention of them. The chief reason for the annual meeting of our national conventions is to hear reports from the workers and to plan for enlarging their field. Hence, they are the logical beginning of this paper. If I mistake not our representatives in the field are twelve. In the employ of the Home Board in Nebraska is H. J. Kirschstein; at Rat Portage, Ontario, J. K. Hester; in Tacoma, Washington, B. H. Lingenfelter. The C W. B. M. have in their employ H. D. Williams, of Ann Arbor; W. M. Jordan, Helena, Montana; Louie Hugh, Jeu Hawk and wife, of Portland, Oregon. The Foreign Board has six of our graduates. Miss Bertha Marshall, of Hurda, India, is now on her way out. Frank and Ethel Garrett went out about two years ago. They are in Nankin, China. Miss Loduska Wirick, H. H. Guy and wife are in Tokio, Japan. Of these we are justly proud, and to their number we hope to add others as rapidly as possible.

IN THE CINCINNATI PULPITS.

Eight of our men supplied pulpits on Sunday, Oct. 15th. W. W. Wharton, of Nora Springs, Ia., was with the Lockland Christian Church, as was also E. M. Flynn, of Haverhill, Mass.; L. W. Morgan, now on his way to locate in England, and O. W. Lawrence, of Maryville, Mo., were with the Norwood Christian Church; B. E. Utz, of Spokane, Wash., was with the East End Christian Church; M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., preached for the Hartwell Presbyterian Church; C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., spoke at the Price Hill M. E. Church.

Six of the Drake men took part on the regular programme. Prof. Edward Scribner Ames had the honor of dividing time with Francis E. Clark, of Boston, on the C. W B. M. programme for Saturday evening. His theme, happily chosen, was "Childhood the Perennial Opportunity." Our patron and founder, Gov. F. M. Drake, was chairman of the business men's meeting, held in the Grand Hotel on Saturday night. It was at the close of this meeting that A. M. Atkinson fell dead with these words: "Quit you like men." H. O. Breeden at a late hour followed successfully five brilliant speakers on the Music Hall platform on Tuesday evening. His theme was "Our Missionary Outlook." A. M. Haggard's theme was "State Missions to the Front." A good brother came to him at the close and said, "Put four meetings on foot and send the bills to me." In the evangelistic section we had two men, I. N. McCash and Geo. F. Hall. Both spoke in the Odeon Hall. The subjects in order were as follows: "The Place of an Evangelist in Building a Church" and "The Pastor Evangelist." This was spoken of as the "livest and warmest" part of the whole convention.

Of the trustees and faculty not mentioned above there were present Prof. Charles F Kinney, J. B. Burton, R. B. Jameson, D. R. Ewing, I. H. Shaver and W. W. Williams.

OUR UNIVERSITY BANQUET.

There were six college banquets: Bethany, Eureka, Butler, Kentucky and Hiram. With ours four were held in the Emery Hotel. Gov. Drake was compelled to leave the city before Wednesday evening and therefore N. G. Brown, of Ottumwa, was chosen toast master. C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., and F. L. Moffett, of Centerville, Ia., spoke on "The Fidelity of Drake University to the Disciples of Christ." L. W. Morgan, of England, and A. W. Taylor, of Cincinnati, discussed "College Men and College Control." O. W. Lawrence, of Maryville, Mo., and G. A. Campbell, Chicago, editor of the Christian Oracle, created much enthusiasm on "One Hundred Thousand Dollars by the Alumni for Drake University in 1900." Sixty three guests sat down to the tables. W. J. Ford, of Hiram, O., an invited guest, is a liberal donor to our educational institutions and a careful student of college problems. He carries a watch given him by James A. Garfield. This fine gold timepiece, which has been through so many battles and scenes more peaceful, was duly admired by all present.

The invited guests, not students of the university, were W. W. Williams, R. B. Jameson, A. J. Marshall, of St. Louis, George B. Peake and wife, T. F. Odenweller, I. N. McCash and Mrs. B. W. Johnson.

The graduates of Oskaloosa College were also invited, seven of whom were there: J. R. McIntire, Henry Shadle, of California, A. M. Haggard and wife, M. Hedge and T. W. Grafton and wife.

Des Moines claims the following: B. S. Denny, Joel Brown, field agent for the Benevolent Association, Clark Bower and wife, Florence A. Mills, Arthur C. Vail, J. M. Lowe, pastor in East Des Moines, Keith and Rena Vawter.

Cincinnati claims a trio of our young men: J. K. Hester, of Walnut Hills, Alva W. Taylor, of Norwood, and Jos. A. Pine.

Another trio came from the giant young city of the world, Chicago: A. McKinnon, C. C. Morrison and G. A. Campbell, the editor of the Christian Oracle.

Our Missouri quartette was C. M. Chilton, of St Joseph; O W. Lawrence, of Maryville; Lawrence F. McCray, of Chillicothe; F. C. Aldinger, of St. Louis.

Iowa, outside of Des Moines, furnishes twelve more: Sherman Hill, pastor at Hampton; the pastor at Oskaloosa, A. E Cory; H H. Hastings and Robert Smith, of Stockport; W. D. Ryan, of Lennox; Nelson G. Brown and wife, of Ottumwa; J. E. Denton, of Onawa; Percy Leech and Mrs Myrtle Bartholomew, of Moulton, and Carl C. Davis and wife, of Davenport.

Indiana gave us Frank A. Morgan; Atlanta, Ill., gave his brother, Leslie W.; Minneapolis, Minn., gave Ethel M. Burch; Nebraska sent Robert M Dungan; Texas was represented by Harold Baldwin and Bertha C. Mason.

The Eastern states had a strong contingent: D. W. Ohern and Mrs. L. C. Woolery, of Morgantown, W Va.; C. R. Neill, of Rochester, N. Y., and M. E Harlan and wife, of Brooklyn, N. Y

Kansas and Montana sent W. T. Adams, of Chanute, and F F. Grim of Hamilton.

Washington sent B. E. Utz and wife, of Spokane

Other Drake students, not mentioned above, but who were present at the convention, are as follows: W. H Cannon, Mrs J. K Hester, L. F Drash, B. F. Cato, W. C. Thomas, Bro. Craine and wife, D R Dungan and R. T. Mathews, former deans of the Bible College, were at the convention. The latter was in charge of the press committee.

Chancellor W. B. Craig was much missed from the councils in the great gathering. Inquiries on every hand indicated the large place left vacant by our chancellor. Though absent he was elected a member of the educational committee. Pres J. H. Hardin, Pres. Clinton Lockhart, Professors B C. Dewease, J. M Kersey, H Nankirk, Mrs. M A. Forrest, Pres Albert Buxton and Pres E. V Zollars are his fellow workers on this committee.

A Church Bible Class.

We are hearing a great deal about reform in the Sunday-school. For some years the cry has gone forth concerning the primary work. The impression that the place to begin is at the bottom seems to be general. There is a word to be said, however, in favor of making a beginning at the other end, namely, with the adult department. The advantages of this are several-fold. There are no "systems" to be broken there, for no systems are applicable. There need be practically no conversion of teachers to new methods, for there are few teachers. There is little overturning necessary, for there is little to be overturned. Is it not true that the adult department in the average Sunday-school—we say average Sunday-school—is only marked by its absence?

The chief reasons for this condition are two, namely, lack of teachers and lack of suitable material for directing the study of mature people.

If these two difficulties could be met, and attractive, sober, inspiring work provided, an adult department in the Sunday-school would be limited only by the growth of the church itself.

The American Institute of Sacred Literature has been working for several years upon this problem. Its four years' course of study has already furnished material for many adult classes, some in connection with the regular Sunday-school, others in the home department, but perhaps the largest number as church classes under the guidance of the pastor. During the past month mere than one hundred such classes, representing two thousand people, have been organized. In a territory stretching from Maine to California this is a small number, and yet it probably represents a fair proportion of all the adult Bible classes in the country which are attempting dignified, systematic study. Should not pastors, especially in the country churches, be teachers as well as preachers? Perhaps they could better afford the time to be teachers if they had a good course of study with carefully prepared material ready to their hand. We suggest that pastors inform themselves with reference to this four years' course. The Institute is making a special offer of the material for one year free to any minister who will organize a class in his church and recommend the work in his vicinity. The headquarters of the Institute is located in Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill., President Harper, of the University of Chicago, being its principal.

Faith and Reason.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—Dear Sir and Brother: In a lecture by A. Campbell on "Is Moral Philosophy an Inductive Science?" ("Popular Lectures and Addresses," p. 119), in attempting to overthrow the argument of speculative philosopy, i. e., that man is more liable to be deceived by faith than by reason, he uses these words:

Must an infant wait the impulses of instinct or the decision of reason for instruction in what to choose or what to refuse in the nursery or infant school? Or must it depend on its own observation, experience and reason, or upon oral tradition, for light upon food and medicines and poison? Must it experiment with the asp, the adder, the basilisk, the fire, the flood, the innumerable physical dangers around it, or implicitly believe its nurse and walk by faith in her traditions?

Thus he assumes that the infant walks by faith in its nurse or parent, but is this true? Can an infant believe before he can reason and examine and weigh testimony? Infants often cry for things that would be destructive to their lives. The infant accepts whatever may be given to him, neither believing in the wisdom of the giver nor reasoning upon it himself.

Continuing (on p. 120), he says:

There is no salvation to the infant man from natural evils—from ignorance, vice and misery—any more than to the adult sinner from guilt and ruin, but by faith in tradition, oral or written. The voice of nature and that of the gospel speak the same language—he that believeth not shall perish.

I fail to see how the infant man can have "faith in tradition, oral or written," until his intelligence or reasoning powers are sufficiently developed to examine such traditions. An infant is not saved from sin, for it is pure and untainted by sin. Could we, then, truthfully say that faith not being essential to infant salvation, it follows necessarily that the atonement is unnecessary for them, they having never sinned?

After all this it seems to me that the author contradicts himself when he says (p. 120):

Permit me, then, to say in behalf of reason that she assumes to be only a minister to faith, as she is to religion and morality. She examines the testimony and decides upon its pretensions. In this sense intellect and reason are as necessary to faith as they are to moral excellence, for a creature destitute of reason is alike incapable of faith, morality and religion.

Will you please try to unravel this seeming contradiction in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and if I have misinterpreted his language kindly set me aright?

Thanking you for the favor, I remain yours for the Master, F. A. HODGE.

Ebensburg, Pa.

[We think Mr. Campbell was justified in referring to the trustfulness of childhood in its parents and teachers to show that faith or confidence goes before reason or judgment. There is a great deal of traditional knowledge that is handed down from generation to generation and accepted without ever having been put to the test. This is particularly true of childhood. The trust of childhood in their parents is not so much the result of reason and examination of testimony as it is instinctive. Children generally believe until they learn to distrust.

In speaking of the salvation of the infant, Mr. Campbell does not refer to its salvation from sin, but to its salvation from physical peril through its confidence or trust in its parents, nurse or teacher.

When Mr. Campbell speaks of reason as a minister to faith, and of its examination of testimony, etc., he has reference, not to childhood nor to the faith of childhood, but has in mind the relation of the intellect and reason to faith in the case of those intellects which have been developed, and to that faith which is the result of the examination of testimony. In other words, Mr. Campbell has two very distinct things in his mind when he is speaking of the faith of childhood and the faith of the full-grown man. By the former he means that natural trust which a child puts in its parents or its teachers, while by the latter he means a Christian faith, which implies the exercise of the intellect in examining the grounds of Christianity. This, it seems to us, unravels what to our correspondent seems a contradiction in Mr. Campbell's lecture.—EDITOR.]

A Thinker's Reply to "Questions for Thinkers."

QUESTIONS FOR THINKERS.

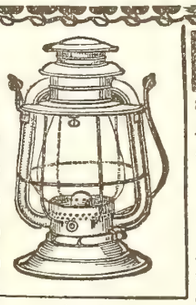
1. Why should not men like W. K. Pendleton, J. W. McGarvey, H. W. Everest and Charles Louis Loos know as much about the Bible as Dr. Briggs and Dr. Harper?
2. If the Old Testament is mutilated, won't the effect on the New be disastrous?
3. When Jesus expounded Moses (Luke 29: 27-44) how much of a basis was there to work on, and how much of the Old Testament had he in mind, when it is said he expounded to them "in all the Scriptures?"
4. In Heb. 3:5 it is said that "Moses was faithful over all his house." How much of a house did Moses have—according to the mutilated Bible? How will fare Stephen's address (Acts 7) and the great chapter on faith and its heroes (Heb 11)?
5. If Daniel didn't write "Daniel," who did?
6. If Abraham was a "myth," what effect will it have upon the statements of the Savior and Paul concerning him?
7. Should a preacher be recognized and fellowshiped among us who calls Abraham a myth? (See Christian Standard of Oct 7.)

THE REPLY OF A THINKER.

1. Why should not Dr. Harper and Dr. Briggs know as much about the Bible as men like W. K. Pendleton, J. W. McGarvey, H. W. Everest and Charles Louis Loos?
2. If the Old Testament is mutilated by J. W. McGarvey by calling in question the canonicity and inspiration of the Song of Songs, will not the effect on the New Testament be disastrous?
3. When Jesus expounded Moses (Matt. 19: 3-12), how much of a Moses was there to work on, and how much of the Old Testament had he in mind when he said Moses misled the people when he gave a man permission to give his wife a "bill of divorcement?"
4. In 2 Tim. 3: 16 it is said: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." How much of a "Scripture" did Paul refer to according to the mutilated Bible of the President of the Bible College of Lexington? How will fare Matthew, Luke and John, when the last verses of the last chapter of Mark are thrown out as spurious?
5. If Moses did not write the account of his own death (Deut. 34), who did?
6. If God did not make the earth in six literal days of twenty-four hours each, what effect will it have upon all the statements of Scripture?
7. Should a preacher be recognized and fellowshiped among us who says the six days of creation were six long periods of time?

BYRON CHASE.

A Wise Verdict.



The subjoined statement is from the November number of Record of Christian Work, edited by W. R Moody. His father, Dwight L. Moody, has made much of our brilliant and magnetic English visitor, both on the Northfield (Mass.) platform and in evangelistic work in this country. The two men have recently spoken from the same pulpits in largely attended religious meetings here in Chicago. Ponder the following paragraph and learn Christian toleration. W. P. KEELER.

Chicago, Oct. 30, 1899.

I ought to say, perhaps, that I occupy a most conservative and "orthodox" position with regard to the Bible. I believe in the verbal and plenary inspiration of the original documents. That through translators and copyists we have lost much I also believe, and that there is room for much scholarly and devout criticism I admit. I hold that to be the true realm of criticism, and when it passes beyond and questions the correctness of the statements I at once feel that it approaches most dangerous ground. This view, however, does not give me the right to enter upon a crusade of Bible defence, nor does it cut me off from fellowship with the men who are occupying an absolutely different position. The crusade is unnecessary and a waste of time, because the Bible is its own defence or it will perish. The separation from men, devout and sincere, would be to me so contrary to the spirit of Christ that I could not consent to it.

I have used this as an illustration of my own attitude of mind to all forms of error. I would simply ignore the error and declare the truth, having in my heart a perpetual affection for those who teach in all those cases where they are most evidently sincere.

I am, dear Mr. Moody,
Very sincerely your friend,
G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

Missionary.

C. W. B. M. Day.

Sisters, ours is a glorious task—the interesting of 100,000 women for the Master's work in missions.

We are not worms of the dust. We are glorified by God into "ambassadors for Christ;" we are "coworkers together with him;" we are copartners with Jehovah, and stand upon the very pinnacle of greatness. Ours is no humble work, no mean position! We are not beggars for help, but heralds of privileges! And now how shall we use this, our red-letter day, in our labors in Christ's kingdom?

Of course, we cannot reap any benefit from it if we do not observae it! But by proper effort much good will result. This applies as well to churches where there is no auxiliary as to the church where there is. If, as a pastor, you endorse this work why not preach upon "Women's Work" as well as upon "Home" and "Foreign" days? The collection would help raise the desired amount of money. Sisters in churches where there is no auxiliary, why not make this the glad day of organization? There is no better day for the birth of a baby auxiliary. One sister in almost any church by talking and praying and working between now and December 3rd could see on that day an auxiliary organized with at least five members. Try it; you and God can do wonderful things. The national secretary will furnish all information needed.

Sisters, let the influence of the day be felt. Could a stranger be in your city and remain ignorant of when the Fourth of July came? Would you not tell him of it? Could he not see it, yes, feel it when it comes? Shall not all feel the day in which we prepare to send forth the proclamation of eternal, not national, liberty? If you cannot have an elaborate exercise you can at least have zeal. Be sure that by that day every woman in the church has been invited to enroll her name in the auxiliary. "They have been asked, no use trying again," you say? How do you know there is no use; has God said so? Until God despairs we should persevere.

Expect much; we rarely receive more than we expect. "According to your faith be it unto you." Our expectations will just equal our faith and desire, and our reward will be equal to our expectations plus God's blessing, and his blessings are in direct ratio to our efforts. Then shall we not put much into this day—much of anticipated joy, much of intense desire, much of heart-longing and much honest effort? If we have thus planted and watered God will give the increase.

Our harvest will be enlarged membership and increased treasury. Our year's work will be triumphant with "100,000 reported women, $130,000" and a mighty power of interest in world-wide missions!

May "the love of Christ constrain us" even to the giving of time, prayers and efforts for the successful observing of C. W. B. M. Day.

The Spiritual Influence of C. W. B. M. Day.

The spiritual influence of the day is of greater value than the material, for several reasons.

1 Bringing the facts of our work before the church membership increases the number of persons interested. Even Christians are not interested in that of which they know nothing. This is such a busy world that the business man, the school teacher, the clerk, cannot find time to study every department of church work. Hence the necessity for facts concerning our work, clearly told on the only day in the year when we appear before the church. It is impossible to forget that which interests us keenly. The more we hear of missions from the pulpit the more we are interested nolens volens.

2. "Nothing succeeds like success." Those who learn of the growth of the work, the increase of funds and the success attending the missionaries' labor, as they are given from the pulpit on C. B. M. Day, are very apt to think that work so successful is worth paying attention to, hence many become interested because of the success of the work.

3. No Christian work can have permanent growth except as the Christ is elevated. The C. W. B. M. Day that fails to elevate the Master will not leave a spiritual impression. When the story of our growth is before the church the "yet not I but Christ that dwelleth in me" may be so uplifted that our souls shall "mount up with wings as eagles," we may "run and not be weary," we may "walk and not faint." Two little boys hearing a returned missionary tell a story of a certain mission in China, expressed themselves as follows: Said the older, "Johnny, did you hear her tell the story of those little chaps over in China? Now, if they can learn of Jesus in that way, and Miss M—— can tell it in that way, we ought to be pretty good fellows; don't you think so?" Johnny, thus appealed to, said: "What struck you, anyway?" Freddy replied with great solemnity: "I tell you, when you hear a story like that, it makes you feel mighty mean not to aim for something higher than you've ever seen before. I'll never let those Chinese boys get ahead of me in giving," and, lowering his voice, he musingly said: "I wonder if Jesus don't want little boys to serve him, wherever they live?" When the services of our national day make us ask ourselves this question, and when we can answer it satisfactorily to Him, then we shall have the spiritual meaning of the day. X.

How Make C. W. B. M. Day Effectual in Accomplishing Our Aim for 1900.

I am glad our standard for 1900 has been set higher than was reached in our silver anniversary year. We ought never to be satisfied with our past attainments, since God has so wonderfully blessed us and shown us our great strength as at our recent Jubilee Convention.

The desire for growth is implanted in the heart of every true follower of Christ. Individual growth in our auxiliary members ought to mean a lengthening of the cords and a strengthening of the stakes of our C. W. B. M.—manifested in a constantly increasing membership and enlarged contributions.

Through all the C. W. B. M. sessions of the Jubilee Convention one minor note was distinctly heard above those of rejoicing—it was one of regret that our membership had not increased in proportion to our receipts. Dear sisters, in the year before us shall we not more truly make our hopes, our prayers and our aims one, and in the strength of our risen Lord go forward to the more perfect accomplishment of our aim—"100,000 women and $130,000 in 1900?"

But one day during the year is alloted us for a public presentation of our work. That day is at hand—let us make the most of it. The time is short for preparation if you have not already given it your earnest thought and prayer. Much depends upon thorough preparation if we would accomplish the desired results—a large increase in membership and a large collection for the general fund. Those who are able to do so will, of course, secure an able speaker to present the work. Many more must depend upon local talent for their program—and this is often productive of greater good. In either case, enlist your pastor first. Ask him to preach a missionary sermon in the morning emphasizing the thought of "helping those women;" if need be, the points he should make along that line. A committee on new members should be appointed (in case you have none) to canvass the congregation for possible members. Let this committee consist of your most enthusiastic, intelligent and winsome members. Have a finance committee several days—or better, weeks—in advance, freely distribute the special envelopes sent out by the C. W. B. M. for that day. This committee ought also to secure just as many life and annual memberships as possible in advance of C. W. B. M. Day.

The Tidings committee should be busy securing subscriptions to the Tidings and Junior Builders.

If a miscellaneous program is to be given in the evening, make each number short, emphasizing the various phases of our work, and by speakers who can be heard by every one present. Do not forget the Juniors in making up your program. Have them furnish one song and one brief exercise if possible. At the close of the program, call for new members, the committee reading the names already secured and those secured by passing through the audience at the time. Have the finance commitee receive the envelopes previously given out, and general collection from the audience

Having thus made thorough preparation, and trusting in our Lord Jesus Christ for strength to carry out our plans, we cannont fail to accomplish great things toward our aim for 1900.

Our Silver Jubilee.

This is the Silver Jubilee Year of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. The society was organized in 1875. At that time we had no missions in foreign lands During the past twenty-four years strong missions have been planted in India, Japan, China, Turkey, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, England, Africa and Cuba; and the Philippine Islands will be entered at no distant day. We now have an army of missionaries numbering 229, scattered over the whole world-field. Churches, Sunday schools, day schools, hospitals, dispensaries, orphanages, training schools and industrial schools have been successfully established. A large number of native preachers, teachers, evangelists and other helpers have been carved out of the hard rock of heathenism and trained in efficient service as messengers of light and peace to their own peoples. Scores of homes, chapels, hospitals, etc., have been erected at a cost of nearly $300,000. In only twenty-four years more than one-third of the churches and Sunday-schools at home have been enlisted in the great enterprise of world wide missions. They have given $1,292,587.69 for Foreign Missions in twenty-four years. What wonders God hath wrought!

THE SILVER JUBILEE LEAGUE.

The Silver Jubilee League of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society is to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the society. The object is to help secure an unprecedented gain in the receipts. The membership in the Silver Jubilee League is $25, or $1 for each year of the existence of the society. This we ask friends, churches, Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies to give as a special thank-offering to God for the great things that have been accomplished in the past twenty-four years, and to help extend the influence of this work all over the earth. A church or Sunday-school may take a membership for each $25 it pays.

Every member of the Silver Jubilee League will receive, upon the payment of $25, a beautiful diploma or certificate of membership, that may be kept as a souvenir of the Silver Jubilee Year. It will be printed in colors and will be a real work of art.

What we need now is a movement all along the line in this matter. If you will join us in this enterprise at once you will help to insure the raising of the $200,000.

Let us celebrate the closing year of the nineteenth century by an unprecedented gain in our receipts to evangelize the dark places of the earth.

NOTE ESPECIALLY.

1. You can pay the $25 or any part of it now if you so desire.

2. Or you have until September 1, 1900, to make full payment.

3. The $25 may be credited to your church, or Sunday-school, or Endeavor Society, if you choose, but the certificate of membership in the Silver Jubilee League will be issued in your own name.

4. The $25 may be credited on a life membership or a life directorship in the Foreign Society.

5. Remember, we now have 229 missionaries in foreign lands.

6. Every member of the Silver Jubilee League will receive the Missionary Intelligencer for five years free of charge.

We hope to hear from hundreds at once. Remember the new watchword: $200,000 for Foreign Missions this, the Silver Jubilee Year.

Fraternally yours, A. McLEAN,

Concerning the B. N. E. E. Work.

During the past week the Southern Christian Institute has received two valuable gifts. A friend of this work sent one hundred choice books, all new; and Bro Starn, of Bryan, Ohio, has sent his Encyclopedia Britannica. These are valuable and much-prized additions to the library at the S. C. I.

J B. Lehman writes that the school is almost filled with boarding students; students coming from abroad.

During the past week the eighteenth annual report of Booker T. Washington, principal of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, has come to my desk. I take pleasure in quoting some extracts therefrom, and the more so because I most heartily endorse what he says in advocacy of industrial training for the negro and because the Board of N. E. E. is endeavoring to carry out in its work these very sentiments. I believe that in the threefold edution of the negro lies the solution of the problem—in the training of head and heart and hand.

"One of the main problems as regards the educatiation of the negro is how to have him use his education to the best advantage after he has secured it. In saying this I do not want to be understood as saying that the problem of simple ignorance among the masses has been settled in the South, for this is far from true; the amount of ignorance still prevailing among the negroes, especially in the rural districts, is very large and serious. But I repeat, we must go farther if we would accomplish the greatest good and get the greatest returns in public good for the money spent, than merely to put academic education into the negro's head with the idea that this will settle everything.

THE NEGRO'S PRESENT CONDITION.

In his present condition it is important, in seeking after what he terms the ideal, that he does not neglect to prepare himself to take advantage of the opportunities that are right about his door. If he lets these opportunities slip I fear they will never be his again. In saying this I mean always that the negro should have the most thorough mental and religious training for without it no race can succeed. Because of his past history and environment and present condition it is important that he be carefully guided for years to come in the proper use of his education. Much valuable time has been lost and money spent in vain because too many have not been educated with the idea of fitting them to do well things that they could get to do. Because of the lack of proper direction of the negro's education some good friends of his, North and South, have not taken that interest in it that they otherwise would have taken. In too many cases where mere literary education alone has been given the negro youth it has resulted in an exaggerated estimate of his importance in the world and an increase of wants which his education has not fitted him to supply.

But in discussiog this subject one is often met with the question, Should not the negro be encouraged to prepare himself for any station in life that any other race fills? I would say yes, but the surest way for the negro to reach the highest positions is to fill well at the present time what is termed by the world the more humble positions. This will give him a foundation upon which to stand while securing what is called the more exalted positions. The negro has the right to study law, but in the end we shall succeed soonest in producing a number of successful lawyers by preparing first a large number of intelligent, thrifty farmers, mechanics and housekeepers to support the lawyers. The want of proper direction to the use of the negro's education results in tempting too many to live mainly by their wits, without producing anything of real value to the world, or to live merely by politics. The negro has the right to enter politics, but I believe that his surest road to political preferment that will mean anything is to make himself of such supreme service to the community in which he lives that political honors will in time be conferred upon him.

I repeat that in the present condition of the negro mere book education alone tends to place the negro, in too many cases, in a weak position. For example, I have seen a negro girl taught by her mother to assist her in doing laundry work at home. The same girl has later been graduated from the public schools or some high school, where she was not only taught how to perfect herself in laundry work, but was educated out of sympathy with it, so that when she finished her education she was not prepared to do laundry work, and could find nothing else to do that was in keeping with the cost and character of her education, and we must not be surprised that she did not fulfill expectations. What should have been done in the case of the individual referred to was to have given, along with her academic education, thorough training in the latest and best methods of laundrying, so that she would have been able to put so much intelligence and dignity into it that she could have lifted it above drudgery and performed more work with less labor. In this way this girl would have been put into a position where her services would have been so much in demand that she could have laid the foundation of a home that would have enabled her offspring to have taken a more responsible station in life.

A SOLUTION OF SOUTHERN CONDITIONS FOUND.

I cannot but believe, and my daily observation and experiences confirm me in it, that as we continue placing men and women of intelligence, religion, modesty, conscience and skill in every community in the South, who will prove by actual results their value to the community, this will constitute the solution for many of our present political and sociological difficulties. It is with this larger and more comprehensive view of helping present conditions and laying the foundation wisely that the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute is training men and women as teachers and industrial leaders.

The property owned by the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute (aside from endowment fund) is valued at about $300,000 with no mortgage, and consists mainly of 2,267 acres of land, 42 buildings, counting large and small, live stock, apparatus, etc. The school still pursues its original plan of having its buildings put up by the students, themselves.

The total cash receipts for the year, for the Tuskegee Institute were, $104 636 50.

The present endowment fund of Tuskegee Institute is $68,255.39 They want to increase it soon to at least $500,000

Notes and News.

A Card of Thanks.

DEAR BROTHERS GARRISON, MONSER AND WINDERS:

Allow me to thank you, and through you to thank all the brethren and members of the late state convention held, in Jefferson City, for the kind and loving letter of sympathy sent me by the convention through you.

I was greviously disappointed, For several weeks I thought I was going to be able to attend the convention, but before the time for the meeting my precarious health broke entirely down. So while the dear brethren were happily taking counsel for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God I was sick and suffering.

But your letter did me good. It cheered my weary soul and made me happy in the midst of sufferings to know that I was remembered by so noble a band of brethren whom I dearly love. Dear brethren, I pray God's blessing upon every one of you.

This comes late because for weeks I was unable to write. J. C. REYNOLDS.

Wisconsin News.

Every Sunday-school in the state should observe the Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America. Not too late yet to get the programs. Write for them to B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O. Observe the day, even if you have to have it one or two weeks later than the Sunday before Thanksgiving.

H. F. Barstow held a short meeting, lasting one week, with his home congregation, just to quicken the interest. There were two additions at the next Sunday service. This is a good plan. I wish every pastor in the state would try it.

A. W. Bloom has located at Bloom City as pastor. May there be much fruit.

F. W. Mutchler has changed his residence from Footville to Center, though he remains with both churches as heretofore.

The Wisconsin delegation to the Jubilee Convention was F. N. Calvin, Mrs. E. W. Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. McNeill, of Milwaukee; J. H. Berkey, Miss Mattie J. Monroe, Mrs. J. H. Bridge, of Monroe; Mrs. E. M. Pease, of Richland Center; F. W. Mutchler, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Fisher, of Center. C. G. MCNEILL, State Missionary.

Churches of Kansas, Attention!

Let me call your attention to two important matters: 1st. Lord's day, Nov. 26, is "Kansas Day" for Kansas missions. By the time you read this you will have received a letter stating the amount you are asked to contribute this missionary year. You will also have received printed envelopes and circulars to be distributed to each member of the congregation. If you cannot contribute the amount suggested, drop us a card stating how much you can give. Make this a great day for the work of Christ in Kansas. Many needy fields are calling for aid. Help us to help them. Send your money to A. Rosalea Pendleton, 1221 Clay St., Topeka, Kan.

2nd. The second matter of great importance is that the above-named day is also Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for Home Missions. Forty per cent. of the money thus raised will be returned to us to be used in our state. Now brethren, give the children a chance. If you have not already done so, send to B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, for the exercise for the children and observe some early day as Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. The children will fill your house with eager, expectant listeners, better than the preacher can do it. Send all the money thus raised to Brother Smith at Cincinnati, who will return our part to us.

Let us rally all along the line and maintain the high standing that Kansas now occupies as a great force in our brotherhood. Brethren in the ministry, we look to you for support in bringing this before your people. Do not fail us. Yours for a faithful year's work,

W. S. LOWE, State Supt. of Missions.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The East Side school, Moberly, is going to give special attention to increasing the membership, to enlisting the church members and to bettering present methods of class discipline and teaching. George Elzea, the superintendent, and J. H. Bryan, both first-class Bible-school men, have their hearts set on it.

Montgomery City has felt seriously the effect of going without a minister, especially after one like C. C. Hill goes away. But Edmond Wilkes is holding them a meeting and will likely enthuse the school also and will put in a minister, one too that will revive all departments of the church, and J. W. Jacks is anxious for it.

John Giddens reports that he will put the brethren to work on another new house next week and hopes to report two new ones under way before the close of this month, and is now working to that end.

Elmer Shepard, our evangelist in the southeast district, is now at Hematite and has engagements for more than a month, and if you want his help any time soon, write this office immediately.

T. A. Hedges, La Grange, reports his work in Northeast Missouri starting off well, that his institutes are well attended and that he has a month's dates made, so that I warn you once more, write him immediately or take what is left later on without one word of complaint.

Milton Wiley is one of the steadfast friends of this work and did not hesitate to inconvenience himself by taking your servant to Concord, in Saline, where the brethren are doing their uttermost to keep the Christ before the people. So many aliens are moving in that the effort comes heavy upon them, but the Davidsons, the Browns and such men are true to God, and so have no idea of giving up the ship. Their Bible-school is evergreen and ought to shame some that I call to mind. I love to be with and help such as these, and in return they never fail to help us. Bro. Russell is on his third year and is doing good work for the people of God.

Do not forget the fourth Sunday in November is the day for "Girls' and Boys' Rally for America," and every mission Bible-school ought to observe the day. It will do good in so many ways, but will especially arouse the children and older ones to do worthily for Home Missions. Write B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, for your concert exercises. Give the entire day to the rally and the children.

I am asked if we will count the above day as the Bible-school Rally Day required of all schools aiming to be banner schools, and I answer yes; you can on that day keep Children's Day, hold the rally, increase the school membership and increase the number of church members in the Bible-school, thus meeting four of the banner requirements. Now, will you do so?

Keytesville is another one of the schools having great difficulty in prosecuting its work as those interested desire. Those supporting the church, meeting its obligations to Church Extension, the ministry, our missions and the poor can be counted on one hand. So I took a delight in helping them, being disappointed only in the sickness of my friend, Ben. H. Smith, the superintendent. But by kindness in hospitality was where I could confer with him often, and in the home of Brother Knappenberger it was the same, for they love the kingdom of God.

M. H. Wood will put in November among some very needy schools in his district, hoping to so enthuse them that they will not go in winter quarters as in the past.

Let every school remember that the fir point in being a banner school is evergreer and to close for the winter cuts you out on th banner, and its cuts off your interest, it cuts o the lesson connection and does harm a around.

Our expenses with the five men are $300 pe month and our sources of supply are the Mis souri schools. Many promised at Plattsbur to pay quarterly, and we are now nearing th third and you have not paid yet. Then, toc you will soon have the bad weather to cut o your offering, so that now is the time. Do nc wait till spring, for then you will have to many collections on hand. Clear the deck right now. H. F. DAVIS.

She Disliked to Look in a Mirror

Mrs. L. Sanheitel, Manistique, Mich., wa troubled for twelve years with skin eruption which covered her entire face and caused he much worry and discomfort. How many ar there not who are similarly disfigured? Sh says: "Whenever I passed a mirror and look ed into it and saw the reflection of my face sallow and full of pimples and eruptions, I los all pleasure in life. I hated to go down tow and do my shopping and even felt embarrasse when at church. It seemed to be gettin worse all the time. I used a couple of bottle of your Blood Vitalizer and all the pimples an eruptions disappeared. I had frequently see articles in the papers about the remedy, but thought it would turn out no better than othe medicines I had used. I had spent a grea deal of money on such remedies I sha always keep the Blood Vitalizer in the house.'

Many have been happily disappointed in Dr Peter's Blood Vitalizer. It cures skin disease by striking at the root of the evil—the impurit of the blood. Not a drug store medicine Special agents supply it. Address Dr. Pete Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago Ill.

urch Dedication at Phœnix, Ariz.

ord's day, Oct. 29, 1899, was a red letter in the history of the Church of Christ in enix, Ariz. On that day this beautiful se of worship was formally set apart to the vice of the Lord. This congregation had n in sore need of a better house of worship many years. Under the effective ministry L. O. Ferguson this desirable end has at t been attained, and in consequence our urch there is full of joy and hope. The new fice is in a most desirable location, on a ice corner in one of the best sections of that wing city. It is built of brick with a stone ndation and stone trimmings, is of Gothic le of architecture, and the corner is sur-unted by a handsome steeple of appropriate ign. The auditorium is 30x36 feet, with the pit in the end, with a chair loft on one side l an open baptistery on the other side. nnected with the baptistery are the pastor's dy and parlors which will be used for robing oms. The lecture room, which is 40x25 feet, separated from the auditorium by heavy tains. The auditorium will seat comfort-y 250 persons, while the entire building en thrown together will accommodate an dience of 500 people. It is finished in white e and plastered. The windows are of propriate design. It is a fine property and is redit to our cause in that little city.

By the generosity of the First Church of Los geles I was permitted to be present upon occasion of this formal dedication of the lding. The day was beautiful and the ered edifice was thronged with people who ne to attend the opening service. The song vice was good and I preached upon "The urch as a Spiritual Temple." Three persons sponded to my invitation and took member-p with the church. I then made a call for dges and money to assist in liquidating the ebtedness against the building The sponse was ready and generous, and in a few nutes it was reported that more than $1 400 d been given. I have never seen more nerous giving upon the part of the people e cost of the property was about $7,500. indebtedness of over $2,000 remains against I think this will be easily paid as the urch grows in strength and influence.

The church in Phœnix numbers about 200 rsons and embraces within its fold some of e choicest of Christians. Its faithful, tire-s women must be mentioned in honor. But their fidelity to the church this church ifice would never have existed. Bro L O. guson is their faithful pastor and has labor self-sacrificingly for the success of that rk. He is a man of choice spirit, whom to w is to love. His people are devoted to n. He is a man of fine preaching ability, d but for his delicate health he would be cupying one of our strongest pulpits.

Phœnix is the capital of the territory of izona. It is a thriving, progressive city of out 15,000 people, is located near the center the territory and is its largest city. It is rrounded by a beautiful and fertile valley hich is made possible by a stream of water own as Salt River. As far as the waters of is stream will reach the valley is fresh, rtile and beautiful. Beyond this limit is the sert—black, barren, desolate. No Western ty is so perfectly typical. Side by side may seen the miner, the Mexican, the Indian, e cowboy, the ordinary citizen and the illionaire. It is a great field for missionary rk. I need not say how much we regretted not being able to attend the Jubilee. We were glad to have done something to aid the various enterprises represented at Cincinnati. Our little church here is gaining ground slowly.

Son James, passing through, told us of the great convention to a large audience on prayer-meeting night. Some heard who never before heard a minister of the Christian Church.

Our so called state fair closed last Saturday. The association rented the saloon privilege on the ground to a negro at $80 per day for six days The saloons and gambling houses had a rich harvest, and all kinds of gambling devices were licensed to operate, and they plied their trades to the sorrow of the ignorant negro and silly country people.

Dallas-like, great efforts were made to get the politician to draw a crowd. I was urged to go out to hear Senator Jas K. Jones (who never came), but I replied no; nor would I go to hear McKinley and Bryan both.

Not long since, by courtesy of a Catholic whom wife and I had known for 35 years, we heard a lecture from a distinguished Catholic priest, on the adaptation of the Catholic Church to our country's welfare. He claimed that the Catholic Church could not be dominated by the people, like Protestant Churches If a Protestant preacher protested against divorce or drunkenness or gambling he might lose caste with his congregation and have to leave his field of labor. I was wondering if the eloquent "Father" had read about the issue between Bishop Jansen and the Irish Catholics, of St. Patricks Church, in East St. Louis? Saul in returning from Amelek said, "I feared the people and obeyed their voice." "Father" Cluse, the German, who was rejected by the Irish people, ought to reply to the lecture and confess that he feared the people, who would have stoned him had he tried to enter pulpit or residence. The Catholics are quite a number here, especially among the railroad people.

Pine Bluff is now a city of $20,000. The Cotton Belt Road on last pay day demanded $70 000 with which to pay its Pine Bluff employees. Besides, we have the Iron Mountain Road and several other corporations with us, some of which employ from one hundred to two hundred men.

We have, I suspect, the most lively Y. M. C. A. Assuciation, with the best supplied reading room in the state.

One would hardly believe the ignorance and prejudice here against "the Campbellites," many not even knowing that the name is offensive to us.

At nearly every evening service I have hearers to whom the plea we make is new. I find our Jubilee chapter was much read, and simply as an advertisement it was worth much to us.

We have some 14 members there now and others ready to embrace the truth as soon as the work promises to become permanent. KENTUCKY.

On last Friday evening I closed a meeting of 13 days at Greenwood, Hickman Co. My brother, C. E. Moore, gives one-half his time to this church and the other half to the church at Clinton, county seat of Hickman, residing at the latter place. Our meeting was one of unusual interest, and should have continued a week or 10 days longer, but unfortunately a limit had been set in advance, and we were forced to close, much to our regret. This protracted meeting was a real "revival;" the church was greatly strengthened spiritually, a deep interest pervaded the entire community, and 31 were added to the church membership. Nearly two-thirds of this number were males; this feature of the meeting would be worthy of note at any time, but is especially so at this time when political excitement is at white heat in Kentucky. The men have not yet abandoned the church, as infidels would have us believe, nor are they going to do so. C. E. Moore is greatly beloved by the people both at Greenwood and at Clinton, and their affection is fully reciprocated by their pastor. This is as it should be, and accounts for the splendid work being done at these places. My visit among these good people was one of great delight and long to be remembered.—SHERMAN B. MOORE, St. Louis, Mo.

KANSAS.

Chanute, Nov. 10.—Will begin a meeting with home forces at Yates Center, Sunday, Nov. 19 May hold one here later. Have had several invitations this fall to hold meetings. Have influenced two young men to go to Drake University to fit themselves for the ministry, and another, a member of the Methodist Church, is waiting my return to Yates Center to have a talk with me.—W. T. ADAMS.

Le Roy, Nov. 9.—Commenced meetings with the Le Roy Church Oct 30, assisted by Bro. J. Hopkins. The interest is deep and points to a great ingathering and spiritual harvest.—JOHN H COLLINS, pastor.

Columbus, Nov 6.—Three additions yesterday and three the Sunday before, making 34 since we came six months ago; all at regular service.—M. MCFARLAND, pastor.

Wayne, Nov. 8.—We began a meeting here Oct. 5, and closed Nov. 5. Eld. F. P. Franklin, of Washington, conducted the meeting. Fourteen were added to the church; seven by letter and statement and seven by baptism. The church has been without a preacher for a year. We reorganized and the church expects to secure the services of a preacher for half the time.—WALTON H. BROCKMAN.

Paola, Nov. 7.—Nov. 5th we began our second year's work with the church here. Hitherto the Lord hath blessed us, and, like Paul, we thank God and take courage. There have been added to the church, during the year, at regular services, 33 members; 13 confessions.—PERRY MC. MCPHERSON.

Drakeville, Nov. 6.—We have just closed four weeks' meeting at this place. D. W. Hastings has preached for this church almost eight years and held six protracted meetings for us. At his request, Bro. Trickett, of Bloomfield, was called to assist in this meeting meeting. He remained three weeks, doing some fine preaching. Bro. Hastings continued the meeting one week after Bro. Trickett left. In all 24 were added to the church.—MAUD MCNEFF.

KENTUCKY.

Georgetown, Nov. 7.—Updyke-Dorris-Millard meeting has reached the 188 mark. The meeting was never aroused as it is now. Every business house in the city closes for the services. An excursion came over from Frankford last week. We continue another week hoping for good results.—C. E. MILLARD singing evangelist.

Stevensport, Nov. 2.—I closed my work at Hamilton and Corvallis, Mont., the first Lord's day in October. I was laboring with these churches and preaching occasionally in other parts of the valley for almost two years. In that time we had 37 accessions by confession and 35 by letter and statement. The church at Hamilton was burdened with a debt of $440 which was entirely liquidated the first of August. The church is encouraged and the outlook is quite hopeful. The brethren of the Bitter Root Valley hope to have two men to take charge of the work there. The second Lord's day in October I preached at Glenwood, Ia., my former field of labor. The day was enjoyed very much in greeting old friends once more. They were without a preacher but I think they will have a good man soon. After attending the Jubilee Convention I came here in company with Bro. Jas. H. Cowan, of Montana, to assist the brethren at this place. They had commenced to build, but they were compelled to stop work with the house partly completed, Bro. Cowan has given strong financial aid and the house will be completed and dedicated a week from Sunday. I have been preaching for the past week and half with good interest. Will continue indefinitely. I expect to go from here to Chicago to enter the university.—FRED'K F GRIM.

Sad news to-day, for home and church and state,
Is scattered far and wide upon the earth;
But for high heaven a festal hour hath come,
Grand welcome to a soul of sterling worth.

Why is it that the best of life and joy,
And all held dearest here below,
Must pass away, and with the passing,
Roll cruel waves of keenest woe?

Look not to Reason for answer,
Nor lean for strength on Nature's weakening rod;
But by the light of Reason, through the Book,
Look up through all to Nature's God.

And there on pages fair, in promises
Far richer than Golconda's gold,
Read of those heavenly mansions
And of beauties the passing will unfold.

On this side is darkness;
On that side is light;
On this side is power;
On that side is might.

I.

Pause here, oh thoughtless reader!
As of this lofty character
We take a distant view;
And now, amid effulgent beams,
Behold its glories brighten
As we with reverence draw near.

II.

The tears of devoted admirers,
And softer dews of family grief,
Are falling on the lifeless clay
Of him, so lately known and loved
In home and church and nation,
But now forever passed away.

III.

A light, brilliant, mental and spiritual,
That burned in mortal splendor
On earth's altar, fair and bright,
Has been from human view;
And earthly vision obscured
By what we call "death's night."

IV.

But a memory rich and beautiful,
Full of good deeds, pure words,
Rich prayers and "honor bright;"
Born of the Christ, with whom
He ever walked in harmony and love,
Shall scatter "death's dark night."

V.

In the message that he left us
We shall inspiration find for battle
Against the world's wrong,
And when, in doing well
We shall grow weary, thy voice shall cheer us—
"Quit you like men; be strong!"

The Duty Nearest Us.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

"Let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

"How tired I am; and how weary of it all! If I really thought that I should have to spend my life thus, I think I should want to die now."

The last barefooted urchin has disappeared and the tired country schoolteacher dropped wearily into her chair and leaned her head upon the table that served for a desk in this shabby little schoolhouse on Buzzard Creek. She did look pale—this teacher—and she felt very much worse than she looked, for in addition to her physical weariness there was an unrest of the mind—an unfilled, ever-present, ever-increasing longing.

"What's the use of living?" she asked herself. "I am shut out from the world as completely as though I were a hermit. The people with whom I am compelled to associate sicken me with their ignorance. The children—well I should like to see these children enlightened and taught something, but what can my efforts amount to? What influence can I have? I am trying to do my best, but it seems a stubborn soil in which I have to plant. I might be of use in my own sphere, I feel that I could be, but what can I do here?"

The clock proclaimed the half hour after four; still the weary teacher did not go. Her eyes closed. She was again meeting her old pupils in Buzzard Creek district after a lapse of years. But there was a difference. How strangely all had changed and how altered were their conditions. A tall, distinguished-looking young man was grasping her hand and saying: "Miss Brown, I have often wished for an opportunity to tell you that I feel indebted to you for a great deal of my success. It was in your school and through your influence that I had the first serious thought; that it first dawned upon me that life was something more than the mere satisfaction of physical needs, something more than eating and sleeping and simply existing." Miss Brown with difficulty recognized in him the careless, indifferent boy who had tried her patience so sorely long ago.

An intelligent young lady, a teacher in a city school, who was on a visit to the old home, was the next to approach her. "I am so glad to meet you again, Miss Brown," she said. "I can never thank you enough for what you did for me in the old days." And Miss Brown recognized in the young lady a harum-scarum girl whom she had once almost despaired of.

Next, a young farmer proudly introduced his wife and two little ones, saying: "I know you cannot help remembering me, Miss Brown. I, too, want to extend to you my sincere thanks. I think I may say without boasting that you will find our country backwoods life not quite so intolerable as when you were with us before. I don't mind telling you that people say I have had very much to do with it. I also want to tell you that your views of life and influence greatly altered my ideas. We do not give to the every-day affairs of life less attention than they ought to have, but we give very much more attention to mental and spiritual cultivation than we once did. Let me introduce you to our minister—something we did not have when you were with us before." And even the minister was soon grasping her hand so cordially that, in spite of the many years that had intervened, she knew that he too had been one of her careless, mischief-loving pupils. And the teachers in the new, comfortable, modern schoolhouse proved to be others of her flock of fifty urchins that had so sorely tried her in the old days when she had felt that her efforts were in vain as she labored among them. How strange it all seemed, but how pleased and gratified and thankful she felt. The clock struck the hour of five and she awoke with a start. The shadows were lengthening. She had been dreaming. But what a dream!

"Let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap if we faint not," repeated she softly. Then after a pause continued: "As we therefore have opportunity let us do good unto all me Perhaps this is my opportunity for doing great deal more good than I have been ab to realize. I know, of course, that I a helping to train future citizens, but b cause results must come so slowly, I ha become discouraged. Ah! there is th trouble. We want to see the crop befo we have barely begun to sow the seed. realize that the influence of the school very great when I am not too discourage to think about it. I really am interest in my pupils. Some of them I consider m own in a certain sense, inasmuch as I ha discovered many good qualities in the that even they themselves did not know o I have discovered ways to interest many i their work that were never interested b fore. I feel that I am forming friendshi that years cannot outgrow. I believe th dream was sent me that I may be encou aged to go on in my humble way, conte to perform the duty nearest me rather tha to be continually longing for an opportuni for doing some great work that may nev come.

"Perhaps Victor Hugo is partly right saying, 'There are no bad plants or b men, but only bad cultivators.' Lord, he me to be a fit cultivator for these childre even though the soil may seem stubborn and give me strength that I may faint no knowing that a reaping will come by-and bye. Perhaps I may live to see the fruit my labors. Perhaps some day some stron man or some noble woman shall take m hand and say to me: 'I owe very much you; your influence in the old days helpe to make me what I am.' Should I the feel that my labors had been for naught?

Miss Brown walked home happier tha she had been for months.

It is neither the smallness nor the large ness of our work that determines its valu but the spirit we bring into it. No matt how commonplace, narrow and monotono our lives may seem to be, we can ma them sublime by compassing them abo with a high and divine purpose.

IT CAN'T BE DONE.

No One Can Remain Well, No Chron Disease Can Be Cured Unless the Stomach is First Made Strong and Vigorous.

This is plain because every organ in the bo depends on the stomach for its nourishmer Nerve, bone, sinew, blood are made from the fo which the stomach converts to our use,

How useless to treat disease with this, that a the other remedy and neglect the most importa of all, the stomach.

The earliest symptoms of indigestion are so risings, bad taste in the mouth, gas in stomach a bowels, palpitation, all gone feeling, faintness, hea aches, constipation; later comes loss of flesh, co sumption, liver and heart troubles, kidney disease nervous prostration, all of which are the indire result of poor nutrition.

Any person suffering from indigestion shou make it a practice to take after each meal one Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, allowing it to dissol in the mouth and thus mingle with the saliva a enter the stomach in the most natural way. Troubles that Do Not Come.

Of the hard and weary loads
'Neath which we bend and fall,
The troubles that do not come
Are the heaviest ones of all.

For grief that cuts like a knife
There's oil of comfort and cure,
And the hand which binds the weight
Brings strength and grace to endure.

But to phantoms of pain and woe
The lips of Pity are dumb,
And there's never oil or wine
For troubles that do not come.

There's a song to lighten the toil,
And a staff for climbing the height,
But never an Alpine stock
For the hills that are out of sight.

There are bitter herbs enough
In the brimming cup of to-day,
Without the sprig of rue
From to-morrow's unknown way.

Then take the meal that is spread,
And go with a song on thy way,
And let not the morrow shade
The sunshine and joy of to-day.

The Boy Kruger.

[As President Kruger is now prominently before the world the following stories clipped by an exchange from a South African paper will be of interest, especially to our junior readers.—EDITOR.]

"While engaged in building the first church at Rustenburg, young Kruger was so delighted at having laid the ridge pole beam that he at once climbed to its highest point, and there stood on his head, to the alarm and scandal of the whole community. He was so clever in the acrobatic line that he could stand on his head in the saddle while the horse galloped along. Once he ran against a horse for a distance of 700 yards and actually beat the horse!

"It is related that one day when taking home a span of oxen, his little sister being with him, a large panther frightened the oxen. The animals bolted and the little girl, flung on the ground by the jostling of the wagon, was at the mercy of the ferocious beast, which stood over her with gleaming eyes. Though unarmed and only seventeen years of age, Kruger instantly engaged in a fierce battle with the panther. Though cruelly clawed, he held his grip on the panther's throat till he strangled the beast to death. He was badly lacerated.

"A truly remarkable feat was his race against certain Kaffir chiefs for prizes of cattle. It was a whole day's run across country. Passing his father's house, having the race well in hand, he went in and took coffee. Mr. Kruger, Sr., nearly flogged the future president for running without a rifle, and for the rest of the race he was handicapped with the weight of a rifle, while the Kaffir chiefs were so weary that they threw away their spears and shields. In the course of the day he came across a lion which he fired at, but the charge did not explode. The lion then sprang close to Kruger's feet and he simply held it by the steady gaze of his eyes until, as by a sudden impulse, it broke into a gallop and disappeared over the next hill. Kruger resumed the race and, in spite of all that had happened, easily carried off the prize.

"'But what Kruger did with lions,' says the narrator of these stories, 'is but a trifle to his achievements with buffaloes. Pursued on horseback by an infuriated bull, he turned in his saddle, raised his rifle, took deliberate aim while his horse was at full gallop, fired, and the buffalo fell, shot straight through the forehead. On the same day Kruger was riding after a buffalo when the animal tripped and fell unwounded into a pool, horse and horseman floundering on top of him. But Kruger was the first to collect his wits. He sprang at the head of the buffalo, seized both its horns with his hands and, while the beast lay on its side, twisted its neck so as to force its nose under water, and thus after a struggle of sheer strength Kruger killed the buffalo by drowning it.'"

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION,

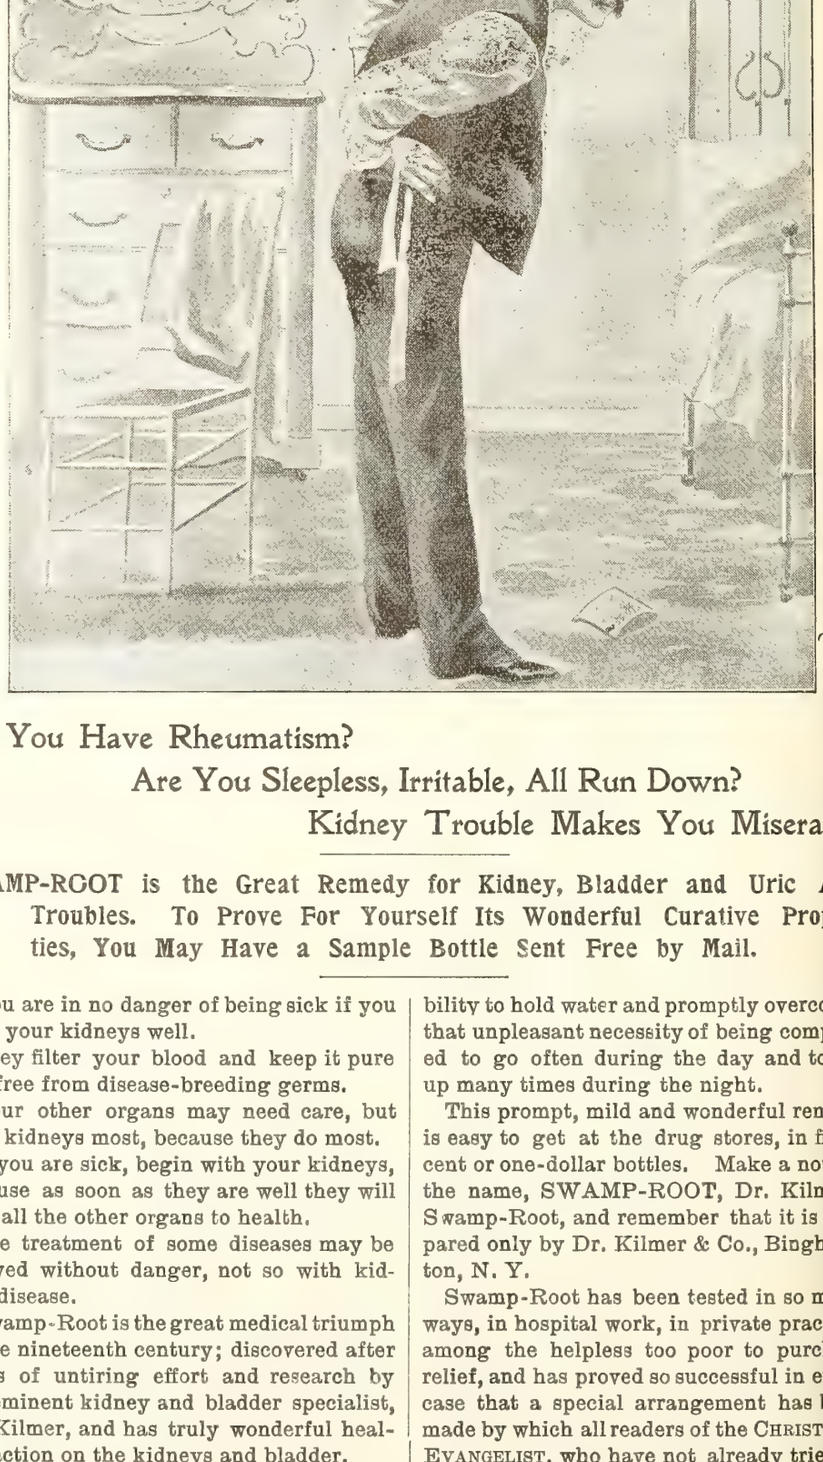
A Choir-boy of Paris.

To become a choir-boy in Paris you must be either one of two things—the pupil of one of the ecclesiastical schools in the city, or a youth of exceptional gifts as to voice and recommendations from the world beyond the shadow of the church.

The scholars of the monks are the more favored ones, and from their ranks are supplied nearly all the vacancies occurring in the many churches of the capital. Besides standing high in his class, the applicant for alter honers must possess a good voice and one capable of very high cultivation.

The salary given to the boy singer is merely nominal, but occasion for generous feeing on the part of an impulsive and highly emotional people makes his earnings considerable, often running up to ten dollars a month for the best singers. The costumes worn by the boys during service are most elaborate and costly, the varying from a pure white through red, violet and blue. Red is much in vogue, as its richness harmonizes splendidly with the golden ornaments of the altar throws and off to advantage the rays of light from the sorrounding candles. Special colors for the cassocks, shoes and head-gear are reserved for paticular churches and certain saints; blue is sacred to the Holy Virgin, and is never worn except in her honer.—Woman's Home Companion.

Central Africa.



The following interesting bit of news from Central Africa is from our missionary, Bro. Faris, to his father in Texas. The letter was published in a recent number of the Christian Courier:

The natives raise Indian corn, bananas, plantains and mandioc. These are the principal articles of vegetable diet, besides palm nuts, which grow wild in great abundance. The principal article of diet is the mandioc, which resembles, when dug up, a sweet potato, though the stalks are somewhat like elder, and grow six and seven feet high. The plant requires ten to eighteen months to mature, and four days prepare after being dug up. It must be to soaked in water four days, then skinned, chopped and mashed up fine, after which it is boiled and eaten. Once this food was very plentiful, but now it is very scarce, owing to the fact that many of the people have been killed in wars with the state, and also to the fact that large numbers of people are congregated on the stations, who must be fed by those left. For instance, we have on the station be tween fifty and sixty people. The traders have about fifteen each, and the state some 1,850 people. This means some 2,100 people who must be fed, and of course it is a problem. The state compels each village to furnish so much food as a tax. They are paid what was once market price, but as the supply and demand are now reversed, the real price has advanced 1,000 per cent., while the official price is unchanged. We get 200 rations a week, for which we pay $2—a cent each. This is sold to our men at the same price, but sometimes they sell their rations to others, and then they get 10 rods, 10 cents each, thus making a regular war time profit.

To Clean Straw Hats.

A nice straw or leghorn hat may be cleaned at home and made to look like new. Fill a pail half full of warm suds—tablespoonful of Gold Dust Washing Powder will make the right kind of suds and whiten the straw Immerse the straw, moving it up and down until every fiber is wet, then lift it from the water, lay it upon a board or table and brush it with a stiff brush thoroughly. After all the soil is removed, rinse in clean warm water; let it drip for a few moments, then iron it with a thin cloth between; press the crown over a bowl or pail upside down, ironing on the wrong side to make it stiffer.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Red Box Clew—VII.

The very sweetest way to enjoy oneself is to make somebody else happy. Vega had proved this that morning in humoring Frank at the brook. When she was a very little girl she had thought it great fun to play in the water, but for a long time she had not thought anything fun. And when she went wading to accommodate her new friend, she had been surprised to get as much enjoyment out of it as Frank. And yet, though this truth has been again and again demonstrated, that the best happiness arises from pleasing others, it is one of the easiest forgotten. After dinner Vega did not think of asking Frank what she would like to do. Had she done so, Frank would have answered, "Play in the brook," because she felt that she could not get enough of it. But instead of that, Vega told her that she wanted to go up on that curious porch that formed the third story of the tower. Mrs. Clarmont overheard the words and looked uneasy. She took Vega's slate and wrote, "My darling, you must not climb out on the outside of the wall!" Vega looked sulkly and deigned no reply. Mrs. Clarmont turned to Frank.

"Fanny," she said, "I am sorry you put this notion into Vega's head."

"But, Mrs. Clarmont—"

"There, there! Mercy, child, where have you been raised, that you interrupt older people? I was about to tell you that Vega is very venturesome. I am afraid she will climb over the wall. I caught her at it once. Now if she does, you must come straight here and tell me!"

"I am sure," said Frank, "that after your telling her not to, she wouldn't."

"I suppose," said Mrs. Clarmont severely, "that you think you already understand my children better than I do! You must promise me to come straight and tell."

Frank was in a very unpleasant position. She hesitated, trying to think of some way to excuse herself from going up with Vega. Vega became extremely impatient at this delay, and frowned at everybody. "Now Fanny," said Mrs. Clarmont sternly, "you are hired to obey my orders, and just as soon as you disregard one of them, just that soon you can go back to where you came from—wherever that is! Will you promise, or will you not?" So Frank promised. When she and Vega had departed, Clara laughed.

"Ma, how could you force that child to tell a story? You know she don't intend to keep that promise! Why, Vega would scratch her eyes out if Frank told on her!"

"I believe she will keep her promise," said Ronald.

"Oh, you do! And what makes you think so?"

"Way she looked," said Ronald briefly. Clara tossed her head. Mrs. Clarmont remarked, "The way she looks! She looks shy and dull and impertinent to me. After awhile, Ronald, I want you to go out in the yard and see if Vega is clinging to that outside wall."

"Oh, Clara, you go," said Ronald, reaching for a book in which he was greatly interested.

"Shan't; go yourself; ma told you to?" Thus Clara.

The two girls reached the third story of the brick tower, which consisted simply of a roof supported on graceful pillars. Doors opened on it from the main building. There were rocking chairs and divans placed carelessly about. Frank went to the wall that rose three feet above the floor and circled about. She could see the pasture, and the very dam that had been built with so much pains that morning. "Wasn't the water cold when we first stepped in!" she wrote. Vega nodded unsympathetically; she was tired of the brook. "Wouldn't it be fun," Frank wrote, "if we could call that wide flat cloud down here, and both of us get on it and sail and sail 'way out into the sky?"

"It wouldn't hold us up," said Vega in her harsh voice.

"No, but supposing it would. And we could make it go anywhere just by wishing. And you could say to it 'New York' and we would be there, looking down on the housetops."

"What would be the good of that?" said Vega.

"Oh, it would be a good way to study geography," Frank wrote. "And we would make it go every place where they needed rain and we would send rain down on the dry places."

"Wouldn't we get wet?"

"Oh, we would be water-nymphs."

"Well," returned Vega, "don't they get wet?"

"Oh, they like it. You see they live in the water just like you and I live in the air. They breathe water. They don't have any clothes, either, to be getting saggy, nor shoes to be taking off."

"I don't think that's proper," said Vega.

"Oh, yes it is, for water-nymphs."

"I tell you what I think would be fun," Vega announced. "That would be to make our cloud curl up all about the sun with us on the inside. Then we could have the light all to ourselves, and the whole world would be in darkness, and they would have to live by gaslight and electric light?"

"I don't think that would be nice," Frank wrote emphatically.

"Very well; you needn't go along. But that's what I would do. Then you'd be out in the dark, too! And how would you like that?"

"But you wouldn't enjoy having all the light by yourself," wrote Frank. "Because you'd think about the rest of the world, the dear little babies, and the boys and girls that used to enjoy the sun so much, and the dear papas and mammas."

"I wouldn't think of 'em at all," retorted Vega, "and if I did, I'd just laugh and enjoy the light all the more. That's the way rich people do. Ma's rich. She just makes all she can and piles it up, and I guess she don't think of the 'dear little babies' as you call 'em (I think babies are horrid), and the rest of the world who are poor, yes, and lots starving to death. But I don't care. Neither does ma."

To this Frank made no answer. Suddenly Vega sprang up exclaiming in a loud voice, "Oh, I'll show you something that is fun. I'm going to climb over this wall and stand on the tip end without holding. You look!" Frank shook her head vehemently, but Vega only laughed. Then the other seized the slate and wrote, "I promised Mrs. Clarmont to tell, if yo do!" At first Vega would not even stop to read this, because she knew it wouid be some objection. But as she perched on the edge of the wall, she condescended to obey Frank's gesture's of entreaty. "Very well, tattletale," she said scornfully. "Only I will never speak to you again as long as I live!" With this she stepped down upon the outside ledge, and stood with her hands high in the air, many feet above the gravel path. Frank hurried down the two flights of stairs to Mrs. Clarmont. That lady never hesitated to oppose Vega when it was a question of her health or safety. On moral questions the deaf girl was left free as air, but physically she was curbed. On this occasion the alarmed mother dragged her into the main building, and locked the doors that opened upon the porch. She left Vega fairly dancing with rage at being thwarted, and furious at Frank for informing. Frank did not see her till late that evening. Then she went up to her to effect a reconciliation; but scarcely had she taken up the slate when Vega jerked it away, and broke it into several pieces against the front step where she was sitting. "Vega is high-spirited," said her mother.

"Fanny'll be no use now, for a week," said Clara. "It takes that long for Vega to come out of one of her tantrums."

"It's very unfortunate that you have made her dislike you the first day," said Mrs. Clarmont.

"Well, ma," said Ronald, "that wasn't Bob's fault, you know."

"I am not discussing faults," said the lady severely. "But if this hadn't happened, we could tell better if Frank will do. As it is, Frank, you can put in your time helping Mrs. Dew till Vega gets friendly again. You may think you were not hired to do menial work. I don't know what fancies are in your head. But always remember, if you don't like our ways, or your work, that you can leave at any time." There was very little comfort in Mrs. Clarmont. Fanny hunted up Mrs. Dew and told her the news.

"I am selfish enough to be glad to have you with me," said the housekeeper. "Bless your bright face, my attic bedroom hasn't been the same place since you came! Just seeing your little shoes and your little dresses up there, puts paper on the walls and brussels carpet on the floor!"

"I think you must have had a little girl of your own once," said Frank timidly. Mrs. Dew put her arms about the girl and bent down till her face was hidden.

Christian Endeavor

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 26.

OUR RETURN FOR THE LORD'S BENEFITS.

(Ps. 116:12-19.)

(A Thanksgiving Meeting.)

Some of us take all our benefits for granted and feel under no particular obligation for them. We feel that our relation to him that bestows them is so distant and remote that there can be no real reason for gratitude. We take things as they come. When it is sorrow or sickness, then we are miserable; when it is health, peace, joy, we are simply oblivious of any personal agency benefiting us. But this cannot be the attitude of one who is deeply conscious of the presence of God in human affairs. It is no mere childish impulse that leads Christian Endeavorers to sing:

"Count your blessings,
Name them one by one;
Count your blessings,
Tell what God hath done."

It is the truest of Christian philosophy and devotion to trace the benefits of our lives directly to the hand of God. This acknowledgment of his help for us is, then, the first return we can make.

It takes as much grace sometimes to receive a benefit as to bestow one. There are some people so afraid of being under obligations to some one that they are never able gracefully to accept a benefit. There are some, doubtless, who would feel it a galling thing if they had to acknowledge obligation even to God. God keep us, then, from "ingratitude more strong than traitors' arms."

Naturally gratitude leads to service in return. Whom one loves, he serves. Martha's devotion in serving the Lord she loved is beautiful after all. The desire of the healed demoniac to follow Jesus and serve him forever was a beautiful impulse.

Such service leads also to sacrifice, the giving up of what is valuable. The first and most natural impulse of the heart that is grateful is to break its alabaster box. What has Jesus done for you? Give him in return some gift that half expresses your gratitude.

Woman owe, a great debt to Christ, for he it was who set her free. If, then, a woman has any alabaster of precious ointment, ought she not to pour it on his head? If she has any speaking ability, any organizing genius, any beauty of voice or face, ought she not to devote these to his service? If she has none of these to give she can at least give that most precious alabaster—herself.

Children owe him a great debt, for it was through him that children first came to their own. And ever since the dear Lord took little children in his arms and blessed them, declaring that his kingdom was of such, has childhood been revered. Ought not children to strew flowers in his path and sing hosannas?

Young men owe him a debt, for he taught the world the lesson of a young man's power. Since the day of Jesus, Timothy and many others have had possibilities open to them. Ought not, then, young people all to pay him return for his blessings?

Old age owes him a debt, for just as the aged Simeon, when he first saw the child Jesus, sang joyfully the Nune Dimittis, so has old age ever been soothed to rest by the sight of that same blessed face and been enabled to sing that self-same song, "Lord now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace!" So all of us, Endeavorers, young men and maidens, old men and all, owe him the gift of our lives in loving sacrifice and service.

The Holy Spirit in Missions.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

Our last article in the missionary department of the Bethany Reading Courses was entitled "The Biblical Basis of Missions." We think it profitable to dwell also upon the study of the Holy Spirit in missions.

It has been well said, "Our race was made for conscious fellowship with God, for Sonship, for the life of the Spirit. And it is just in this department that its failure has been most conspicuous. It is here that the divine Spirit has found his chiefest disappointment."

Passing over Old Testament times, we find in the New Testament the fullness of the dispensation of the Spirit. After his resurrection Jesus breathed on his disciples and said to them, "Receive ye the Holy Spirit; as the Father hath sent me so send I you." He promised them the Spirit as Monitor and Teacher and Guide and Comforter. Among his last words with them were these: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem till ye be endued with power from on high." And again: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in Judæa and in Samaria and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The missionary work of the apostles may be said to have begun on the day of Pentecost, as recorded in the second chapter of Acts. In this first preaching after the ascension of our Savior the apostles spoke "as the Spirit gave them utterance." The Spirit guided Philip so that he preached to the eunuch and baptized him (Acts 8). Under the guidance of the Spirit Barnabas and Paul were sent out (Acts 13), and in many a Scripture Paul acknowledges the influence of the Spirit as his Guide and Helper and Comforter.

The giving of the gospel to the Gentiles and their admission to the church on grounds of equality with the Jews simply through faith and baptism was a leading and disturbing question of the apostolic days. Under the guidance of the Spirit the apostles conquered their Jewish antipathy and admitted the Gentiles upon the new spiritual basis, not imposing upon them their old and carnal ordinances. It was the Spirit that led Peter to the home of Cornelius, and guided his preaching, and "fell upon" the hearers, and led to their admission without circumcision. Thus the way was opened to a world-wide proclamation of the gospel, regardless of the time-worn customs and ancient codes and cults. Otherwise, it could never have become universally applicable and acceptable.

The Holy Spirit was the genius of the apostolic church. He made it cosmopolitan and he made it missionary. The apostles had no written word by which they could be guided in the founding and the furthering of the first church. Under the lead of the Spirit they did the work, and the record of it has "leaped to light."

Those who look thoughtfully upon the work of missions to-day must feel that the Holy Spirit has given the impulse and is acting as the guide of them. This is indicated in several ways, some of which only can be suggested here.

1. The wonderful ways in which the old closed nations have been thrown open to missionary enterprises.

2. The uprising of great multitudes of believers in organized ways to answer the modern Macedonian calls.

3. The cardinal place accorded to the Bible, and especially the New Testament, in all Protestant missionary movements.

4. The evident aim almost if not quite universally to exalt Christ and to gloryify him in the eyes of men and nations.

5. The blessings that have attended the work.

Myriads of souls have been redeemed and thousands of churches and schools have been established, and many asylums and hospitals are being supported, and whole nations have been transformed, and from the missionary sowing there have been marvelous seasons of reaping, even rivaling that of the first great Pentecost.

Upon all these points our readings will give help, and we trust that our students will be constrained to feel that the Holy Spirit is inciting us to and guiding us in this mighty movement.

Literature.

LIFE AND TEACHINGS OF JESUS. By Herbert L. Willett.

SKETCHES OF OUR PIONEERS. By Frederick D. Power.

MISSIONARY FIELDS AND FORCES OF THE DISCIPLES. By William J. Lhamon.

We have received from the publisher, Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, copies of a new edition of these handbooks of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses and take this opportunity of giving renewed commendation to the Reading Courses as a whole and specifically to these meaty little volumes, which are the text-books for the second year of the study. No association of young people, which aims at the development of the higher life among them, is complete without a prominent educational feature. To the religious enthusiasm and spiritual culture for which Christian Endeavor has always stood must be added a means of instructing these same enthusiastic young people in those subjects which are most vitally connected with their religious interests. It is of comparatively little value for them to "read the Bible every day," in accordance with their pledge, if they are not making a serious and systematic study of any portion of the Bible. It is useless to expect missionary enthusiasm to be maintained at high and steady pressure without instruction in the facts pertaining to missionary fields and forces. The Endeavorer will try in vain to fulfill intelligently that clause of the pledge in which he promises "to be loyal to my own church" if he does not know what it is or why it exists. Consequently, the work of the three sections of the Bethany Reading Circle, viz., Bible study, missions and the Disciples, is work that must be done if C. E. enthusiasm is to be anything more than froth and idle vaporing. We do not say that it must be done through this reading circle, but we do say that no other means of doing the work has been devised which is as practical, as simple and as efficient as the Bethany Reading Circle. What University Extension is to the multitude who desire general education of a university grade but cannot leave their occupations to seek it in the educational centers, that the Reading Circle is to those who, with a minimum of interruption of their ordinary duties, desire to give to their religious enthusiasm a solid basis in intelligent information.

The volumes named above are the volumes which were used last year in the regular course. They may also be used during the present year by any who so desire, and due credit toward the diploma of the Reading Circle will be given to all who pass the prescribed examinations. The books themselves are already too well known to need further commendation. The "Life and Teachings of Jesus," by Dr. Willett, is in our judgment the most scholarly, comprehensive and satisfactory book of its limited size on that subject. "Sketches of Our Pioneers," by F. D. Power, makes available in the form of biography much that is important material for the history of the Disciples. W. J. Lhamon's "Missionary Fields and Forces," gives an epitomized statement of the present condition of our several mission stations, the various missionary agencies which are operating for their support and the principal heathen religions which our missionaries are called upon to meet. The rigid limitations of space are responsible for a degree of condensation which to some extent impairs the readableness of the books, and also crowds out much matter which should find a place in even the most elementary handbook.

The volumes, together with full information concerning the reading courses, may be obtained by addressing J. Z. Tyler, 798 Republic St., Cleveland, O. Single copies, 35 cents; the set of three, $1.00. Now is the time of year for forming local reading circles.

MAGAZINES.

The New Crusade for November is unusually interesting. The leading article, "Christmas Gifts for the Children to Make," not only gives direction for the making of simple gifts for the children, but suggests the best way of developing the true Christmas spirit of unselfishness and love in the little ones. (Ann Arbor, Mich. Single copy 10 cents. $1.00 per year.)

The Treasury of Religious Thought for November, 1899, begins the second half year of its seventeenth volume, and looks forward to several valuable and new features. Arrangement has been made for a series of papers on Palestine, enriched with fresh photographic illustrations, which will give its readers information of the new and important discoveries which light up and confirm the Bible narrative. These papers are from the notes of Mr. T. J. Alley, who has resided in the Holy Land for nearly ten years, and will appear in alternate months for a year to come. The present number contains one of Rev. Dr. Gregg's Palestine sermons, and will be welcomed by his many interested readers.

Mr. Frederick W. Holls, who did so much at The Hague to give credit and effect to the work of the American delegation at the Peace Conference last summer, contributes to the American Monthly Review of Reviews for November a carefully prepared paper on "The Results of the Peace Conference in Their Relation to the Monroe Doctrine." Mr. Holls clearly shows that the declaration of the American commissioners on July 25 was the most emphatic expression of the Monroe Doctrine ever made before the representatives of the great powers. He also shows the groundlessness of the fears expressed in certain quarters as to the danger to American interests likely to result from our participation in the conference.

The St. Nicholas magazine has planned a splendid program of art, literature and fun for the young folks for 1900. There will be ten long stories, by Ruth McEnery Stuart, Mary Mapes Dodge, Elizabeth B. Custer and other and other writers. Each complete in one number. A serial story by the author of "Master Skylark," a tale of Old New York; a serial story by the author of "Denise and Ned Toodles," a capital story for girls; a serial story of athletics; a serial story for little children; stories of railroad life; an important historical serial of colonial life in America by Elbridge S. Brooks, etc. Theodore Roosevelt will contribute a paper on "What America Expects of Her Boys;" Ian Maclaren, John Burroughs and many other well known writers will contribute; Nature and Science for Young Folks will soon be begun as a new department; fun and frolic, both in rhyme, stories, pictures and puzzles, will be, as always, a striking characteristic of St. Nicholas. Everything illustrated. A free sample copy on request.

The Youth's Companion Calendar for 1900 is unique in form and beautiful in design. The oval centerpiece, in high colors and enclosed in a border of flowers, represents "A Dream of Summer," and is supported on either side by an admirably executed figure piece in delicate tints. The whole is delightful in sentiment and in general effect. Larger than any of the Companion's previous calendars, it is equally acceptable as a work of art. As an ornament to the home it will take a pre-eminent place. The Calendar is published exclusively by the Companion. It cannot be obtained elsewhere. It will be given to all new subscribers for 1900, who will also receive in addition to the fifty-two issues of the new volume all the issues of the remaining weeks of 1899, free from the time of subscription. Illustrated Announcement Number, containing full prospectus of the volume of 1900, will be sent free to any address. The Youth's Companion, 203 Columbus Avenue, Boston, Mass.

Publishers' Notes.

DR. D. R. DUNGAN'S NEW BOOK.

The author of the well known book, "On the Rock," has just completed a new book which is entitled, "Moses, the Man of God." This book has been put on the market by the Christian Publishing Co., during the last few days. It is a book of 301 pages, neatly bound in cloth and printed on good paper and clear type. Dr. Dungan's knowledge of the Bible and history enables him to produce a work worthy of the attention of those who delight in the study of Old Testament characters. The book is a study of a grand life and the lessons to be gained therefrom. The price is $1.00, postpaid.

The following is what L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., has to say concerning "Frequency of the Lord's Supper," the new book just from the pen of N. J. Aylsworth: "I have read with great delight and profit this little book which has just been put on the market by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. Bro. Aylsworth is one of our clearest thinkers as well as one of our most spiritual men. His book is unanswerable and masterly. Every member of the church ought to read a copy of this book. The author has been an invalid for nearly a score of years and in these years of affliction his spirituality has greatly multiplied. The book is the result of the best thought of his clear brain."

CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A report is widely current that the United States Government has asked the several powers which have "spheres of influence" in China to give written guarantees that they will maintain the "open door" so far as American trade is concerned. Such a request as this can only be based on the expectation that the influence of the European nations in China will soon develop into a definitely recognized authority, perhaps the actual partition of the empire. So the government is said to be asking the future possessors of China to remember and respect our commercial treaties with that passing empire when they come into their inheritance. Whether or not this report is true, it ought to be. The breaking up of China is an event still future, but no longer doubtful. At present we have every facility of free trade with China. What facilities we shall have when Russia, Germany, France and Great Britain have foreclosed their mortgages on that empire depends on the steps which we take now. The trade itself must be built up, and that is being done with surprising rapidity, and we must have the assurance that the new rules of China will not interfere with that trade by hostile legislation and discriminating tariffs. The statistics show that our export trade to China is already large, about $40,000,000 a year, and now is the time to secure its future. The possession of the Philippines will offset any disadvantage which we might suffer on account of our failure to share in the partition of Chinese territory. The laying of a Pacific cable will go far toward balancing Russia's trans-Siberian railway, and our possession of a water route from our western ports to China, direct and reasonably short as compared with that from England, Germany or Russia, gives us a commercial advantage which it is difficult to estimate. With the Hawaiian Islands and our recently acquired Samoan island dividing the route across the Pacific into three fairly equal stages, and with the prospect of a Nicaragua canal, which will furnish a direct all-water route from New York and Galveston, as well as from San Francisco and Portland, our hold upon a far Eastern trade will be one of incomparable strength. What remains to be done is to make the canal a reality, and to gain definite assurance that the trade which we are building up will not be cut off by the operation of a "closed-door" policy when the powers of Europe become the powers of the East.

Another step has been taken toward the inevitable separation of Norway and Sweden. The Norwegian Parliament has passed over the king's veto a resolution sanctioning the use of the old Norwegian flag in place of the composite which was introduced in 1844. The union of the two kingdoms dates from the overthrow of Napoleon in 1814. For three centuries prior to that time Norway and Denmark had constituted a single kingdom. The union of Norway and Sweden left to each its own constitution, Parliament and Cabinet for the administration of internal affairs, but they have one king, one minister of foreign affairs and one consular system. But in this dual kingdom Sweden outranks Norway. The king resides at Stockholm and the minister of foreign affairs is usually a Swede. The Norwegians feel the situation as virtually one of dependence upon Sweden, and only the tact of the present king, Oscar II., has prevented more decided demonstrations of dissatisfaction. The present liberal party in Norway makes no open declaration against the single kingship, but demands "independence" in the administration of Norwegian foreign affairs. This would make the crown absolutely the only bond of union between the two nations and might place the king in a highly embarrassing position in case his two governments should take opposite sides in some matter of foreign policy. King Oscar may be relied upon to resist any movement toward separation, even as he has resisted this flag act, and if the Norwegian desire for independence is opposed by him too persistently, it is not improbable that he may find some morning that Norway has repudiated his sovereignty as well as the joint consular system and minister of foreign affairs.

The case of the dual empire of Austria-Hungary is analogous to that of the dual kingdom of Norway and Sweden, but much more complex. When the present emperor, Francis Joseph, came to the throne, in 1848, the house of Hapsburg numbered among its subjects four distinct nationalities: Germans with their center at Viena, Hungarians centering in Buda-Pesth, Czechs or Bohemians (Slavs) about Prague, and the Italians of Lombardy and Venice. His reign was ushered in by a formidable but futile revolt of each of these elements. The division of the conglomerate empire into four kingdoms seemed imminent. In 1866 Italy, reunited and led by Victor Emmanuel, won from Austria her territory south of the Alps. There were now but three elements to be united: German, Hungarian and Czech. In the next year the Hungarians became dangerously dissatisfied and, to pacify them, the empire was divided into two co-ordinate parts with separate legislatures and constitutions, but a single sovereign. Francis Joseph is Emperor of Austria at Vienna and king at Buda-Pesth. The Czech element of the now dual empire was still unrecognized in the organization of the government and in the dissatisfaction of the Czechs or Bohemians lies the present menace to the empire. What they really want is that the dual empire shall become triple, that the arrangement which has been made in favor of the Hungarians shall be repeated with them. The question of language has of recent years been the occasion of the most bitter hostility between the Germans and the Czechs. Some years ago the latter secured official recognition for their language as the language of the courts in the Bohemian districts. Continued opposition to this by the Germans has within the last few weeks brought about a repeal of this "language ordinance" and the re-establishment of German as the official language. If the question of language were all, some sort of compromise might be patched up, but this is merely an episode in the unbroken hostility of two jealous nations, which are under one government, but which do not assimilate with each other. It is doubtful whether any possible solution of the difficulty exists short of the most radical measures. The Germans are the minority; they cannot make the whole body German. The Czechs are a less advanced type and will never be permitted to dominate the whole. Since the two cannot mix and neither can rule, why should not each govern itself separately, as Hungary governs itself? Perhaps the solution will never be found until the empire of Austria-Hungary becomes the empire of Austria-Hungary-Bohemia.

News more or less authentic is beginning to come again from the seat of the war in South Africa. The reports recently received are, in the main, encouraging to British sympathizers. There is probably true report of a severe attack on Ladysmith, in which the British succeeded in repulsing their assailants with a heavy loss to the latter. There is little doubt, too, but that an attack has been made by the Boers upon Estcourt, the first town south of Colenso on the railroad, and, with the exception of Ladysmith, the most northerly point held by the British in Natal, and that this attack was a complete failure. But the very fact of an attack upon Estcourt is unpleasantly significant. It indicates unmistakably that the Boers are massing their forces south of Colenso and are pushing on southward along the railway toward Pietermaritzburg. If it be true that Gen. Joubert is advancing along the railroad with ten thousand men, then there will be fighting soon on a larger scale than has yet been seen, when the Boer advance meets the British reinforcements. The capture of a British armored train which was being sent from Estcourt to the relief of Ladysmith was the most serious loss the British have had since the capture of the mountain battery and the Dublin fusileers. The holding out of Ladysmith, Mafeking and Kimberley and the reasonably slow advance of the Boers toward Pietermaritzburg is as good news as British sympathizers can look for. It is not a question of defeating or even very seriously checking the Boers with the force now in the field, but only of holding out till the reinforcements arrive. Up to the present time the Boers have overrun about half of Natal, have siezed and retained fully half of the railroad from Newcastle, on the Transvaal border, to Durban on the coast, and have advanced through Orange Free State well into Cape Colony. The situation is still serious, but every week which passes without news of any great change in the situation increases the certainty of ultimate British success.

The wily Aguinaldo has again slipped through the lines and lost himself from his pursuers just as the trap was about to fall upon him. In the language of the war poet, the "swart Tagal" continues to "slink through the seething fens." During the past three weeks Generals Wheaton, Lawton and MacArthur have been executing a military plan which, in its scope, subtlety and expected results, was more pretentious than anything yet attempted in the Philippines. It involved the cooperation of the navy and the two columns of troops to hem in the insurgent forces in the north. The only thing which prevented it from being an entire success was the surreptitious and untimely departure of Aguinaldo for the mountains just as he and his army and his Congress were about to be surrounded. The army has scattered itself and is now playing hide-and-seek among the hills. Nevertheless, the campaign has by no means been lost, for a considerable amount of new territory has been occupied and the captured towns have been garrisoned and held.

Many protests are being filed against the acceptance of the Island of Sulu as United States territory without immediately suppressing polygamy and slavery among its Mohammedan inhabitants. Pres. Schurman says that the attempt to abolish these practices at once would result in the bloodiest kind of a war. There is no question but that the Constitution of the United States distinctly says in its thirteenth amendment that slavery shall not exist "in the United States or in any place subject to their jurisdiction." But it is also true that the authors of this amendment, lacking omniscience, could not possibly foresee the present case or one like it. It took God a long time to teach the Hebrew people to abandon polygamy and slavery. His method was a gradual one, and that, too, although Israel at the earliest period known to us was much nearer to a civilized condition than Sulu is to-day. His method was one of slow development, and we doubt whether even the American Congress can improve upon it. If the course of God's dealings with Israel teaches us anything it teaches that even divine omnipotence is limited by the crudity and imperfect plasticity of the human material upon which he worked, and it can scarcely be maintained that the very finite power of human legislation can transcend this limitation. We must treat the Sulus as Sulus if we are going to lead them toward a higher civilization. The case of Mr. Roberts, the polygamist, from Utah, who seeks admission to the United States Congress, is entirely different. Utah is a civilized community—at least it is supposed to be. It is upon that hypothesis that it secured admission to the Union as a state. If it is to retain its position as a state in the Union it must submit to be judged by civilized standards, one of which excludes polygamy. It is as intolerable to allow the institutions of barbarism to be restored in civilized society as it is impossible to impose the institutions of civilization at once upon barbarians. It is not necessarily inconsistent for the same government to permit a practice in Sulu which it forbids in Utah. Small children often think they discern inconsistency in the parental government when they are forced to go to bed at eight o'clock while their older brothers sit up till ten. They generally learn by the time they arrive at maturity that parental discipline must accommodate itself to the varying needs of various members of the family.

Mr. Grant Allen, who died recently in England, had a varied career in literature, and by his versatility and force won a rather remarkable place among contemporary writers. His university course was followed by a few years spent as professor of classics, and then, when almost thirty, he began to write seriously and continuously. A hundred articles were refused before one was finally accepted. During the remaining twenty years of his life his writing was prolific, ceaseless and varied. His first accepted production was a popular scientific article. In addition to much work in this field, he wrote on history, art, archæology, theology, philosophy, sociology. His revolutionary ethical and social ideas were embodied in fiction, which was never without a certain strength, however faulty it might be in other respects. He himself considered "The Woman Who Did" his most perfect work. People who attribute any value to the conventional code of social morality looked upon it with the greatest abhorrence. No person of unclouded judgment will care to deny that Mr. Grant Allen was a sincere and earnest advocate of ideas which, however revolutionary, he believed to be conducive to the advancement of civilization, but to say, with Richard Le Gallienne, that he was "perhaps the truest and certainly the most influential Christian in modern English letters," is to err absurdly, grotesquely. He would himself have repudiated the name "Christian" as an imputation of superstition. It was not that Mr. Allen objected to the dogmas of orthodoxy and wished to substitute others for them. It was not that he favored a non-dogmatic religion of trust and hope and brotherly love. It was rather that the whole conception of religion was foreign to him. There was no reaching out toward an unknown "something" which might feed and sustain the soul. There was no sense of need or dependence. On the contrary, there was a calm and determined self-sufficiency. As he himself said, he rested upon his own philosophy as furnishing complete satisfaction to his soul and a complete solution to the problems of life. Grant Allen voiced one phase of the doubt of our age, and is, therefore, not without significance in modern religious thought. But when his doubting passed into the certainty of negation, when his opposition to dogmatic religion took the form of dogmatic irreligion he ceased to represent anything very vital in the thought of our time. This may be an age of doubt, but it is not an age of Positivism, and Mr. Grant Allen and his panegyrist, Mr. Frederic Harrison, are alike out of touch with the real situation.

The following statistics in regard to American colleges and universities, as given in the Saturday Evening Post, are worthy of a careful reading, not for the satisfaction of that idle curiosity which may be called the statistical mania, but as affording a conception of the magnitude to which our educational institutions have grown on their purely material side, their greatness by reason of the capital invested and the number of people interested in them: "In the 472 universities and colleges of the United States the 11,000 male and 1,600 female professors and instructors are now deep in the work of getting the 118,000 male and the 40,000 female students in the systematic processes of study. The students pay between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 in tuition fees, and the institutions they attend get in addition to this amount about $4,500,000 from productive funds and nearly $4,000,000 from national, state and municipal appropriations. All these institutions represent investments of one kind and another that exceed $300,000,000. This, in a measure, is the financial showing of the universities and colleges of the country. Not only have their numbers wonderfully increased, but the larger institutions have enjoyed a growth in attendance beyond all expectations. For instance, Harvard, which is the largest of all, has nearly 4,000 students, a number that in itself is as large as the population of a small city. In the total of attendance the University of Michigan comes second, with about 3,300; then the University of Minnesota has over 3,000; the University of Pennsylvania has nearly 3,000; Yale has about 2,500; Columbia has a few hundred less, and the Northwestern University has just over 2,000, the College of the City of New York nearly equaling that figure, and Cornell having only a few dozen less, or nearly 1,900. Some of the best known universities have less, Princeton, for instance, the last figures claiming less than 1,200, and Johns Hopkins University less than 700. According to the figures, which are those of the Bureau of Education at Washington, about one person in 470 of our population attends a college. Of course there are a great many who have already attended colleges and graduated, so that the number of college people interested in the institutions which are growing so significantly in the land of the free and the home of the brave may be put beyond the million mark."

American products seem to be gaining more rapidly in favor in China than those of any other nation. The Annual Report of the Inspector General of Customs, of China, covering the year 1898, just received by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows an increase of nearly 40 per cent. in imports into China from the United States, while the increase in total is less than 5 per cent. The principal imports into China from the United States are cotton goods, kerosene oil, flour, provisions, railway material and engines, manufactures of iron and steel, manufactures of wood and manufactured tobacco.

DR. ABBOTT BEFORE THE UNIVERSALISTS.

That was a very suggstive and interesting address delivered by Lyman Abbott before the Universalists' General Convention in Boston recently. It is a significant sign of the times when a representative of one religious body can deliver a fraternal discourse before another showing why he cannot accept their creed. This could not have been done even a quarter of a century ago, perhaps. The theme of Dr. Abbott's address was, "Why I am not a Universalist." Some of the sentiments in that address seem to us to be of sufficient importance to justify us in reproducing them here.

Beginning with the frank statement that modern Congregationalism—and he might have added, modern evangelical thought—does not accept the doctrine of eternal punishment as it was preached by Jonathan Edwards, or even by Charles G. Finney, he proceeds to state what was the Calvinistic doctrine, on this subject, as expressed by the Savoy and Westminster Confession of Faith. Our readers know about what these confessions of faith teach on the subject in question concerning foreordination and predestination unto everlasting death. Concerning this doctrine Dr. Abbott says:

Specifically, and clause by clause, I disown that statement. I do not accept it "for substance of doctrine." I do not believe that the guilt of Adam and Eve was imputed, or that their sinful and corrupt nature was conveyed to their posterity. I do not believe that we are "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all good." I do not believe that some men are foreordained to everlasting death. I do not believe that it has pleased God to pass any by and ordain them to dishonor and wrath. Least of all do I believe that men, strive however much they may, cannot be saved unless they have something more than the call of the ministry of the Word and "the common operations of God's Spirit." This doctrine is inconsistent with the character of a righteous God. I might fear such a God; I might, because I was a coward, obey such a God; but I could not reverence such a God. It is inconsistent with the faith that Jesus Christ is God manifest in the flesh, for it was not his nature to pass any by or to ordain any to dishonor and wrath. It is inconsistent with the Scripture; inconsistent with the parable of the prodigal son, which is Christ's epitome of the gospel; inconsistent with the declaration of Paul, that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess Jesus Christ to be the Lord, to the glory of God the Father;" inconsistent with the very chapters of Romans on which it is supposed to be founded, for they close with the declaration that "God hath concluded all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all;" inconsistent with the splendid picture John paints, of the time when every creature that is in heaven and on the earth, and such as are in the sea, shall give praise and glory to the God of their salvation. This doctrine of the particular choice of some to glory and virtue, and the predetermined choice of others to wrath and dishonor, I disown as unphilosophical, antagonistic to the instincts of justice in humanity, paralyzing to Christian activity, dishonoring to God, unethical, unscriptural, irreverent and untrue.

"And yet," Dr. Abbott adds, "I am not a Universalist." He then proceeds to tell why he is not. The gist of it is that he finds himself able to choose between the evil and the good, and that what is true concerning himself he believes to be true concerning others. In other words, he believes in human freedom and the power of choice. While he "wistfully desires," and "sometimes devoutly hopes," that "when the great drama of life here and hereafter is ended, all God's creatures will have chosen the good"—he does not "know." "If I were a Calvinist, I should be a Universalist. If I believed that God could make all men righteous, I should be sure that He would make all men righteous." But man has an essential part to play in the matter of his salvation. "Father may persuade, mother may entice, influences may environ, God himself may surround with all possible persuasions, but in the last analysis the destiny of every man is in his own hands." This is why Dr. Abbott does not know that all men will be saved, and it is exactly why no man knows that all men will be saved.

But this brings up the old question as to why God did not make a world in which there is no sin. Dr. Abbott says He could. "The birds are sinless. But he could not make a world in which are free moral agents, able to choose the good, without giving them at the same time power to choose the evil. Power to choose one is power to choose the other; and a world in which there are some men who choose shame, dishonor, sin and death, is a better world than a world made of machines which can choose neither the good nor the the evil." In answer to the question as to whether he does not believe in the omnipotence of God, Dr. Abbott answers that "it depends upon what we mean by omnipotence." "I do not believe that God can compel a free moral agent to be virtuous, because he would then cease to be a free moral agent, and would then cease to be virtuous. Omnipotence cannot make men virtuous against their will, because virtue consists in the free choice of righteousness of a will which is not coerced." Dr. Abbott is strong here where a great many theologians have been weak. He recognizes the regnancy of the human will just as Jesus recognized it when He said, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." Both Universalism and Calvinism ignore the freedom of the will in their theological conclusions. As Dr. Abbott well says, "The question is not, Will a merciful God save all men from suffering? It is, Can he save all men from sin? For salvation is character; redemption is righteousness."

Dr. Abbott declares that "the battle for liberty has been fought and won in the denomination which I am unofficially representing here to-night." "Congregationalists would not, however," he says, "ordain to the ministry any man who disbelieved in the solemn sanction and in the inviolability of God's law, nor any man who thought that there was any other escape from penalty than repentance from sin and the loyal acceptance of God's law manifested by obedience in daily life. But any man who believes that the law of God is inviolable, that punishment follows its infraction, that remedy follows repentance and never follows nor can follow without repentance, and that this remedy is revealed in and through Jesus Christ, will receive ordination, though he believe, as some Congregationalists do, that some men will never repent and will live in sin and misery fovever; or, as some other Congregationalists, that some men will never repent and will therefore cease to exist; or, as still some other Congregationalists do, that under the persuasions of the Almighty God all men will at last repent, and through the door of repentance be brought back to holiness and happiness and God; or, as I think the majority of Congregationalists do to-day, decline to be dogmatic on that question altogether. The Congregationalist Church, thank God, is large enough for them all."

In other words, Congregationalists have reached the point when they refuse to make that a condition of fellowship which the Scriptures do not make a test of fellowship. They are ready to speak where the Scriptures speak, on this subject, and are willing to be silent where they are silent, on the awful problem of the destiny of untold millions of the human race. It will be interesting for our Congregational brethren to know that this is the historic position of the Disciples of Christ on this question. One of the veteran preachers of this Reformation came into our ranks from the Universalists without being required to renounce his opinion that all men ultimately would be brought to repentance and to salvation. He was simply asked not to use that opinion in a way that would destroy the peace and unity of the church. No other attitude toward this subject would be in harmony with our fundamental position, that faith in Jesus Christ and obedience to Him are the only tests of Christian fellowship.

THE WINTER'S WORK.

What is your church going to do during the coming winter? Whatever else it may undertake, it should plan for, and carry out, some systematic study of the Bible and of other religious works designed to help to a better understanding of the Bible. This, it seems to us, is a necessary preparation for success in any spiritual work which the church may undertake. An increase of knowledge among our membership, not only of the Scriptures, but of the religious work and thought of the present times, is greatly to be desired as a means of spiritual culture and of successful work.

Many of our churches have adopted the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses and have found them to be very profitable. The chief trouble seems to be that even in the churches or Endeavor Societies where these reading courses have been adopted there is not a sufficiently large per cent. of the membership enrolled and participating to yield the best results, and there are many Endeavor Societies and churches which have not adopted these or any other reading courses and have no systematic study going on. We would like to urge upon the churches and Endeavor Societies generally, and even upon individuals where there are no churches or Endeavor Societies, the importance of taking up the three lines of reading and study pursued in these courses.

In the first place, this is more likely to become a uniform course of reading than any other, since it has received the sanction of our National Convention. The Springfield Convention, in 1896, recommended that "this convention approve the idea of adding within certain limits the educational feature to the Christian Endeavor Societies among us. This added educational feature shall include helps for the systematic re ading of the Bible, a selected course of reading concerning missions in general, and our own missions in particular, and thorough instruction as to the origin, the principles and the history of our own movement for the restoration of New Testament Christianity." It also recommended "that this convention approve of the purpose to provide a series of handbooks for our young people covering the fields not already satisfactorily covered."
